The Annual Minnesota Campmeeting will be held at Kasota, beginning June 27, and closing Sunday eve., July 2. Kasota is a station on the St. Paul and Sioux city R. R., about three miles above St. Peter. The Winona and St. Peter R. R., also (which is just completed) runs within half a mile of the campground, making this point most convenient for a general gathering from the different parts of the State.

MINNESOTA CAMP MEETING.

Friends in the south and western parts of the State will have no inconvenience in changing cars or staging, as heretofore, and those coming from the Northern part will have but a few more miles to travel.

We trust that the liberal arrangements that we have made with the railroad companies will induce our brethren to make a grand rally and come to this meeting in such numbers as will show to the world that we are in earnest in our work of preparing a people for our soon-coming King. We have but a little while to work; now is the time to toil and sacrifice in this good cause; the resting time will soon be here, when our labors will cease.

In regard to tent accommodations we would say that the State tent will be pitched, and arrangements made to give home in it to those not otherwise provided for; but we trust that those living in the vicinity, and all others that can, will erect family tents of cotton cloth or lumber. Those coming in wagons can make a roof with a few yards of cotton, and secure a very comfortable sleeping place in that way. Let all begin immediately to make their preparations to attend, and come with hearts warm in the Savior's love, ready to work for the salvation of perishing men.

HALF FARE RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

Persons going to the meeting on the Winona and St. Peter R. R. will ask for excursion tickets to the Advent camp-meeting at Kasota, for which they will pay full fare and it will return them free.

Those going on the St. Paul and Sioux City R. R. will buy tickets for Advent camp-meeting at Kasota, for which they will pay full fare, but be sure and ask for a return ticket, which will be granted free.

Tickets on both roads will be good from Saturday, June 24, to Wednesday, July 5, inclusive.

Board will be furnished at reasonable rates for those who may desire it; but all that can are requested to come prepared to board themselves, and let all come provided with bedding, and those having no tents will be furnished with lodging in the State tent.

A grocery and refreshment stand will be kept for the accommodation of the camp; also feed for horses.

Arrangements have been made for extra trains on Sunday, July 2, from Mankato and St. Peter.

We anticipate the largest gathering of Adventists ever held in the State of Minnesota, and shall welcome saint and sinner to this our annual feast, trusting all will pray that it may result in much good.

EDWIN T HIMES,
Chairman of Committee.

P. S.—For further particulars address me at Winona, Minn. Box 734. There will be services on the ground Sunday, June 25.

MINNESOTA CONFERENCE.

The Q. M. of the St. Paul District, which was held at Cottage Grove, May 26-28, was a season of special interest. The congregation filled the house full on Saturday, and on Sunday a large number were obliged to sit about the door and windows. The little church at this place were cheered by the presence and prayers, songs and exhortations of the friends that gathered in from Prescott and Trimbell, Wis., and Hastings, Castle Rock, Pine Bend, West St. Paul, and vicinity. Encouraging reports were given concerning the state of the cause. Two years ago such a gathering could not have been called together in all this region, but during that time a steady work has been going on, and the result of past labor stimulates us with courage to continue sowing the seed of truth. The people were some disappointed in not seeing more preachers present. Sr. Duley and the Secretary addressed the people on the distinctive features of our faith and hope. Three were immersed, and a goodly number celebrated the Lord's Supper as the meeting adjourned.

E. T. HIMES, Sec'y.

MICHIGAN.

The Annual Campmeeting of the Michigan Conference will be held at Jackson, on the Fair Grounds, commencing Monday June 19, and will continue over the following Sunday.

Ministers and delegates are requested to come early and remain throughout the meeting. Let the churches see to appointing delegates at once.

Board will be provided on the ground at twenty-five cents a meal. Those who wish to board themselves will find a good opportunity for so doing.

To ministers the board will be half price, or free, according to their circumstances.

Hay and oats for horses at market prices. The use of fine covered stalls for horses and carriages or wagons, FREE.

The buildings on the Fair Ground will doubtless afford ample accommodations for sleeping rooms for all who attend. If any prefer to do so, they can bring tents.

The grounds are close to the business part of the city, and convenient to the depot. There is no finer location for a campmeeting in the country. We hope for a feast of fat things, a feast with wines on the lees, well refined. We expect the presence of the Holy Spirit, with all its influences for love, joy and peace. Come and receive a blessing, and new strength.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 13, 1871.

TERMS: { Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Joshua V. Himes, PRESIDENT; Wm. Sheldon, VICE PRESIDENT; D R Mansfield, TREASURER; O. S. Knapp, AUDITOR; Wm. L. Himes, SECRETARY; F. Burr, O. R. Fassett, and A. S. Calkins, PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

Joshua V. Himes, Business Agent,
To whom all communications should be addressed.

Business Agent's Department.

Away from Home.

Both the Editor and his assistant have been away from home most of the time for three weeks past attending Conferences and Camp Meetings. They will also be away during the next two weeks. This explanation will account for lack of editorial labor, and for the delay in some matters of personal and other business. Correspondents will please excuse delay, and readers pardon shortcomings and oversights.

A Card.

It was my good fortune, in returning from the Indiana Conference, to fall into the hands of conductor Davidson, on the O & M. R. R., both going and returning, whose urbanity of manners and gentlemanly deportment elicited praise from our entire delegation. It was Resolved that we publicly express to conductor E. Davidson our thanks for his pleasant intercourse and kind attentions to us, and all the passengers on the train; and we would recommend his train to our brethren and the traveling public.

How to do Good.

We will send THE TIMES, post-paid, on trial, for three months to any address in the United States or Canada, for thirty-five cents. We make this offer to enable every one to introduce Scriptural views of the second advent and related doctrine to their friends and neighbors. If received weekly and candidly read in any family for three months, THE TIMES cannot fail to make an impression in favor of the truth it teaches. A goodly number have already been converted by its influence. To those who wish to procure or send to their friends the paper, on this plan for trial, we offer the following terms: One copy three months, 35c. Three copies (may be to different addresses), $1. Eight copies, $2.

N. B.—These figures are special, and are for three months only. After that time the usual terms must be paid, which are as reasonable as could be desired. The low terms for three months are afforded solely on the ground of getting the doctrine we teach before those we could not otherwise reach.

Obituary.

McLANE.—Died in New York City, April 8, James W., son of Br. and Sr. McLane.

James was a moral young man, and before his death became entirely resigned to the divine will, giving evidence of a change of heart, which was a great relief to his friends, who mourn not as those without hope. The rooms were crowded with sympathizing friends, who were addressed by the writer from Luke 23: 42.

The Times.

AT HOME.

The Advance says of our national politics: Things are getting into a bad way in this country as regards the working of free government, and Europe will be in no haste to copy our institutions, unless we better their working. If democracy means corruption, and republicanism means a universal suffrage, including the most ignorant, characterless and irresponsible part of the population, the national experiment will be short-lived.... Our legislation is tainted on all sides with corruption, and good men are more and more sick of politics, and hopeless of a reformation. And even our highest courts are falling into sad disrepute: as witness the opinions every where expressed concerning the late reversal by the Supreme Court of the United States, of its decision only a year old, on the bearing of the "legal tender" act upon contracts made prior to its passage. Two men of known opinions, having acted as legal counsel on this very matter, are put on the bench, to make a majority of one in opposition to the morally honest and politically expedient decision which has just been rendered, and the people are expected to reverence the judiciary. Is a packed bench better than a packed jury-room?

ABROAD.

War Predicted.

A private letter from an alleged trustworthy source in Berlin says: "Moreover you may be interested in knowing that the National party in Russia is urging the Czar to a war against Austria in order to prepare the way to Constantinople by weakening the Hapsburgs. Whether the Czar will allow himself to be led into this adventure is difficult to predict; however, the temptation is very great. Germany would remain neutral, and France would hardly be in a position to do much. Still, it would always be a great venture, greater from the fact that the Russian army will require several years to complete its new organization.

The N. Y. Tribune says of Eastern affairs: "The delicate attentions which the Sultan has been paying to the Czar, in conferring on him and his Ministers an Imperial order of the Ottomans, must have a strangely suspicious look to the powers which lately discussed a settlement of the Black Sea question in order to prevent the two sovereigns from rushing headlong into war. They will hardly regard it as servile flattery dictated by the Sultan's fears; and will never suspect that the gifts are those of genuine good will. The painful truth will probably dawn upon them in time, and they will then comprehend what a mockery their Conference at London was rendered by the complete understanding arrived at between Turkey, Prussia and Russia, before the Conference met."

London.

The population of London is reported to be over three and a quarter millions, showing an increase of nearly half a million, or sixteen per cent, in ten years. These figures may occasion suprise to many, but the sanitary regulations are so rigidly enforced as to make the ratio of mortality smaller than that of any other European or American city. London contains nearly one-ninth of the entire population of the United Kingdom, and there are nearly half a million of people of the Metropolitan district who live on public charity. The sum annually paid for the relief of the poor amounts to $7,880,000, and it is shown that the receivers of alms have increased during the last decade, sixty-eight per cent faster than the whole population has grown.

France.

PARIS, June 8.—The Marquis Gallifet was assassinated, to-day, by the widow of one of the Communists who was shot by his order. In the Assembly to-day the motion for the prolongation of Thiers' term of office as Chief Executive, was postponed until after completion of the supplementary elections to the Assembly. It is authoritatively announced that Thiers favors the republic for the future government.—The Official Journal ascribes the insurrection to the congregation by Napoleon of 800,000 workmen in Paris.—Jules Mirale, the celebrated French banker, is dead.—In the Assembly, to day, the debate on the removal of the Orleans Princes, was resumed. The Committee reported in favor of abolishing the law of proscription, when Thiers rose and said he had opposed the abrogation of the law, because he believed such action would be dangerous. He only assented to the views of the committee on the Princes engaging not to sit in the Assembly and not to enter into any intrigue against the republic. The safety of the republic had been confided to him, and he should not betray the trust. The Assembly then voted to abrogate the law of proscription, by 484 yeas to 118 nays, and proceeded to declare valid the elections of the Duke D'Aumale and Prince de Joinville to seats in the Assembly, by a vote of 448 to 113.

Germany.

William of Germany is a direct descendant of the venerable Admiral Coligny, whose gray hairs were dabbled in his own blood at the massacre of St. Bartholomew. The following is the lineage of the Emperor William on the Coligny side: 1. Gaspard de Coligny, Comte Chatillon, murdered on St. Bartholomew's Night, August 24, 1572. 2. Louise de Coligny, Princess of Orange (wife of the Liberator of the Netherlands). 3. Frederick Henry of Orange, Governor of the Netherlands. 4. Louise Henrietta of Orange, Electress of Brandenburg and wife of the Elector Frederic, the first King of Prussia. 5. Frederic William I. 6. Prince Augustus William, brother of Frederic the Great. 7. Frederic William II. 8. Frederic William III. 9. Emperor William I.

BERLIN, June 8.—The Emperor of Russia and his son Alexis, with a brilliant staff, have arrived in Berlin. They were received at the station by the Emperor William and his staff, and escorted to the palace by the Imperial Guard.

Spain.

The young Savoyard who last Winter ascended the throne of Saint Ferdinand has just received a new proof of the devotion of his faithful subjects. Castelar has introduced into the Cortes a proposition to declare the Republic, and the advocates of divine right, unwilling to let the occasion pass without a demonstration, put on record once more their conviction that Don Carlos of Bourbon is the true and only King of Spain. In the mean time the Isabelino intrigues continue in spite of the pretended accession of many of the ex-Queen's former office holders to the present dispenser of orders and places. The united Republican and Carlist vote forms really a majority of the Spaniards. It is the impossibility of combining them which makes the lukewarm coalition of Serrano and the Progresistas possible. A throne standing on so frail a foundation is scarcely a reassuring seat, and Madrid—at all times the gloomiest of capitals—must be still more so to this gallant young sailor who is always bored on shore, and who finds in his morning journal only the imperfect distraction to be gathered from the proceedings of the Cortes, whose members discuss his disposition, and openly accuse each other of the murder of Prim.

China.

The mail accounts from China are most unsatisfactory in regard to the proclamation said to have been issued at Pekin regarding the propagation of Christianity. They cannot positively confirm the issuing of the edict, though they assume that it has been issued; stating that "good authority" vouches for its promulgation, and confining themselves to the cautious phrase—"if the reports from Pekin are to be believed." We are still inclined to doubt the official character of all the reported opposition to the Christians; and we regard the wholesale condemnation of Minister Low by the advocates of a war policy as an assault which later and more trustworthy news from the Chinese capital may very probably fail to justify.—Tribune.

Who is to Rule France?

This is a very interesting question. Some think Napoleon's chances improving. On the other hand the Bourbons have united on Henry, who, if he should attain the throne, would be the fifth of that name. The Bourbons have the advantage of possessing respectable moral characters, at least. But the Tribune says: "If France must undergo the humiliation of again voting herself a king, it is fortunate that she has the choice of princes who are personally so unobjectionable as those who are now forming the coalition to capture the crown. But it is too soon for the world yet to give France over to reaction. The present Republican Government is the only one that ever rescued Paris from a triumphant insurrection—the only one that has ever been sustained by the country against the capital. Let it have a chance for its life before we begin to cast the horoscope of an unborn monarchy.

Cuba.

Cuba, too, is cursed with its special Commune. The volunteers of Havana control the Government there, and indeed throughout the island, as completely as the French National Guards lately governed Paris; and hasten to their ruin at as headlong a pace. They have misdirected the policy of the Captain-General for several years, and unquestionably retarded the suppression of the Rebellion in Cuba, if they have not indeed made its success possible. They are now, it is threatened, about to involve the mother country in a serious quarrel with the United States, by refusing to permit the restoration of American property illegally seized by them and promptly released by Spain. At least the release was promptly ordered, but the Captain-General of Cuba, wholly under the control of the volunteers, refuses to obey the orders except on conditions which the United States cannot comply with. Of course our Government will look to the mother country for redress, and it may turn out that, having employed the volunteers to suppress the rebellion, Spain may now have a harder task before her in suppressing the volunteers.—N. Y. Tribune

If financial spiders weave their webs, do not you play the part of the giddy fly and go into them. There are plenty of safe investments, if you will be satisfied with a reasonable rate of interest. Beware of lunar railway companies and sub-lunar mining companies, which promise to pay the first year twenty per cent., in gold at that, and are, therefore, on this supposition of course, three times as good as government bonds. No matter what Wall-street and paid newspaper advertisements say. While they strive very hard, indeed, to tell the plain, unvarnished truth, still they are liable to make mistakes. Even that great financier, Mr. ——, well, you know his name—is not as infallible on pecuniary matters as the pope is presumed to be (such a presumption!) on matters of faith and doctrine. Be, financially speaking, Protestant, and use your right of private judgment, or you will have a conscious, though not a blissful experience of the truth of the homely old adage about a fool and his money. Set it down as a general rule, that the risk of an investment is as the rate of interest, and when the interest promised is unusually high, the prospect of losing both interest and principle is unusually good.

Whatever your work in life may be, strive to be conscientious in its performance. If you promise to give time and labor in exchange for money, keep the promise good. Remember to serve, "not with eye service as men pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God." Strangely inconsistent is the man who scorns to steal, but yet by lazy and careless ways will defraud, to some extent, the one who sets him to work. If the command, "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as unto the Lord, and not unto men," is binding upon you, what then? Look upon your work as a part of worship—regard it as a heaven-appointed duty, and be faithful. The smallest, meanest work is then crowned with dignity, and is never to be neglected. Be a faithful workman, not so much for your employer's sake as for your own. In so small a thing as driving a nail, drive it promptly and straight home; for in the habit which a small duty like that develops lies the secret of success.

Not only be a faithful workman, but be courteous to all whom you meet. Many a man does his work promptly and well; but such a tongue as he has—it is a drawn sword, very sharp, and tipped with the poison of asps. Keep your temper, even if your employer or fellow-workman tries to keep his and makes a most miserable failure. Politeness is benevolence in little things, and is, therefore, a part of Christianity, and a most important part. Kind words cost nothing. Oh! that they were a thousand times more plentiful! Keep an even temper, wear a sunny countenance, and speak in gentle tones to rude and cross and stupid people, even if you have the misfortune to be a ticket-agent in a lively railroad-station, or a tired clerk in a city post-office.

Do not multiply words in business transactions. Straightforward, honest and truthful simplicity is a virtue to be nursed with the utmost care. It is a flower both rare and beautiful. You believe in the Bible, then listen to its warning voice, and "let your conversation be without covetousness." Love the truth more than a good bargain, and tell it without the slightest feeling of either fear or shame. No one, in either buying or selling goods, is ever guilty of a lie—for a "lie" is a word which refined society has blotted from its vocabulary, and we dare not use it unless in a sermon, and hardly in that. There is, however, too much "prevarication" in shopping—and though this word is not so bad as the other, perhaps the sin is equally as great.—Methodist.

REMISSION—FORGIVENESS.

Are these two terms synonymous? In common acceptation and general use they are so considered, and are used in the sense of the word pardon. But in fact there is a distinction in the force of these two words, which I think we do well to notice.

This distinction is defined by Noah Webster as follows: viz. "It is to be noted that pardon, like forgive, may be followed by the name person, and by the offense; but remit can be followed by the offense only. We forgive or pardon the man, but we do not remit him." (See Dict.)

Thus, we see that while we frequently read in the Bible of the forgiveness of sins, and the remission of sins, and the forgiveness of sinners, yet we never read of the remission of sinners, as that is not a proper use of the term as applied to their salvation.

Also, it is to be noticed that remission includes an abatement of the fine or penalty. Thus we remit the penalty, but we are never said to forgive the penalty, From this we see that the words are not synonymous, only as used in a secondary sense. It is true therefore, that a man's sins may be forgiven, while the penalty is not fully remitted. Death, the penalty of sin, must be removed completely in order to a complete remission of sins.

Christ, on one occasion, forgave a man's sins, but it did not heal his withered arm. Had Christ fully remitted his sins the man would have been made immortal, and the withered arm more than healed. As it was, Christ first forgave his sins, then temporarily healed his arm, and the man is now doubtless dead, and awaiting the judgment day for a complete remission of his sins.

In view of this, we can also see the force of what the apostle wrote to the Corinthians, where he stated that if there were no resurrection of the dead "ye are yet in your sins." Had they not been forgiven? Yes. But what would that avail if there be no farther remission of those sins in the removing the penalty of death, and they be raised to immortality? Evidently nothing.

So then, while forgiveness implies justification, remission implies still more, even a complete redemption. For this complete redemption, the remission of sins, Christ's blood was shed. Jehovah might forgive repentant man, but for a full redemption a ransom price must be paid, and Christ became a sin offering to redeem the world from sin. Forgiveness short of redemption would only be a mockery. Remission of sins includes this final redemption.

So also, while pardon and forgiveness come to the penitent sinner in answer to prayer, baptism is a means to secure to such one a complete redemption and final remission of sins. Forgiveness comes in answer to the prayer of faith. But a willing obedience is a living condition by which the Christian secures eternal salvation. So we read that Christ "became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." (Heb. 5: 9.)

Baptism is both an act of obedience, and also typical of our faith, and in both senses refers to the final remission of sins, and not to forgiveness merely. The sins are, and must be forgiven before persons are fit for baptism, but the full remission is the result of working out our own salvation with fear and trembling.

But as baptism is a work of obedience for the remission of sins, query: can sins be remitted without baptism? I think every one admits they can if God see fit. Then the question arises, will God remit sins without baptism, and, if so, in what cases?

Those who claim God will not base an argument on the verse which reads, "be baptized for the remission of sins," and claim this teaches it. Such persons quote as a parallel passage that Christs's blood was shed "for the remission of sins," and claim from this that baptism is as necessary as the shedding of Christ's blood. But the reader will observe that the passage concerning the blood does not assert that the shedding of Christ's blood was necessary. It only asserts that it was done, that is all. Its necessity is asserted elsewhere or else not at all. Doing an act for a certain object is one thing, and the absolute and unqualified necessity of the deed is quite another.

But we do read, "without the shedding of blood there is no remission."

That is plain, and settles the necessity of the blood being shed. Now find one on baptism as plain as that, and that will be settled also. To read of being baptized for the remission of sin is one thing, and to read "without baptism there is no remission" is quite another. Such a passage cannot be found, and the doctrine of the absolute and unconditional necessity of baptism is not asserted in God's word.

But baptism is conditionally necessary to the remission of sin, and every true believer will rejoice at the conditions.

Baptism is a necessity to you, dear reader, if you can attend to its duties and have not done so. Obedience according to knowledge is always necessary, if it is possible for you to comply. Not but that our sins may have been forgiven you, but for their remission in the last great day. This is what every act of obedience is for, baptism among the rest, and one of the first. Forgiveness of sins you may have felt, but remission of their penalty cannot be yours in neglectful or willful disobedience to this requirement. And if you seek excuses, it shows your heart is not fully given to the Lord, to do his will. The sum is this: penitence is for remission; and all is for salvation.

"NO MORE OF THAT KIND."

"We won't have any more of that heresy preached in this house."

It was my privilege last Saturday to accompany Eld. S. E. Mabey twelve miles out of town to hold meetings over the Sabbath. Saturday evening the turnout was rather slim, yet we had a pleasant time in talking about some of the "present truth;" showing from the "signs of the times" the nearness of the Advent, etc. Sabbath morning a good sized audience assembled in the Wesleyan meeting house. After preliminary exercises by Br. Mabey I announced my text and proceeded to my subject, which was, "The Immortal Soul." Their preacher some weeks ago made an unjustifiable and unprovoked attack upon us, calling us Sadducees, etc. This created an interest among the people to hear, and as the house was built by the people in general and not for one denomination to the exclusion of others, and as our friends thought it nothing more than right, because of the attack that we should define and defend the Bible view of man's nature, we therefore felt at perfect liberty to take up the subject and speak the words of truth with freedom and boldness. I showed by way of introduction that numbers do not always go for argument—that the fact of the majority believing in immortal soul-ism did not make the doctrine true. I referred to Catholicism. Told them if numbers were to be taken for argument then the Catholics had the field—they outnumber any of us. I referred to the Whitbyan theory of the millenium, and showed that it was no hard matter to get the whole world to believe even an error if it was only popular. I then proceeded to make a historical inquiry with regard to the origin or authority of "immortal-soul-ism:" whether it was human or divine. At this juncture, a brother arose in the audience and in a very boisterous and undignified manner pronounced the words at the head of this article. He avowed that I should not be permitted to finish this discourse, and by his actions and words showed a very bad spirit at least. Another Br. arose and tried to get Br. No. 1. to sit down and allow me to proceed with the sermon. But No. 1. was not to be argued out of the bold and unmannerly course he had taken by the mild means of "moral suasion." I patiently and calmly awaited the result, urging at times, the "fair disputants" to be cool, and the congregation to keep quiet and observe order, which they did. Finally one of the directors of the house arose and said, "that he had come ten miles to hear the sermon and that he proposed to hear it, and informed the disturber of our peace that he should take his seat and come to order, otherwise physical force would be brought into requisition and order would be maintained while I was allowed to finish my discourse." The audience manifested their approval of the Director's position and quiet was restored, and I was allowed without further molestation to ventilate my subject and show the heathen origin of immortal-soul-ism, and in conclusion to briefly state the Bible doctrine of immortality. There was deep interest manifested in the truth. After service a vote was taken at the suggestion of some friends as to whether the people desired me to return and speak further on "these things." The vote resulted in a large majority in favor of my return. There is now a wide door open in that community for the truth. A deep interest has been awakened among the people and my prayer is that it may widen and deepen and culminate in a permanent influence on the side of truth.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

AN ILLUSTRATION.

Two neighbors are seen running in the same direction. One apparently sees a prize of inestimable value ahead, and he has undoubted assurance that he can obtain it; he feels a perfect confidence that if he endures to the end, the prize will be his; his thoughts and desires, his affections and ambitions are all concentrated in that direction; he cares for nothing on the right hand or the left, "forgetting the things behind, he pushes on for the prize;" running with implicit faith, he runs joyfully and thankfully, using every means by which he is authoritatively assured of obtaining.

The other neighbor apparently sees some terrible danger behind, upon which his gaze is constantly reverting; he has been pointed to the prize for which his neighbor is hastening, and has been told that there is safety from this much dreaded calamity; but he fails to see the prize, and catches merely the one idea of safety; aside from this he sees no attraction—nothing worth running for, and is in constant doubt about being able to reach the point; he has no relish for the race, it is an intolerable burden to him, and he looks hither and thither for some other way to avoid that haunting danger (which is his impelling power,) and says to his neighbor who is running for the prize: "If I saw as you do, I would not run another step." In his confusion he stumbles upon a company of persons who tell him they are going to the same place, but by a circuitous route which is the only sure way; anon he comes upon another company, and another, and another—all going different ways, and sometimes at open war with each other, but all claiming the same destination; he is ready to sit down in despair, when a venerable evangelist tells him he must unite with some one of the companies—that is the only means, the way having become so cut up and nearly obliterated by sectarian feuds, that it is impossible for him to find it without traveling with some of the organized companies. He finally selects his company, closes his eyes and gives his hand to some blind leader, nods assent to some peculiar tenets probably entirely foreign to the real subject, and tries to make himself and others believe that he feels safe. He thus entails upon himself the additional duty of gathering in and carrying along all the supplies necessary for the maintenance of party government, but also the obligation to beat back his neighbor who is running for the prize—with the Chart in his own hand and his eyes open to the fact that a "kingdom divided against itself cannot stand."

The foregoing is a fair representation of two classes of Christians. One follows Christ because he believes he will thereby obtain eternal life; the other endeavors to follow Christ because he thinks God will torture him forever if he does not. One feels that eternal life is an inestimable boon in itself, with which all this life is not to be compared, seeing it cost the blood of the Son of God, and in view of the promise that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man" the joys of eternal life without sin. The other looks upon it as nothing, only as an escape from imaginary eternal torments. One looks upon death as a dire punishment—an "enemy," because it will deprive him of eternal life; the other tries to look upon death as a "friend, an angel of mercy," because he has been told it will immediately accomplish his end and admit him to heaven, and, if there is no eternal torture, because it will release him from all obligation to God and man. One runs a race of love, joy, confidence and peace in believing, "supported by Jesus and his word;" while the other runs a race of compulsion, doubt and fear, supported by the "traditions of men."—The Nazarene.

DON'T FRET.

Some young folks are always fretting. Are you a member of the "Fretting Society?" Do you fret when it rains because you can't go out? and do you fret when it's a fine sunshiny day because of the heat? Fretting because nobody comes to see you, and fretting because you don't want any body to come? A fretty girl is a tiresome, troublesome creature. Perhaps you say, "But I have so many trials to bear, so many hard lessons to learn, or too much work to do." Well, suppose you have, does fretting help you any? The longer you sit fretting the larger will your troubles appear. Do your duty, and bear patiently the troubles which beset you. Be satisfied with what God gives you; look to him for help, and stop this disagreeable whimpering and fretting about trifles.—Youth's Cabinet.

ANCIENT ROMAN BAPTISTRIES.

Rev. James Wall, a missionary of the English Baptists in Italy for seven years, and recently sent to Rome, writes to the London Missionary Herald: You will be glad to know that the baptistries of the early Roman church are still in existence. Passing last week by the splendid marble baptistry of Constantine, I entered, and asked the priest within the use to which it was formely dedicated. Having shown me the level the water rose to where the font was prepared for baptism, and the valve in the marble floor whence it issued "when the rite was finished," he added, "This was anciently used for the immersion of proselytes." "May I ask why the church has fallen from the primitive mode?" "The church," he said, "has thought well to change it." "Why does she sprinkle infants?" "Because the Scripture commands it?" "Can you point to the passage?" He then quoted (in Latin) from Gen. 1: 28: "Increase and multiply, and fill the earth." Yes; the wholesale admission of babes into church communion has filled the earth, but not with Christians. This morning (November 24th) I went, with two who came to the meeting last Lord's day evening, to see the baptistry in the catacombs. About a mile from the walls of the city we ascended a hill, from which the view of Rome and its vicinity is magnificent. In the side of this hill is a little cave, filled with beautiful ferns, which, while it indicates, partially obscures, the entrance to this most ancient refuge of the persecuted saints of old. The guide opens the gate, and gives a taper to each, and so we leave the lovely scene without, and enter, through narrow passages; by heaps of bones and skulls, which look dismal in the feeble flickering of our lights, to the early baptistry. Before descending a flight of steps, the guide directs our eyes to a picture painted above the entrance. It is the head of Jesus, with the cross painted behind it. This first met the eye of the candidate who came to be mystically buried here with Christ; and the impression made by this picture, on account of the tenderness and love it expresses, must have been great. At the bottom of the stairs, in a small room, is a picture of our Lord's baptism. John is on one side; an angel, on the other, holds his robe; while Jesus, in the midst, stands to the waist in water, waiting to be immersed. At the foot of this picture, to my great surprise, I not only saw the ancient baptistry, but found it still filled with water, so clear that we could see to the bottom, though about four feet deep, and so sweet that we drank it with pleasure. Rome has scarcely known of the existence of this; it is scarcely ever visited, even by priests; the guide told me it was almost entirely unknown. He knows where there is another, and sometime I hope to visit it with him.

But modesty is a rare virtue now, in man or woman. There is something we suspect in the friction and stir of the times, and in the conflict with old bondages that helps to make it rare under the sun. But much more than these do the greed of wealth, and the pride of wealth, and the materialistic spirit of the times, conduce to the reduction of modesty among us. Be this as it may, the fact is patent.

WHEN I AWAKE.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
The night forever past,
With all its gloom and fearing,
With all its fever dreaming,
Light, glorious light at last,
When I awake, then no more sleeping.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
The pathway blindly trod
With footsteps weak and failing,
Illumined and clear revealing
The purpose of my God,
When I awake, then no more doubting.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
And no more weary pain,
With all its tears and sighing,
With all its grief and crying,
No more the falling rain,
When I awake, then no more grieving.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
The loved ones gathered home,
With no more words of parting,
No trembling tear drops starting,
In heaven's crystal dome,
When I awake, then blessed greeting.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
Then rest, yes perfect rest,
And no more care-worn musing,
No mountain cliff and climbing,
No looking to the west,
When I awake, no weary toiling.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
"I shall be satisfied,"
No distant far off reaching,
For something ever fleeting,
With Thee, the Crucified,
I shall awake, and know no longing.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
A Sabbath keeping time,
A seraph harp then tuning?
An angel lyre then sweeping?
Ah, more than this is mine,
When I awake the new song singing.

"When I awake" it will be morning—
It hath not been revealed,
No mortal ear is hearing,
No mortal eye is seeing
The bliss not e'en conceived,
When I awake, what glory beaming!

"When I awake" it will be morning—
Ah, then why fear to sleep?
See from the tomb uprising,
The Savior's interceding,
My soul he'll safely keep
Till I awake, oh glorious waking.

THE CHRISTIAN DUTY OF MUTUAL FORGIVENESS.

That Christians ought to have a forgiving spirit, and not only have the spirit of forgiveness, but also actually forgive an injurer when he properly requires it, is most explicitly taught in the word of God. It is impossible for a person to harbor continual hatred or malice in his heart even towards an avowed foe, and be a Christian. The two extremes are not compatible with each other and cannot be blended in the same person. God does not require us to go and hunt up an enemy that has done us great injury and perhaps will repeat the injury if he gets a chance, and urge or impose upon him our forgiveness for his past misdemeanors towards us. This he does not require; it would be too much like "casting our pearl before swine." But he does require of us that in our hearts we should forgive the enemy, though his enmity be of the bitterest kind and his offences remain unrepented of. And if after having sought to injure us in different ways and at many times (I believe the greatest number of times spoken of is four hundred and ninety), he becomes penitent and seeks from us pardon, we are in duty bound, if we have good religion, or if we love Jesus, to freely and forever forgive him for all he ever did against us. And although this is a hard office for a worldling to perform, yet for the man of God, who has "the love of God shed abroad in his heart, by the Holy Spirit, which is given unto us" (Rom. 5:5), it is an easy and delightful task.

Whilst we live in this mortal dispensation we must inevitably be surrounded by influences, evil in their nature, and which unless diligently guarded against will prove prejudicial to our progress and success as Christians. No more frequent development of this state of things is seen in the community of saints than in their incessant liability to offend each other. The offence is not always intentional. In a majority of cases it is otherwise. Unthoughtedly and without the least idea of doing anything to hurt the feelings of any of our beloved brethren, we often give offence. There are two lessons that we should learn from. (1) We ought to have a constant watch-care over all that we do. Observe Paul's rule. He would not eat meat if by it his brother became offended. (2) We ought to cultivate a fervent spirit of true Christian forgiveness. If our brethren do offend us, whether it be by accident or intentional, it is our imperative duty to guard against anything like envious or retaliating feelings. We should remember the state we are in—that we are all liable to do wrong—and instead of magnifying the offence, have a cloak of charity large enough to cover it.

Christ had a forgiving spirit. He prayed for the forgiveness of his enemies, even those who nailed him to the tree. Paul says: "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." (Rom. 8:9.)

"But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover the multitude of sins." (1 Pet. 4:7, 8.)

CHRISTIAN SALUTATION.

Permit me to send a few lines of Christian greeting to the spiritual household of our blessed Lord and Savior. My heart is grateful for my safe return home after an absence of two weeks, during which time it was the privilege of my husband and other dear friends from this region of country, with myself, to visit Jeffersonville during the yearly session of the Indiana Conference of Advent Christians, met together for the purpose of devising ways and means by which the glorious doctrines of the word of God now so comforting to us may be extended to others.

The meeting was very precious and a signal success. Many reports and letters were read from other churches, affording cheering intelligence that the good news of a soon coming Savior, is being welcomed by many thousands of earnest Christians. Nine ministers received license to go forth with the glorious gospel message—"Repent ye and believe the gospel, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." And two more were ordained, who had long since proved themselves worthy of the confidence of their brethren and "the laying on of hands."

Once more according to my yearly custom, I was permitted to visit the prison, and with a number of other friends mingle in the social worship of the unfortunate prisoners, whose earnestness and zeal would put to shame the indifference of many lukewarm professors of religion. It was my privilege at the close of the social meeting to address them on the great theme of our common salvation. They were very attentive and seemed glad to hear the good news of a Savior's love. They were particularly pleased with this precious hymn we sing, "Take it to the Lord in prayer," and have, since my return home, written to me for it; which request I take great pleasure in granting, praying at the same time, that while they sing the sweet words of the hymn, they may believe on him whose praise it celebrates, and find him precious to their hearts in the forgiveness of their sins.

In the afternoon we met at the Tabernacle to commemorate the supper of our dying, but now risen Savior. The circumstances, to me, were such as I had never enjoyed before. I never so fully realized the fullness and beauty of the apostle's words in 1 Cor. 11:26—"For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." Yes, till he come. I felt that it was indeed joyful to be assembled with a body of Advent believers who could understandingly eat and drink according to the divine direction, because they believed he was coming in his own glorious person, just as he said he would do. This, then, constituted our joy, that we were receiving the elements of our Lord's broken body and shed blood, not only according to the command, but in hope of soon seeing him seated on his own throne, in his own kingdom, with all the saints from "under the whole heavens, forever even forever and ever." Precious truth. May all who love Jesus, speedily see it and believe it to the joy of their hearts.

As other and more able persons will give a more minute description of the very interesting meeting there enjoyed, I will leave the pleasant duty in their hands after paying a tribute of gratitude to our beloved brother, Dr. Field and family, whose hearts and house are open wide to the reception of those who love Jesus. May they, while so kindly refreshing others be abundantly refreshed themselves, and be filled with all the consolation of the glorious gospel which they so fully believe and practice.

I saw and conversed with many persons during my absence, and tried to elevate in their minds the study of the Scriptures of divine truth that they may more fully learn what they do teach concerning our coming Lord and the doctrines connected with the setting up of his kingdom. While our former brethren in the ministry, whom I venerate and love, gave us all the light they had upon the subjects, we rejoiced in it, and still rejoice in it; but now that greater light has dawned upon the sacred page, according to the prophecy of Daniel, "that at the time of the end the book should be unsealed, the wise should understand," and "knowledge should be increased." It is surely in no disparity to their former teaching that we are adding the more luminous light of these last days. My prayer is, that they too, may be willing to investigate these glorious topics; that they may again lead us onward in the progress of that knowledge that will make us "wise unto salvation."

Prejudice is a great foe to the human race, and especially to the Christian. I was pained not long ago to hear a professed Christian lady say, that if the truths we advocate were in the Bible, she did not wish to believe them. Surely such a heart needs renovating from top to bottom, until it can take in willingly and joyously all the teachings of Jesus and his apostles.

Let us then, in the spirit of meekness endeavor to instruct those who thus oppose the progress of truth in their own hearts and the hearts of others. Let us keep aloof from the vanities and amusements of the day, from the inroads made upon the house of God in admitting fairs and festivals within its sacred precincts. The Savior when here upon earth drove out "the buyers and the sellers," from the temple, and said, "Make not my house a house of merchandise," but let it be in all nations the place of prayer. The customs of the day in which we live should never be a precedent for Christians to follow. But ever let us look at these things in the light of eternity, and "as those who must give an account for the deeds done in the body."

THE LAST EIGHT CHAPTERS OF EZEKIEL.

Ezekiel lived at the time of the Babylonian captivity, and was one of the captives in Chaldea. What he saw in the "visions of God" and recorded in the last eight chapters of his book, has been regarded by many as exceedingly difficult to explain. How the existence in the future of the priesthood, the sprinkling of the bood of bulls and of goats, the offering of sin-offerings, the existence of divorced persons—whom the priests are forbidden to marry, the erection of a temple for the restoration of Levitical rites etc., can be harmonized with the truth touching the finished work of Christ and the simplicity of the Gospel, is an unsolved enigma. On the one hand we are no more able to spiritualize the utterances of Ezekiel than we are the sacrificial laws of Moses; and on the other we cannot take them literally and carry them into the latter part of the gospel dispensation nor into the millennium after the second Advent for realization, without subverting the the gospel of the Son of God. What then shall we do? The following remarks of the late Sylve[illegible] Bliss, in his Review of Prof. B[illegible] "Millennium and New Jerusalem," express what has long been our own view of the passage. He says:—

"The next argument of Professor Bush respects the last chapter of Ezekiel, commencing with the 40th, which is the commencement of a new prophecy given in the twentieth year of the Babylonish captivity. His argument is, that the subject of this prediction is also identical with that just considered, the new creation of Isaiah and John. There would be some plausibility for this supposition, were it not for one consideration which has entirely escaped the Professor's notice, viz., that it is a conditional prophecy. The prophecies which are absolute must be fulfilled in their appointed time and manner, but there is another class of promises which depend upon certain conditions, which must be complied with, or the promises will be null and void. Thus in the 26th chapter of Leviticus, when God promised the Jews that he would give them rain in due season—that the land should yield her increase and the trees their fruit,—that their threshing should reach unto their vintage and their vintage unto their sowing time,—that they should eat their bread to the full and dwell in their land safely,—that they should lie down and none make them afraid,—that he would rid evil beasts out of their land, and the sword should not go through it,—that they should chase their enemies, who should fall before them by the sword, five of them chasing a hundred and an hundred putting ten thousand to flight,—that he would multiply them, make them fruitful, and establish his covenant with them,—that he would set his tabernacle among them, walk among them, and be their God, and they his people;—it all depended upon the condition that they should worship no idols or graven image, or set up any image of stone or standing image, or set up any image of stone or standing image to worship, that they should keep the sabbaths of the Lord, reverence his sanctuary, walk in his statutes and keep his commandments and do them. The Jews refused to comply with these conditions, and God bestowed upon them cursings instead of blessings.

"So is this last prophecy of Ezekiel also conditional. The prophet was set upon a high mountain in the land of Israel, and shown what was 'as the frame of a city.' He was commanded to hear and see all that was shown him, that he might declare it to the house of Israel. Then he saw and measured the various gates, walls, porches, thresh-holds, chambers, posts, windows, courts, tables, hooks, steps, etc., etc., as described in the forty-first chapters. Afterwards, 43: 2–8, he beheld, and 'the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east,' and came into the house 'by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east,' and 'filled the house.' 'And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I dwell in the midst of the children of Israel forever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings in their high places.' The remaining chapters go on to speak of the law of the house, the ordinances of the altar, the duties of the priests and people, the division of the land, etc., which they were to observe if they were to comply with the conditions, so that the Lord could fulfill this vision: and the consummation of which would be, that "the name of the city from that day shall be THE LORD IS THERE.' All this the prophet was commanded to offer, saying 'to the rebellious house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God, O ye house of Israel, let it suffice you for all your abominations;' and they were to receive it upon these conditions:—'Now, let them put away their whoredom, and the carcasses of their kings, far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them forever. Thou, son of man, show the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities; and let them measure the pattern. And IF they shall be ashamed of all they have done, show to them the form of the house and the fashion thereof, and all the ordinances thereof,' and all the laws thereof; and write in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof and do them,' (43: 6–11.)

"This seems to be a prophecy in reference to their restoration from Babylon, at the end of their seventy years captivity, if they would comply with its conditions. But the Jews did not comply: they did not put away their gross sins and abominations, and were not ashamed of their iniquities and all that they had done; so that if Ezekiel showed them the form of the house, they did not build the temple after the pattern. And thus continuing in their sins, the glory of the Lord, THE HOLY SHEKINAH, never dwelt in the second temple as it did in the first: and none of these promises were fulfilled to them, as they would have been had they complied with the conditions. Thus the prophecy, being a conditional prophecy, cannot have respect to a state identical with the absolute prophecies of Isaiah and John in the New Earth."—Advent Shield, Vol. 1. pp. 430–432.

"THEM THAT LOOK FOR HIM."

"And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

As the weary and care-worn traveler, long exiled from his native home, desires to behold the objects of his affection, and again fold them in his embrace of love, so do the real and true disciples of the Lord Jesus long for the coming of their Savior, that they may behold him in his beauty, and where he is to be also. Not only in these last days when the fulfillment of prophecy concerning the coming of the blessed Redeemer seems well nigh expired, is love for his appearing roused up afresh, but upon this glorious event have the saints of all ages fixed their hope, as with a death grasp never to be released till Gabriel's trump shall summon them to banquet at the marriage feast of the Lamb.

The Psalmist David, amid all the splendors of earthly luxury with which he was surrounded, could cry out, "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." This was the great and crowning desire of the sweet singer of Israel, to appear before God; "When shall I come and appear before God?" This was the burden of his heart, the delight of his thoughts. And for our joy and comfort the Apostle tells us that to all who possess this class of feelings, "to them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." And to the Christian, the object for which he is coming is of the greatest importance, and constitutes his highest joy. It will be the time of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began." It will be the ushering in of the millennial glory when Jesus "shall sit upon the throne of his father, David, and he shall reign over the house of Israel forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." And when he comes he shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

This, then, in the Christian's hope, is paramount to everything else, to get rid of this vile body that has so long been a clog and hindrance to our spiritual joys. Oh! who has not mourned over it, sorrowed and sighed at its unlikeness to the Divine image, pressed down with the painful thought that it would never be otherwise while clothed in the robe of flesh. But when Jesus comes, we are not only to see him, with all the bright retinue of holy angels descending in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, bringing with him the glorified saints, attired in their new and beautiful resurrection dress, but we ourselves are to be of the happy number thus changed and fashioned like unto the blessed Redeemer. Oh! with what joyful admiration do we look forward to that glorious period, that time of introduction, when the saints on earth, at the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior, shall be presented to those who have long slept in Jesus, whom he will "bring with him." Does not the very anticipation of this event so long prayed for fill the soul with holy rapture at its contemplation, determining us to break away from every thing that would hinder our meeting the Holy One with joy and not with grief?

And now that our redemption is nearer than when we first believed, it is important that we wake as out of sleep, that we may be truly ready and waiting for the approaching footsteps of our Lord and Master. These great and glorious realities are dawning upon us. The signs of the times, with the fulfillment of prophecy, clearly indicate that it is near, even at the doors. It may be we shall have to endure the warfare a little longer, engage in a few more conflicts, battling with sin and sorrow, maintaining the right against the wrong, standing up for liberty over oppression, exhibiting a life of love and holiness instead of world-mindedness and indifference. Then it will be said to us, "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing; of a truth I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath."—M. A. ETERNAL LIFE IN CHRIST.

We all know what "the struggle for life," means, what anxious thought, care, labor, sorrow it involves to provide for this present life; which at best "is but a vapor;" and surely, if this fleeting life occupies so much of our thought and energies, with what earnestness, anxiety, and carefulness should we study, struggle, and wrestle for that life which is to come, so that, "when he who is our life shall appear, we also may appear with him in glory."

The proposition, "Eternal life, in Christ only," is at first sight somewhat startling, as we have been taught from infancy to believe that we are all immortal, and have eternal life bequeathed us, either through Adam, or inherited from God; thus setting aside and altogether ignoring the solemn statement of Paul, (1 Cor. 15: 50): "neither doth corruption inherit incorruption; the same word translated here incorruption, is rendered immortality in Rom. 2: 7, where it says, "to them who, by patient continuing in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life;" and also in 2 Tim. 1: 10; who hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Hence, we see that Scripture gives no sanction to the prevalent idea, that we inherit immortality or eternal life; and equally is it true, that Adam did not give it to us, for the simple reason it was not his to give, either by possession or purchase. "What!' the majority of you perhaps will exclaim, "Surely you do not mean to say that our father Adam was not immortal." You are right, my friends, I do not mean to say so, but simply tell you that God, "who cannot lie," has said it. This then introduces us to a consideration of the very foundation of this question, namely, was Adam created mortal or immortal? For if created mortal, he could not be immortal, and if he had been created immortal then eternal life was his by right, and consequently could not be his through Jesus Christ.

But what saith the Scriptures, "How readest thou?" "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." (Is. 8: 20.)

The account of man's creation, as given in Gen. 2: 7, is this, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. "Does this prove that man was created with "an immortal soul," "a never-dying soul," "an eternal life?" I trow not. Yet this is the strongest proof that the orthodox belief, as it is called, can adduce from Scripture that Adam had an immortal soul, though we do not find the phrase "immortal soul," "never-dying soul," in this text, nor in any other, in the whole word of God. Let us examine this account of Adam's creation.

Adam was "formed of the dust of the ground." Does this prove that he was immortal? Can an immortal being die? And yet we find God saying to Adam, after he had eaten of the forbidden fruit, "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." I wish any sane man, whose mind is unprejudiced by the current theology, and free from the mist of bigotry, would ask himself this question: Is it possible for an immortal man "to return to the dust" and see corruption? and yet these are the horns of the dilemma from which the believers in the Platonic dogma of man's natural immortality must try to get off.

Christ's body saw no corruption. Why?—because he was essentially immortal, and was not of the "earth—earthy," like the "first Adam." Ah! but the believers in Adam's natural immortality say, Did not God breathe into Adam the breath of life? and, by so doing, Adam became a "living soul?" True, very true; but does this prove that Adam was immortal? Certainly not, unless by your own logic you concede what we shall show your premises prove; namely, that if "living soul" means "immortal soul," then every worm that creeps on the ground, every bird, every reptile, every fish, every beast, is, and must be, immortal; for the very same Hebrew word, here translated "living-soul," is translated life, in Gen. 1: 30, when speaking of the life of animals: "And to every beast of the field, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth"—worm you see among them—"wherein there is life," or "living soul," as in the margin.

Again: Gen. 1: 21; "And God created great whales, and every living creature," i. e., "living soul," as the word here rendered "living creature" is the same as in Gen. 2: 7. Again: Gen. 2: 19. "Whatsoever Adam called every living creature." Many such passages might be quoted to prove that the Hebrew word nephesh is translated not only "living soul," but "living creature," "creeping thing," "breath," and one hundred and twenty times "life;" so that, to say that man is immortal because God breathed into him "the breath of life," and man became "a living soul," is to prove also that all animals have immortal souls. Solomon, the greatest of philosophers and the wisest of men, says (Eccl. 3: 19): "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence over a beast." The words nephesh in Hebrew, and psyche, in Greek, are used in the Old and New Testament eight hundred and forty times; and the word ruach, in Hebrew, and pneuma, in Greek, are used three hundred and eighty-six times; and certainly, if anywhere, this is the place to find their meaning and application; and yet, out of these twelve hundred and twenty-six uses of these words, not in a single instance do they mean immortal, eternal, or never-dying soul; but simply mean "soul," "living soul," "living creature," "breath," "air," "spirit," etc., etc. Man like every other animal, is an organized being, living by breathing the atmospheric air.

Man, not a part of him, was made of the dust: the word of God does not say that Adam's body only was made of the dust: no; it was the entire man. Notice the personality implied by the words in which he is addressed: "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." Thou, the man; not thy body only, but thou, the entire Adam!

The following illustration may help to elucidate this subject: A still-born child—one who has never breathed, and therefore cannot possess a "living soul," or, as it is commonly believed, an "immortal soul," comes into the world with all its organization perfect; i. e., the lungs, the heart, the brain, the nerves, the blood-vessels, the muscles, the bones, all in complete order, and ready to perform their several functions; yet the heart beats not, the lungs are quiet, the voice is silent, and the limbs move not. How is this? For some reason the vital air—properly so called,—has not entered the lungs; and consequently the body is, to all intents and purposes, dead. How then is this piece of organism to manifest life, and call into play and activity its every function? There is but one way, and that is "to breathe into it the breath of life," and then it will become a living soul, or, a living creature. But who will have the audacity to say that man, by breathing into the lungs of this dead child oxygen or vital air, communicated to it immortality, or gave to it a deathless soul?

The soul of man is the man himself. It is not that deathless entity theologians speak about so learnedly. God speaks not one word about a deathless soul, a "never-dying soul;" these phrases are only found in books, sermons, hymns and tracts. The apostle Paul is the only sacred writer who mentions the words "immortal" and immortality;" and he never applies them to sinners, nor to the good or bad in this world; nor to the souls of men at all!

He speaks of immortality as an attribute of the "King Eternal;" that he is only possessed of it; that it is to be "sought after" by man, "by patient continuance in well doing:" that it was brought to light by Christ; that it will be attained to by the resurrection, "when this mortal shall put on immortality:" therefore, he never taug[illegible] [illegible]mmortality of the soul of man, a[illegible] from Christ. God speaks thus[illegible] [illegible]e soul of the father shall die;" t[illegible] is, the father himself, as souls, in Scripture, are frequently synonom[illegible] [illegible] persons: e. g., Gen. 17: [illegible] the uncircumcised man-child [illegible]sh of his foreskin is not circ[illegible] [illegible]at soul shall be cut off fro[illegible] [illegible]le." By which is certa[illegible] the man himself; not a d[illegible]ity. Again (Acts 27: 37, [illegible] we were in all in the ship tw[illegible]red three score and sixteen souls;" that is to say, persons.

These two instances, one from the Old, and another from the New Testament, will be sufficient to prove that souls often represent persons, i. e. "body, soul, and spirit," a phrase of Paul's, which Robinson, in his Greek Lexicon, says is a periphrasis, and represent the whole man.

Now then, what was it Adam lost by his disobedience? Was it eternal life? It is true eternal life, or immortality, was within his grasp, had he eaten of the "Tree of Life," which was "in the midst of the garden;" but as we have no mention of his having done so, we naturally infer Adam did not touch the "Tree of Life."

By his disobedience, he incurred death. He believed Satan's lie, "Thou shalt not surely die," and rejected the truth of God, "the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt not surely die;" and consequently he lost his friendship with God, and became amenable to death.

Adam and all his posterity were thus separated and banished from God, and now God comes again to the rescue, and in the most gracious manner shows himself to be indeed a God of love, in not permitting Adam in his own sinful and dying state to eat of the "Tree of Life," for had Adam done this, awful and terrible would have been the results, as, in doing so, he would have entailed upon himself, and all the human race, an immortality of sin. But God, in his mercy and love for a guilty man, immediately interposed a barrier between Adam and the "Tree of life," as we read in Gen. 3: 22. "And the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the 'Tree of Life,' and eat, and live forever." To prevent this, God placed 'cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the Tree of Life."

We perceive from this, that Adam's only way (so far as he himself was concerned) to gain immortality, or to live "forever and ever," was to eat of "the Tree of Life;" but being debarred from this, and thereby utterly unable to gain immortality for himself, the loving-kindness of our "God of Love," is again conspicuously manifested, in the promise given, in the curse denounced upon the serpent: "And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." (Gen. 3: 15, 16.)

We venture to affirm from these references to the unerring word of God, that Adam's physical organization, so far from possessing immortality, was just on a par with any other living creature, "whose breath is in his nostrils;" though, as regards his psychological or mental capacities, far above them in intelligence, wisdom, understanding, and mental power, though differing scarcely anything from the other animals in either his physiological or physical organism.

This then being Adam's primeval state, as formed by God, destitute of immortality, the question now naturally arises:

How IS MORTAL MAN TO ATTAIN UNTO IMMORTALITY?

Scripture answers the question in such words as these, referring to Jesus: "Who has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." (2. Tim. 1: 10.) In other words: the first Adam, being destitute of immortality, the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, has brought both life and immortality to man by his death and resurrection; a solemn and glorious truth uttered as follows by the glowing heart of the apostle Paul: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality; so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

"Eternal life" is God's gift, and can only be obtained by believing in Jesus, and by being baptized into his death, and will only be fully possessed by the resurrection.

"Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the grave shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life,[*] and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

The doctrine of the resurrection, is, in our opinion, the key-stone of the triumphal arch of Immortality, upon which waves the banner of Victory, with the inscription, "O death, where is thy sting! O, grave, where is thy victory! Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

If this be so, how is it that the doctrine of the resurrection is almost ignored in the prevailing theology? When speaking on the subject to a Christian gentleman, he said, "Well my own experience makes me think you are right, as I cannot remember that I ever heard a sermon on the resurrection, although I have attended places of worship from my infancy."

Now this is very sad, but it is easily explained. The vast majority of preachers teach the natural immortality of man, and that at death he does not, as the Scripture says, "fall asleep," but lives on either in bliss or wo. Hence, what need is there for a resurrection, since, according to this doctrine, which, however, is not of God, the judgment is given at death, and the soul passes direct to heaven or hell.

This is contrary to the teachings of Scripture, for we are told in Acts 17: 31, that "God has appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained."

The Bible Class.

"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them, and that to bless."

The above passage so frequently quoted as Scripture, is not to be found in the Bible. Make a note of the fact; and if you have been in the habit of using it as a Scripture quotation, cease to do so. Leave out the italicised words, and you will have just what the Savior did say. (Mat. 18: 20.)

Believer's children. (1 Cor. 7; 14.)

It is still asked, "Does not Paul pronounce children holy?" Yes, as the opposite of unclean. Some of the Corinthian believers, whose husbands or wives were heathen, were disposed to withdraw from the other party, on the ground that their marriage was no marriage at all. Paul assures them that their marriage is a true one; that the contrary supposition involves the admission that their children are the unclean offspring of fornication; that they are not thus unclean, but are children of true and lawful wedlock. There is no other holiness here.

1 Cor. 11: 10.

The difficulty seems to be principally in the word "angels," and so long as the word is used in its spiritual sense as meaning "heavenly messengers," there will be difficulty in understanding the sentence; but if it be used in its original sense, as "envoy," "messenger," "embassador," or "person high in rank," the obscurity will, I think, disappear. It is employed in the latter sense in Rom. 8: 38, and in 1 Cor. 6: 3. It is applied to priests in Mal. 2: 7, and to the bishops of the seven churches of Asia Minor, in Rev. 1: 20.

In the text in question, I believe it should be understood in like manner—that is to say, as meaning persons in authority in the church, as bishops, presbyters, overseers, visitors, and the like. Then with regard to the word exousia, translated "power," Schleusner gives the meaning of "veil for a woman's head dress, so called, not because it was emblematical of her subjection to her husband, but as being a badge denoting rank or dignity; also the rank and consideration given to married women among the Jews." And Bretschneider says that the words exousia epi universally signify dominion over something, and that the passage ought to be rendered "the woman ought to have power (i. e., liberty,) to veil her head." Exousia also means moral power, in opposition to dunamis, physical power. I therefore respectfully suggest that the following is probably the real meaning of the apostle: "For this cause (i. e., to avoid scandal) it behooves the woman to wear a veil on her head on account of those in authority" (i. e., to obviate the necessity for their reproving her). The apostle was anxious that everything should be done decently and in order, and that ancient customs and existing prejudices should be violated little as need be. That veiling the woman's head was a very ancient custom, is proved by Rebecca's conduct. (Gen. 24: 65.)—J. J. B., in Chris. Observer.

THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

What did Jesus mean by the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus?

This is a question that has excited deep interest in all hearts, and has puzzled many, even those who have demonstrated that it could not teach the

The question candidly considered.
Objections fairly met.
The true import demonstrated.

Pharisaic Theology False.

This is Eld. L. C. Collins' latest effort, and will excite as deep interest as did his widely circulated Address to the Minnesota Methodist Conference.

A Presbyterian friend in New York City says of Br. Collin's late work (in a letter ordering eighty copies for distribution): "I have not read anything on the subject treated, with more satisfaction; and I believe it is the truth."

Let all read it.

Another says: Allow me to call the attention of your many readers to this excellent tract. Different in exposition from anything I ever saw, I think it comes nearer the truth and gives a better explanation of this parable than anything yet published upon it. As this parable is one of the greatest strongholds (?) of "orthodoxy" (?) we ought to have the very best exposition of it possible; this I think we have in Br. Collins' tract. It is a straightforward, clear, unvarnished, and common-sense exegesis of this important passage of Scripture. It will do much good and ought to be widely scattered.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 27, 1871.

WE call special attention to the article given elsewhere from The Advance. While overturning the historical basis of Universalism, it strongly favors the so-called 'annihilationist' view of future punishment. Evidently the immaterialist idea of the doom of the lost has little countenance from the apostolic fathers; for if they had urged, the Advance would not have been slow to quote the passages from them. Give the article a careful reading.

NO PAPER FOR ONE WEEK.

It has been our custom to omit the publication of THE TIMES the week of the General Camp-meeting; but as we shall have no such meeting this year, and as a number of obstacles delayed the publication of the paper on Tuesday last, we have concluded to make the omission in June this year, instead of in September, as heretofore. The next issue of THE TIMES, will, therefore, be dated, and mailed, Monday July 3.

Meanwhile we would say to our subscribers that we are perfecting arrangements for making decided improvements in the appearance as well as quality of THE TIMES. Our press has long been overtasked, but we have been unable to make the changes necessary to ensure good work. We shall make the necessary change within a few weeks. And, dear readers, what will you do, to purchase printing paper to make into attractive tracts, papers and books for the spread of the glorious gospel? How sadly deficient is the 'Tract Fund!'

A DISCUSSION.

A few weeks since we intimated that we were arranging for a discussion with an able Disciple preacher. We are now able to announce that the proposed debate is agreed upon, but will commence at a later date than we at first expected—probably about September.

The discussion will be published in THE TIMES, and also in some Disciple journal (not yet designated).

The parties engaged are the Editor of this journal and the Rev. Clark Braden, until lately President of the "Christain" College of Southern Illinois, but now located in Nebraska, and building up an institution of learning there.

PROPOSITION I. Man is by the constitution God gave him in creation, and which he still retains, a being possessing a spirit that will endlessly exist in a state of consciousness.

Eld. Clark Braden affirms.

PROP. II. Man is a mortal being, unconscious in death, and will have no future life, except by a resurrection of the dead.

Editor of TIMES affirms.

PROP. III. The reward of the righteous will be endless conscious existence and endless happiness; and the punishment of the wicked will be endless extinction of conscious being.

Editor of TIMES affirms.

PROP. IV. Those who die in willful impenitence and rebellion against God, will be finally punished by banishment from the society of God and all pure intelligences, in a state of endless conscious existence.

Braden affirms.

Each writer will have six articles upon each of the above propositions, which, as will be observed, cover the whole ground of the so-called 'Life and Death Question.'

Mr. Braden is a debater of no mean ability. His discussion upon baptism with Mr. Hughey, of the Methodist church, is considered by many as superior to the celebrated Campbell and Rice debate. We have, also, the assurance that Mr. Braden is a Christian gentleman as well as a fine scholar; and while he proposes to sift our theology in the most thorough manner, the debate will not be marred with those personalities too common in such discussions.

We trust our readers will inform the circle of their acquaintance of this important series of articles, and let them be circulated as widely as possible. Those who wish to see both sides of this question in its latest phases will hardly have a better opportunity than this discussion will afford.

THE GOOD WAY.

We have orders for several thousands of this little sheet for July. Those who wish copies should send orders immediately, as the edition, each month, is limited. We invite the attention of ministers and churches to the advertisement in another column.

THE CHEAP EDITION.

The cheap edition of Whitmore on Immortality is exhausted. We can positively fill no more orders at present.

[NOTE. We have a few copies in cloth binding, which, owing to a slight defect, which in no way affects the reading matter or durability of the work, we will send to any address, post-paid, for 50c. There are only forty copies. Those wishing any of them should apply at once.]

We now propose to issue another edition of 3,000 copies to be ready sometime in September, provided sufficient encouragement is given. The terms will be the same as for the last edition, as follows:

Four copies, post-paid, $1. Five copies, post-paid, $1.20. Five copies, express, $1. Fifteen copies, express, $2.50. By mail, $3.30. Thirty copies, express, $5. Fifty copies, express, $8. One hundred copies, express, $16.

Friends can remit the money with their subscriptions, or wait until the books are ready for delivery, as may please them. The pay in advance would aid us greatly in getting out the book. The typographical execution of the next edition will be superior to any yet published; as it will not be printed until we have effected some changes in our press, which will enable us to do superior work. Meanwhile send us liberal subscriptions. We will print TEN THOUSAND COPIES, if they are called for.

THE ADVANTAGE OF THE AMERICAN EDITION OF SMITH'S UNABRIDGED.—This edition then comprises the entire English work and abridgment, with its wealth of illustration—not a single article abreviated. But it has more. New articles have been added, and the old ones have been supplemented wherever it was important to add the results of more recent investigation; and numerous new maps and illustrations have been added. Besides this, very great attention has been paid to the wants of American students by lists of books and writers upon the subjects treated, which are likely to be within the reach of such students. The discoveries of the English Exploring Fund in Palestine, awakening so much interest at the present time, are all taken advantage of in this edition. Finally, a microscopic examination of the original work has brought to light a great number of minute errors, especially in references, which have been set right. In fine, this edition must long remain the standard Bible Dictionary of America, not only for scholars, but all readers of the Scriptures.

WISCONSIN CAMP-MEETIMG AND STATE CONFERENCE.

This meeting was held on the beautiful camp ground occupied last year, at Prairie Du Sac, begining on the 4th, and closing on the 11th of June. It has never been our pleasure to gaze on a pleasanter camp ground in any locality, and we never expect to see it surpassed till we reach the camp of the saints. Pleasant surroundings add much to any enterprise, camp-meetings not excepted. The ground is within half a mile of the village, and the Wisconsin River. We had no watch on the ground at any stage of the meeting. Every night, as soon as the meeting was dismissed, all who did not live on the ground quietly left without being spoken to, and the whole camp retired to rest without any fears.

We had more tents on the ground this year than ever before in Wisconsin, or in any of the Western States. Wisconsin has taken the lead from the first in building cloth villages in the West, in number of tents.

The camp friends were pleasantly surprised in receiving a visit from Sr. Mansfield, who came without official invitation, much to the joy of many who had never before enjoyed the privilege of hearing her preach. Br. Wm. L. Himes, also, arrived about the middle of the week, and remained over Sunday. Besides these, sixteen or eighteen of our home ministers were present. Though the meeting did not result in as much present good as last season, it was a good meeting. Some gave their hearts to God, many received new light, and ten were baptised, in the Wisconsin River.

CONFERENCE SESSIONS.

The State Conference, held in connection with the camp-meeting, at different sessions deliberated on different points:

1. Officers were elected for the ensuing year: O. S. Knapp, President, Wm. Sheldon, Secetary.

2. Business Committee: Wm. Sheldon, G. G. Godfry, P. W. Matts.

3. Ordination Committee: G. W. Barnes, Wm. Sheldon, P. W. Hough.

4. The following Brn. were received into the Conference as licensed ministers: George Howard, George Button, B. Meigs, C. M. Keach. Eld. W. S. Shears was also received, making an addition of five ministers.

5. The following churches were received: Praire Du Sac, Wingville, Oregon, Arena, Brunswick, and Mount Zion.

6. The Conference then listened to reports from ministers in person and by letter, containing cheering intelligence of the spread of truth, and revival interest in different quarters. About 200 have been baptised by our ministers during the past year.

7. The delegates reported a part of the churches, and a part were reported by letter. Many items of interest were presented, indicating progress in the right direction.

8. After due deliberation, it was unanamously decided to district the Conference, for the purpose of scattering quarterly meetings over the whole Conference territory, each district to have a minister appointed by Conference to take supervision of the Quarterly Conferences within its bounds, each district to have three quarterly meetings per year, making the fourth for all the districts come at the time and place of the Annual Meeting, thus making a general rally from each district once a year to attend the Annual Conference.

9. Wm. Sheldon, P. W. Hough, P. W. Matts, Geo. Thomson, and Geo. Howard were appointed a committe to investigate the geographical location of the churches, designate bounds for the several districts, and select men to take supervision of each district. After consultation, it was thought best to divide the State into three districts for the present year. It was decided best to run a boundary line on the R. R. track from Milwaukee to Prairie Du Chine via. Madison, thus forming a Southern District, including these cities, and the churches located south of this line. G. G. Godfrey was designated to take supervision of the Southren District. The Eastern and the Western districts were formed by running a line from Richland City north, to the State line. Elder Peter W. Hough was selected to take supervision of the Western District, and Eld. Geo. Thomson to take supervision of the Eastern District. This action was unanimously endorsed by vote of the Conference, with the understanding that each one of these brethren might hold as many extra or special meetings in their districts as their judgments might decide best for the cause.

10. The ordination Committe recommended that the ordination of the two candidates presented be deferred till the next Annual Conference. This recommendation was sanctioned by vote of the entire Conference, including the candidates.

11. The old Camp-meeting Committe was re-elected, to arrange for the next State Camp-meeting.

We look for the accomplishment of much good in Wisconsin the coming year if time lasts. While in some localities the cause is not flourishsng as much as we could wish, on the whole we are advancing, and truth is gaining a foothold in every direction, much to the discomfort of our enemies, who know not how to refute our sentiments. Many of our ministers support themselves and preach without salary, which greatly disminishes the amount of preaching. With one active minister against ten so-called orthodox clergymen, the truth would triumph over the entire land as the result of a war on theology. It is becoming apparent to all that it is too late in the day for us to be laughed, scoffed, or frightened out of the truth. But to succeed we must have the spirit in our hearts, as well as the truth in our heads; but never lower God's standard of truth to please men, nor allow the flag of truth to trail in the dust in the presence of its enemies. While we should refrain from contending for the truth in a wolfish pugilistic spirit, we should always earnestly contend for it in the lamb-like spirit of the Master. The Bridegroom is coming from heaven soon, the saints to be immortalized, and the kingdom of God to be set up. Let us keep these great God-given themes before the people; and also impress all hearts with the importance of a preparation for the day of judgment so soon to dawn.

WM. SHELDON, Sec'y.

THE NEW TESTAMENT AND THE RESURRECTION.

In an address by the Rev. O. B. Frothingham we find this language: "Fairly considered, the New Testament does not record the physical resurrection of Jesus as a body, but his spiritual resurrection as a power of life in the soul. Thus Paul—the first witness and the great preacher of the resurrection—taught it."

"Fairly considered!" The phrase in its connection seems like an intense sarcasm. If the New Testament, taken in its natural sense, unwarpped by theory or preposition, makes one statement that is explicit or unmistakable, it so states the bodily resurrection of Jesus. The narration is given in the fullest detail; it is repeated over and again by the Evangelists; Paul himself in 1 Cor. 15: 3–8, sums up the account in the simplest and most emphatic language. "Fairly considered!" Any consideration not absolutely shut up in advance to determined blindness, could not miss the record of the fact, any more than it could miss the sun at unclouded noon day.

If to any the fact so stated seems in itself incredible, they have no course but to deny either the honesty or the incapacity of the witnesses. But against this rock skepticism has again and again shattered itself in hopeless defeat. The claim that the New Testament writers were willful imposters was long since found utterly untenable. The idea that they were amiable but mislead enthusiasts struggles ineffectually against their character as disclosed by their writings. Paul especially, with his shrewd common-sense joined to burning enthusiasm, stumbles those who are bent on denying the facts to which he testifies. And lo, the desperate resort! Paul, it is at length granted, was no more a fool than he was a cheat, but Paul has been misunderstood! He never mistook the fable of a bodily resurrection for fact! It was only a spiritual resurrection, the springing up of Christ's ideas in the minds of others, that he meant.

What did Paul mean? Read his language to the Corinthians, and see if there be any doubt. "For I delivered unto you, first of all, that which I also received; how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve. After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, he was seen of James, then of all the Apostles. And last of all, he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time." If any one can still maintain that all this was simply a resurrection of ideas, not of the man Christ Jesus, let him mark that it rehearses just what the Evangelists record, and their minute and circumstantial testimony leaves no shadow of doubt as to what they meant. Paul makes the same statements, adding his personal experience. No witness ever testified more clearly and positively to a simple matter of fact, than he does to the literal resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ from the grave.

Mr. Frothingham cites a verse of this very chapter, and curiously foists upon it a subtile thought which is wholly modern, and contrary to the tenor of the entire passage. He says: "Christians appeal to the resurrection of Christ. But Paul, the original preacher of the resurrection, writes: 'If there be no resurrection of the dead then is Christ not risen.' None but believers in immortality will believe that Christ rose. The belief evidences the evidence; the fact follows the faith it could not create." That is what Mr. Frothingham would mean by such language. But to say that Paul meant it is to throw fair interpretation to the winds. Paul, throughout the chapter, is asserting the fact of a general resurrection of all men. He addresses those who seemed to doubt this while yet professing to be Christians. Now, says he, the very starting-point and foundation-stone of all Christian belief, is faith in a risen Savior. But his rising is the promise and pledge that we shall rise. To deny that we shall rise, is to cast away the first elements of Christianity. "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen." "But you, whom I address, believe that Christ did rise, so you must accept the natural consequence, the resurrection of all men." The turn of thought is exactly in Paul's characteristic style. The whole chapter is a proclamation of Paul's faith, at once sober, rational, and full of joyful hope, in the personal immortality of blessedness that awaits the good man.

But the idea which Mr. Frothingham forces most unnaturally upon Paul exactly expresses his own position. "The belief evidences the evidence." Build your theory, then fit the facts to it! It is the characteristic of Mr. Frothingham's school, to ignore all testimony but that of the "inner consciousness." They dream dreams, and set at naught the mental process of waking life. They take as their guide what they conceive to be "the spirit of the age," and ignore the greater and grander evidence furnished by the whole past life of the world. The whim of the present moment, a single tendency of a single generation, is to them the only real fact. But if they are satisfied to float on wings, let them not say there is no solid earth! Let them, as they easily can, throw aside for themselves the soberest and weightiest testimony of history. But we protest, in the name of honesty, against their perverting that teaching. Disbelieve Paul, since that suits you; but do not put your own words into his mouth!

We are by no means without sympathy for the aspirations and imaginings of those who, having given up Christianity, try to create for themselves a faith and hope like that they have lost. But we are not in the least degree tempted to follow them. They have exchanged the firm earth, with its greenness, and beauty, and comfort for every faculty and sense, for a region of thin ether, where the feet find no standing-place, and the lungs gasp for breath. Socrates, in his mingling of hope and doubt, stood in the twilight of dawn. Looking on him our hearts beat high; for he caught the radience of the rising sun, whose full glory was about to break upon the world. But they who in our age fall back on the uncertain longings of Socrates, have plunged from the day into a twilight beyond which lies black night. We cannot follow them. With the full conviction of our souls, we abide in the firm trust and glorious hope of that Gospel, through which Christ brought life and immortality to light.—Christian Union.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT—EARLY DOCTRINE.

Ecclesiastical history has been rightly advanced, of late years, to a prominent place among theological studies. He who is familiar with its teachings is armed against much that is erroneous in doctrine and practice. He detects in what arrogantly claim to be new and advanced positions, rendered necessary by the light of the present day, old exploded heresies. He sees, on the other hand, the empty pretensions of modern errorists, who would fain find shelter in the primitive church. The value of church history is increased by its relation to the pledge of Christ, to be ever with his church, and to guide his followers into the knowledge of gospel truth—a pledge which surely implies that spiritual believers, in distinction from mere outward professors, should be led into the discernment of the fundamental truths of the gospel scheme: such as human depravity and ruin, redemption through the death of Christ, regeneration by the Holy Spirit, and probation in this life preparatory to an abiding condition of happiness or misery, according to character, in the world to come.

We had occasion, in another place (the New Englander, April 1870), to apply this idea to the doctrine of the final salvation of all men, and to show that Universalism, however plausible in some of its aspects, has the suspicious mark of not having been the faith of the Christian church through the ages, but has been restricted to occasional individuals and obscure heretical sects. A writer in the Universalist Quarterly (Dr. Flanders), quoted in the New Covenant, resents and disputes this statement, and tries to show the contrary. He begins with the claim—so astonishing to orthodox interpreters—that the New Testament writers are all on his side, and that the faith of the church during the first century, as described by them, was Universalist! But this assertion simply begs the question; as we claim, and think we prove, exactly the reverse. The very matter in dispute is as to what is the doctrine of the New Testament, and what was the faith of the early church; and it is supposed that, after ordinary Biblical exegesis has been exhausted, some light may be obtained from the history of doctrine in the early church soon after the time of the apostles.

The writer referred to comes, after a while, to the true historical issue, and the boldness with which he meets it may be learned from this extract:

> Nor was the unity of the church broken with respect to this doctrine until many years after the death of John. The flood of Jewish and Pagan converts that swept into the church did not at once defile it. They brought with them, to be sure, their theological rags and tatters in abundance, but the corruption of the faith was at first imperceptible and very slow. Indeed, from A. D. 100 to A. D. 150, we find no trace, in the writings that remain to us of that period of the doctrine of endless punishment. Belonging to that period we have the following Christian works: The Firs, Epistle of Clemens Romanus; seven Epistles of Ignatius; the Epistle of Polycarp; the Epistle of Barnabas, and the Shepherd of Hermas. No mention of endless punishment appears in either of these works. They are as silent as the grave with respect to that doctrine. The church was still a unit on the doctrine of the ultimate restoration.

The reading of this passage caused us about as much amazement as do the Universalist interpretation of various Biblical texts; so contrary was it to all the impressions which we had received in the reading of the early Christian Fathers. That our readers may know the grounds of our amazement, and how little reliance is to be put in such unqualified assertions, we propose to quote a little from the writings referred to. But first we would premise that Dr. Flanders does not produce one word from them affirming the final salvation of all men, although he says that this was characteristically held by the early Christian church in opposition to Jewish and Pagan doctrine. He only dares to claim that their writings (although they do not mention the idea) do not deny it. How far even this is correct, we will now inquire, using for quotation the "Ante-Nicene Christian Library" as accessible to all.

Dr. Flanders refers us first to the First Epistle of Clement of Rome to the Corinthians. This was written to professed saints, to reprove practical disorders, and especially tendencies to schism; and so its author had no direct occasion to touch upon general questions of faith. Yet, incidentally, in urging motives to a holy life, he plainly reasons from the orthodox, and not from the Universalist point of view. He refers to future punishment as "condemnation," "judgment to come," and "death" (ch. 21: 33, 9); in a way implying finality. He limits the resurrection to the righteous of this world, "that have piously served him in the assurance of a good faith" (ch. 26); urges those to whom he wrote to "earnestly strive to be found in the number of those that wait for him, in order that we may share in his promised gifts;" warns the disobedient of coming wrath, "lest he tear you in pieces, like a lion, and there be none to deliver" (ch. 35), and from the danger of being "cast out from the hope of his people" (ch. 57); and nowhere holds out the slightest intimation of a restoration of the lost.

Dr. Flanders next specifies "the seven epistles of Ignatius." These appear in three forms, the longer and the shorter Greek and Syriac translation; and there is much dispute as to the relative origin and authority. The shorter Greek seems the most reliable. In the Epistle to the Ephesians we read (ch. 16) in the longer form: "If those that corrupt mere human families are condemned to death, how much more shall those suffer everlasting punishment who endeavor to corrupt the church of Christ, for which the Lord Jesus, the only begotten Son of God endured the cross, and submitted to death. Whosoever, 'being waxen fat' and 'become gross,' sets at naught his doctrine, shall go into hell." The shorter form says: "If then, those who do this as respects the flesh have suffered death, how much more shall this be the case with any one who corrupts by wicked doctrine, the faith of God, for which Jesus Christ was crucified. Such an one becoming defiled [in this way] shall go away into everlasting fire, and so shall every one that hearkens unto him." Similarly in the Epistle to the Magnesians (ch. 5 short form) he says; "These two things are simultaneously set before us—life and death; and every one shall go unto his own place." The longer form in ch. 11 uses the language: "He instantly dies, and that not a mere temporary death, but one that shall endure forever:" the shorter form gives only the first phrase. In the Epistle to the Romans (ch. 11) he quotes in the regular orthodox style, the language of Christ: "For what shall a man be profited, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" In the Epistle to the Smyrnæans, looking forward to coming retribution, (ch. 6), he declares that those who "believe not in the blood of Christ shall in consequence incur condemnation," or, in the longer form, "shall not obtain eternal life." Now as no hint is anywhere given by the writer, of a restoration of those thus left in punishment in the next life, such expressions plainly show that at that time the faith of the church coincided with the orthodox view.

As little fortunate is the reference of Dr. Flanders to his next witness, the Epistle of Polycarp; for that writer not only utters no word in favor of universal salvation, but plainly makes this life the decisive probation for the future world, and limits salvation to believers in Christ. Of Christ he says: "He comes as the judge of the living and the dead. His blood will God require of those who do not believe in him. But he who raised him up from the dead, will raise up us also, if we do his will and walk in his commandments and love what he loved." (ch. 2). Again, "If we please him in this present world, we shall receive also the future world, according as he has promised to us that he will raise us again from the dead, and that if we live worthy of him, 'we shall also reign together with him,' provided only we believe." (ch. 5). No Universalism taints any part of the epistle.

The Epistle of Barnabas is still more in the face of the strange assertion of Dr. Flanders. It is as silent as all the former witnesses concerning any doctrine of universal salvation, while it uses this plain language to the contrary: "We ought, therefore, brethren, carefully to inquire concerning our salvation, lest the wicked one having made his entrance by deceit, should hurl us forth from our [true] life." (ch. 2.) The Lord will judge the world without respect to persons. Each will receive as he has done: if he is righteous, his righteousness will precede him; if he is wicked the reward of wickedness is before him" (ch. 4). "But the way of darkness is crooked and full of cursing, for it is the way of eternal death [or, according to the Codex Sinaiticus, the eternal way of death] with punishment, in which way are the things that destroy the soul." (ch. 20). "He who keepeth these shall be glorified in the kingdom of God; but he who chooseth other things shall be destroyed with his works. On this account there will be a resurrection, on this account a retribution." (ch. 21.)

Now let us hear Dr. Flanders' last witness. The Shepherd of Hermas. He is like his predecessors on the stand, and has not a syllable to utter, either about universal salvation, or the final restoration of those sent to hell; but he tells only of their death and destruction; and of probation in the present life. Thus in Similitude Fourth we read: "But the heathen and sinners, like the withered trees which you saw, will be found to be those who have been withered and unfruitful in that world, and shall be burnt as wood, and [so] made manifest, because their actions were evil during their lives. For the sinners shall be consumed, because they sinned and did not repent, and the heathen shall be burned, because they knew not him who created them." In Similitude Sixth it is said of apostates, that "they have torn themselves from God forever," and that "among them there is no return to life through repentance, because they have added to their other sins, and blasphemed the name of the Lord. Such men, therefore, are appointed unto death.....Corruption then has a hope of a kind of renewal, but death has everlasting ruin." In Similitude Eighth we read of the same class: "These therefore at the end were lost unto God, and you see that not a single one of them repented.... From such life depart....All who will not repent have lost their lives ....repentance involves life to sinners, but non-repentance death." And as many as do not repent at all, but abide in their deeds, shall utterly perish." Once more, in Similitude Ninth (ch. 23) we read: "For this reason, they who have not known God and do evil, are condemned to death; but they who have seen his mighty works, and still continue the evil, shall be chastised doubly, and shall die forever." And then the writer goes on to argue against the possibility of their repentance, saying (ch. 19): "To these repentance is not open; but death lies before them."

Our readers can now judge how much or how little confidence is to be placed in the declarations of a disputant who, having claimed (without a single quotation from their writings) the five earliest Christian writers after the apostles, boldly says: "No mention of endless punishment appears in either of these works. They are silent as the grave with respect to that doctrine. The church was still a unit on the doctrine of the ultimate restoration!" We see not how it can be that Dr. Flanders has ever read the writers whom he thus utterly misrepresents. He must have relied on the assertion of some one who has sadly misled him as to the facts. Surely no one who reads the authors referred to would imagine that they, or those to whom they wrote, held to the final salvation of all men. The only possible question that can be raised is, Whether these writers did not believe in the annihilation rather than in the restoration of the wicked? Having thus exposed the worthlessness of our reviewer's statements concerning the earliest Christian Fathers, we need not follow him at present farther down the line of church history, as to which his testimony is of equally small value.—Advance.

A NEWSPAPER NUISANCE.

The Lutheran Observer well remarks that the amount of space given in our daily newspapers to reports of billiard matches and "tournaments," "skating congresses," base-ball clubs and games, "horse-races" and "yacht-races," and many other contests of this kind, are a public nuisance and ought to be abated at once. Whatever may be said in favor of some of them on the score of benefit from athletic exercise, they are all more or less demoralizing to the young, and most of them are merely schemes of gambling for gamblers, and of robbery for thieves and pickpockets, by which thousands of our young men are trained for vice and villainies of all kinds.

The space and consideration given to these immoral practices by the public papers affords them some show of respectability, and many young and thoughtless persons fond of sport are attracted by them, led into vicious company and ruined. If the respectable press would cease to give encouragement to these demoralizing sports by not reporting them, they would soon sink to their low and disreputable level in the general public estimation, and few respectable persons would be attracted and debased by them.

COTTAGE GROVE Q. M.

It is now in the past, but we think it will long be remembered by those who were privileged to attend. There were Adventists from West St. Paul, Newport, Pine Bend and Hastings, in Minn.; from Prescott, Clifton, Trimbelle and River Falls, in Wis.

The preaching was by E. T. Himes and Sr. Dubey. Three were baptized at the close of the morning service, and the baptism was one of the most beautiful scenes ever witnessed. The candidates going down into the water, being buried and raised and coming up out of the water, will long remain in our memory. After the p. m. service the Lord's Supper was administered to all who would partake, and some of the Baptist brethren took part with us. Then came the parting, and although we were sorry to part with the brethren and sisters, we parted in joyful anticipation of a meeting at the Marriage Supper of the Master.

One brother, who saw a well filled wagon from Wisconsin drive up, said he thought, "There comes a load of curiosity seekers!" but when he entered the school-house, instead of seeing them huddled into a corner, as he had expected, he found them scattered through the congregation with a Minstrel or a Harp open in their hands. In a subsequent conversation he said, that "there was something about the Advent doctrine that he could hang on to!" A Methodist sister over seventy years of age walked three miles to attend with us.

The little church did nobly. Each one from abroad, as he came, was provided with a home; and at the family altars and hospitable boards, the strangers were soon made to feel at home. It soon seemed, as a young brother said, that "they had known them ever so long." We hope that each one (and we think they did) went home with a firm determination to be more faithful to the Master.

And now a word about attending meeting: Let each one who loves the coming of the Lord make some sacrifice to attend meetings at a distance. We shall all be acquainted in the kingdom; why not commence the acquaintance now? Go to all the meetings you can. Get all the rich blessings there are in God's store-house for you, and then work, work, WORK! That is what God wishes you to do. Will you do it?

DANIEL.

SHALL WE SUPPORT ERROR?

In glancing over the pages of the "Freeman," Baptist newspaper, of April 14th, 1871, I noticed an editorial comment on Mr. Froude's analysis of the origin of error; the language and the reasoning of which I think remarkably good and conclusive. The writer, in reference to "Baptismal regeneration," says as follows:—"Faith in baptismal regeneration was born in the darkness, not in the light. It is a direct result of the prevalence of ignorance and superstition. It was founded not on a truth, but upon a lie. 'With imposture,' continues Mr. Froude, 'all genuine love for spiritual and moral truth disappeared.' Why then are we chargeable with want of charity when we assert the same? Our argument is that baptismal regeneration is a lie; and, therefore, that the teaching of it is an immoral act. If so, we hold that whatever favors, countenances, or gives even a shadow of patronage to such teaching must be also proportionately immoral."

Now, dear sir, I would submit to yourself and your readers that the above quotation—changing or substituting the term "eternal suffering" for "baptismal regeneration"—exactly applies to the case of those of us who most conscientiously believe that ENDURING LIFE, under any condition, or in any sense of the word, is only for those who are redeemed by his death who is "The Resurrection and the Life;" and who reject as an antiscriptural falsehood and demoralizing delusion the notion of eternal suffering and its parent untruth, the natural immortality of the soul.

If the term "gospel" means "good news," this notion is surely no gospe at all either to sinner or saint, nor any part of any gospel.

Therefore, I would ask the question, Are we justified in contributing our money or worldly substance for the support of men or institutions that presistently uphold this delusion? If we do so, are we not justly chargeable with aiding and abetting this falsehood?

In mooting this question, I feel that I am treading on delicate ground; but it has often arisen in my mind, accompanied with a wish that some one of your able and judicious correspondents would write upon it.

If you deem the above suitable for a place in your valuable magazine, I will thank you to give it insertion at your convenience, and am yours in much esteem.—Angus Secundus, in Rainbow.

PRAY RIGHT UP.—Some years ago a slave in Virginia named Jack was remarkable for his knowledge of the gospel, and especially for his freedom from all gloomy fears in regard to his future eternal happiness.

A professing Christian, a white man, who was a very different temperament, once said to him: "Jack, you seem to be always happy. I wish you would tell me how you manage to keep steadily in this blessed frame of mind."

"Why, massa," replied Jack, "I just fall flat on the promise, and I pray right up!"

How many desponding Christians there are who might profit by these words of the happy slave, now a freedman!

We perfectly endorse Dr. Lightfoot's bold and contemptuous statement: "The papist saith, Scripture is not sufficient to instruct all things of religion. True; not of the Romish religion. For the rags that patch that, you must go to some broker; for the Divine wardrobe of the Scripture hath none such, viz: the orders of monks and friars; pilgrimages; the single life o the clergy; salt, oil, spittle in baptism; tapers at the communion; processions; praying to, and for, the dead; and a thousand other trinklements and trumperies. Scripture never knew any such base ware,—we must go to some kind of shop for it. And that pedlar, with them, is 'Tradition'!"

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE.

WEDNESDAY, May 31. Came to Earlville, Ill., where I met with old fellow-laborers, many of whom were among the first in the western movement. I spoke at night on the position we now occupy, standing on the threshold of the kingdom. Many spoke, and were in good cheer.

THURSDAY, June 1. Preaching this p. m. by Eld. Hoge, on the resurrection. It was a precious season. At night by Sr. Rathbun, who has just been received into the Conference as a laborer in the vineyard. She has a good education, and the grace of God in her heart, a strong love of souls, with good health, to endure toil and fatigue. May the Lord make her useful.

Reports from the ministers and churches have been good and healthful. The cause has some trials, but they are working for good. What is needed is more good pastors. And this is the need everywhere. The Lord raise up such laborers, effective workers and organizers.

FRIDAY, June 2. The Association transacted the business of the present session harmoniously, as reported elsewhere. Our prospects are good. With unity and industry, we shall still go on and prosper. I have already seen more success than I dared expect in this western field, and am satisfied. Praise God!

At night came to Chicago and put up with Br. Wm. Hines, where God's servants have always found a home and a welcome. I learn that Br. Burr has found a welcome in the church here, is doing well, and is much beloved by them.

SATURDAY, June 3. Returned home, where I find all well. Things are working finely at the office, which is like a bee-hive just now, many hands being busily engaged. We are doing all we can with the means we have to do with.

SUNDAY, June 4. Assisted Br. Ferriss in the services to-day, and at night took the cars for appointments East.

MONDAY, June 5. Arrived at Detroit at 4 a. m., where I spent the day. Work done, at night I took the Great Western Railway of Canada for the East. All passed on well with us till at 2 a. m. the watchman gave the signal for us to stop, and informed us that the bridge over Black Creek four miles from Paris Station, was broken down, and twenty-four freight cars had been smashed up in the chasm below. Our passengers walked over the citizen's bridge near by, and the baggage was transferred, when we took the train from the East, and the Eastern passengers took our train for the West. The officers and men on the Road were efficient and kind, doing all they could for the comfort of the passengers. It was wonderful in such a terrible accident that none were killed, and the brakeman only slightly injured. The engine, tender, and one car crossed before the bridge gave way. The rest of the train, twenty-four cars was all stove to pieces.

And again it is remarkable, that while many passenger and freight trains have been passing over this bridge daily, that it should have fallen at last with a freight and not a passenger train. Had it gone over safely at 10 p. m. our train, with ten heavily loaded cars might have broken through, in which case there would have been not less than four hundred men, women, and children destroyed. I do not see how one could have escaped mutilation or death. We were grateful to Divine Providence which saved us from so great a calamity.

Some said that the employees of the Road were to blame, as the masonry had in part given way the night before, but this was a mistake. The mason work did give way and let the bridge down, but all supposed it safe until its fall. The officers of this Road are careful men, and feel the responsibility of the immense freight of human beings daily committed to their care. They are doing all that can be done for the comfort and safety of their passengers. This Great Central Route is the most safe and convenient and poplar road East.

I have traveled many hundred thousand miles over all kinds of roads, and also by sea, river, and lake; but up to this time I have met with no serious accident. Accidents have often occurred before me and behind me; but they have not come upon me. I think I feel grateful to God who has thus far preserved me. After this detention, by which I was kept three nights upon the road, and got but little rest, I arrived in Boston June 7 in health and safety.

The persons I principally wished to see being in Salem at Conference, I took the cars for that city. I went to the old Sewell St. Chapel, where the Advent church now worship, Eld. E. Barnes being the pastor. I found the the meetings in session and Br. Cotton was preaching. At the close we had many good testimonies. This was a quarterly session of the Massachusetts Conference. They are getting into order, and rising in all their interests. This being a portion of my old field for many long years, from 1830 to 1854, I felt quite at home, though but few of the old Elders and brethren remain. But new ones are being raised up, and the cause yet lives.

I spoke at night on the present rest which we enjoy by faith, and the final rest that remains to the people of God, and after the close of the services returned to Boston.

From Br Hiram Munger.

About your having the Crisis or TIMES free, belongs to the Business Agent to say. Perhaps you are unworthy of it. You had better get some one to apply who knows you, and the rules of the Association, instead of a stranger. I know of some who follow up our meetings for the loaves and fishes, who are able to pay for the paper, and something for the preaching, wood, lights, rent, etc., etc., and do nothing. I have advised the Association to stop such papers, and all preachers knowing such facts ought to report them. It is a duty.

Again, you want me to come to your place when the Lord sends me. Now, brother, if the Lord sends by impressions, he can as well tell the place as you can; as he did Philip to go south, where he found the eunoch searching the prophecies, and needed help to understand what he read. I do not go out by impressions into a strange place, not knowing the circumstances, and what the prospect is for doing good. You tell how far it is from the railroad, but nothing about the place to preach in, whether a house, or barn, or lot, or whether the people have an ear to hear. I do not feel any inclination to go. There are some few left among us who go on such a fanatical call as yours, and if I should give your name and place, you would have them there at once, two or three of them perhaps; and probably would disgust every good, sound-minded person in the place, and the doctrine would be held up in contempt, as it has been heretofore. If you are going to start a meeting, first consider it well, or get some one that can, and count the cost. There are others on the protracted-meeting committee beside me, who are nearer to you than I am. Apply to them, for I do not feel it a call from the Lord or any one else.

Another inquiry. Can you come and preach for us? Our meetings are running down. The people seemed interested when the meetings first started, and if Br. G. had stayed longer we should have been stronger. Some of us had just begun to see the light, and supposed all Advent preachers were competent to give us light, and we received it all honestly; but soon we found two or three different positions preached, and we got confused and divided in feeling. Some wanted one and some another, or they would not help support the meetings. And here we are; a few of us have all the burdens to bear; others act as outsiders, unless their particular man comes. And as you have had a long experience, we ask your advice. What shall we do? As there are a number of similar letters of late, I feel to answer them thus publicly.

Dear Brethren: No infallible advice can be given. It is a difficult task, in these times of crumbling up of powers, to hold people together. It is equally difficult to know what to do. If there are two or three different sets among you, some for Paul, and some for Apollos, and you have the burden to bear, and yet your meetings are losing their interest, and outsiders are not benefited, I advise you to give them up for a while, at least, and pay your money in some other direction. where you can see it doing more good. If the people have tried sufficiently to decide, and have not taken a stand for the truth enough to help bear their part of the burden, you are justified in giving up trying to draw a dead carcass, or a useless one.

There is another advisable position. In some places there are two or three different parties of interest, and one has as good a right as another to send for their favorite preachers, whether it meets with general favor or not. In such cases, which are becoming more frequent than formerly, such as can agree any way might have a parish committee chosen, according to the laws under which we live, and are commanded to obey, when they do not conflict with the laws of God or good order. The members of this committee are the only ones to take and pay out monies for the society, or church, lawfully; or to pay for building, or repairing, or hiring a place of worship, etc., etc. I see no other way for those who feel it duty to keep up meetings, and work with those of the same mind, which all have a right to do, according to the laws of God and man. In this way you will get rid of the chaff, and perhaps some few kernels of wheat may go off, as in all cases of winnowing. We, as a people, have suffered on account of the want of order, and all know it. "But what shall we do?" comes from many directions, and that is the question to answer. In some places this course would not be advisable, and in others the difficulties could not be settled in any other way than for those to associate together who can work together, or give up your meeting. Now you must decide which is the best in your cases. To be sure it will be called a division by some, and so it may prove, as it did with the Israelites when they were commanded to give up their strange women and wives, that the cause of God might prosper.

We are getting into a strange fix, and the devil wants to destroy this truth. It is better to have a mortified limb taken off, if the whole body must die if kept on. There are different ways to be prevent mortification; some times to cut off, but not when other means will do better

Now, as I have answered your inquiries in part, take such a course about taking this advice as you think proper, or ask some other preachers of experience, and you will get nearly the same advice. There is an increasing desire to hear, in many places, on these great truths, and the enemy will try in various ways to hinder the light from shining. We have a variety of trials and perplexities to contend with. One came upon me the other day, which I will mention. It was new to me, and perhaps to others. I was requested to preach on two particular subjects, and it was advertised in the city papers to be in the City Hall. So I took some facts, texts, and items of history, on bits of paper for the occasion to help my memory. Getting tired of sitting, a brother asked me to go over the bridge and see them fish. We got part way when there came a whirlwind and took my hat off up into the air, notes and all, two letters, and a silk handkerchief. The hat and letters being heavier fell into the river a few rods above the dam; but the notes being a light affair, went up, I do not know where. A man on the bulk-head tried to reach the hat, and over it went. He and Br. Doe ran down the factory yard to get a boat, and I after them bareheaded, with my long overcoat, and somewhat excited of course. On I ran after the two other men. Some of the girls and boys seeing such a spectacle as I was coming toward them, dodged out of the yard into the factory like rats into their holes for safety, probably thinking I was chasing the two men, and if the men were running to get away from me, they had better. I think they thought I was a crazy man. I found the boat locked, and the hat floating some four rods below the dam, and no way to get to it without swimming, which I was too old to do. As there was no head in the hat, it soon sank to rise no more. The next thing was something to wear, as the wind blew, and I was taking cold. Br. Doe got an old cap from an Irishman, too large for me, and I passed up through the factory yard looking for my handkerchief. This made me look more like a crazy man than before, and such a hooting from the help I never endured before. But I found my handkerchief, and got out of that scrape as quick as possible.

Going back, Br. Doe said that was the work of the devil, for he was the prince and power of the air. But here I was, hat gone, letters gone, and notes going yet, probably, for the last I saw of them they were two or three hundred feet in the air. After getting settled in my mind, I had a good laugh to myself, and you may if you see it as I did. Here sits the man, with this old cap on, who is going to preach in the City Hall in Dover, who has lost his hat and notes, and frightened the factory girls. Did I not look comical to myself? I hope, brethren, you may not have a trial like this.

I got the loan of a hat from a widow, and as there was not a hat store in South Berwick, I had to walk to Salmon Falls, and bought another. I wrote more letters, and let the notes go to the devil, if he wanted them, as Br. Doe said, and preached Sabbath without them, to a large congregation of attentive listeners, on the signs of our times, and origin of Spiritualism. A good many strangers were out to hear for the first time. Perhaps the scrape in the factory yard about the old hat called out some from curiosity, for it was a strange affair, and I felt strange, and looked strange to strangers. But my mind has got settled now under a new hat, and am on my way home rejoicing that my head was not in the hat over the dam.

The next week the following appeared in the Dover Gazette: "At the City Hall, Rev. Hiram Munger, the distinguished Adventist, had a large audience, and held up to view, in tones of burning eloquence, the religious tenets of their worship. He is reckoned one of the heaviest guns in their denomination, and his remarks had a telling effect."

From W H Reese, La Crosse, Wis.

I would still say to all of like precious faith that I am striving to do my Master's will, and in my weak way earnestly contending for that faith once delivered to the saints, which we must have in order to make us pure in heart. I am also "looking for that blessed hope and glorious appearing of our Savior." Oh! how I long to see that day, the day for which all other days were made. Who shall be able to stand in that day! Shall I? This should be the question of every one.

Brethren and sisters, especially those that I have been identified with the past few years, I want to be remembered by you in your prayers, that I may with you be able to stand before him with confidence and not be ashamed at his coming. We must be faithful. I am deprived of meetings of our faith, as there are none in this city that are preaching the near coming of our Savior, and his kingdom on this earth. There are four living in this city that I know, of our faith, and our prayer is (and I hope others will join), that the Lord will direct some one to this place to proclaim that the time for the end of all things temporal is at hand, and Jesus is soon to come, that there may be a people here looking and ready for his appearing. Any of our preaching brethren passing through this way will find a place to stop by calling on Wm. H. Reese, Corner of 12th and Market Sts., La Crosse, Wis.

From L P Berry, Amita, Iowa.

Seeing a notice in THE TIMES of a Conference to be held in this County, at Troublesome Creek, we made inquiries and learned that it was only three miles from where we live. Accordingly last Sabbath a wagon load of us started for the place of meeting. On arriving there we found the school-house well filled with an intelligent and attentive congregation, who appeared deeply interested in the discourse on the prophecy of Daniel by Eld. Kent, from Page Co. He seems to be a very plain, clear and able speaker. May God bless him abundantly in the dispensation of his truth. Though all there were strangers to us, we felt "at home" among them; with the sweet assurance that we were members of the same family. Br. and Sr. Macomber were there from Lewis, and Eld. Morphy from Atlantic, who preaches there every two weeks. Some other brethren and sisters were present with whom we formed a pleasant acquaintance; and were glad to meet, out on these western prairies, a people of like precious faith. They are doing a good work here, and the truth is spreading. Our hearts rejoiced and were comforted while the brethren spoke of the end of all things, and the king that is to reign in righteousness, and the day of deliverance to all God's dear people, soon to be ushered in; and rest, eternal, quiet and peaceful, will then be their everlasting portion.

It is a remarkable fact, that the prejudice of education does so blind the understandings of men, that the plain truths of the Bible are entirely disregarded, or overlooked. For instance, we have been taught, that death is only an exchange of modes of existence, a passage to life on a more enlarged scale. That mortality and immortality exist together. The body returns to dust, and the soul goes to happiness or misery. Strange as this may appear, thousands believe Satan rather than God "Thou shalt not surely die" is believed when it is positively declared by the Bible, "the soul that sinneth it shall die." Again we are taught, that there is a natural birth, and at the age of accountability, a spiritual death in trespasses and in sin. Repentance and remission of sins is called the second birth in Christ. Then comes a temporal death, returning to dust, and another remarkable birth, at the resurrection of the dead the immortal part of man beholding from the portals of heaven its former body coming forth, clothed with immortality. I cannot see any consistency in teaching the doctrine that there are three deaths, and yet man liveth through them all. The Bible speaks of two births only, and but one death shall have any effect upon the righteous. They shall not taste of the second death. The wicked alone are doomed to die that death.

The Advent doctrine introduced here by S. P. Whitney has had much opposition. The Bible, being thoroughly investigated on the subject by many has caused a great change in the minds of the public and has abated much of the former prejudice against the teaching. The energy, perseverence and Christian deportment of Br. Whitney, have made him many strong friends. The cause is prospering in his hands, and many new churches have been organized in the wilds of West Virginia.

ANOTHER NEW RELIGIOUS SECT.

A new religious sect has made its appearance in Vienna, and has notified its existence and programme to the Ministerial authorities. The new community will bear the names of "Confessors of the Message of Truth, Liberty and Love," and their creed is as follows:

"1. We acknowledge the world to be a unity of infinite space and time, the creative energy of which we call 'Weltgeist.' 2. We acknowledge that humanity is one of the innumerable forms in which the 'Weltgeist' manifests himself in the series of his developments. We acknowledge that humanity is progressing in all ways, and we declare it to be every man's task to assist in this improvement with all his powers. 3. We acknowledge the indestructibility of the essence in all the phenomena of the 'Weltgeist,' and consequently also in men, and we, therefore, consider death to be only the transition into a new form of temporal existence. 4. We acknowledge that there must be a retribution for all actions; but this is only of a temporal nature. 5. We acknowledge that all these actions are good which are in harmony with the principle of the essence, equality, of all men, and which tend to the progress of humanity. All actions not in accordance with this are objectionable. 6. We acknowledge the notion of 'God' as the idea of absolute perfection, to be a postulate of human reason."

The ethics of the "Message" are:

"1. The commands of liberty: Be moderate, be calm, be true, be clean, be industrious, be economical. 2. The commands of justice are: Offend not, illtreat not, kill not, cheat not, steal not, rob not. 3. The commands of love are: Be courteous to all, be compassionate with the unhappy, be cheerful with the happy, assist the poor, tend the sick, and protect the weak."

The head of this new sect is Dr. Hippolyt Tauschinsky, and its president the weaver Herr Kajetan Schadle, of Funfhaus, Vienna. Nothing is as yet stated regarding the form of worship to be adopted in the new community, or as to the number of its adherents.—Pall Mall Gazette.

PREACHING FOR THE TIMES.

Don't you think this is an age of progress, and that of all peoples of all past ages and of the present we are the people? Don't you think we ought to have a bran-new religion, giving the old—all the old—to the moles and bats? Or, have you been dozing while the world has rushed ahead (and especially the church), insomuch that you cannot appreciate the present status? By the way, what is anything old good for—old boots, old hats, old creeds, old dogmas, and all that is old? Why not begin de nova, and leaving behind the guide-boards and mile-posts of the way, strike for a new religion, a new Bible, new preachers, and new preaching, &c., &c.? Why, we used to think that something of sanctity attached to the Sabbath and the sanctuary, and that they who bear the vessels of the Lord should be men of clean hands and pure hearts—that men should keep holy the Sabbath-day, and reverence the sanctuary of the Lord; and that under-shepherds should be examples to the Lord's flock, leading them into green pastures and by the side of still waters; used to think that churches, especially orthodox churches, and the Sabbath, were for the ministry of the gospel—Christ, and him crucified—the wisdom and the power of God; that men in the pulpit should convince of sin, lead to Christ, build up in the faith of the gospel, and do this to some extent in every sermon. But all this nonsense pales in the rare light of the "philosophy" of to-day. There was a semblance of the divine about all this; and the fathers (and some of us are getting along in years) thought that this was the right idea. But the Bible says, "Behold, I make all things new," and we must be abreast with the spirit of the age; and preaching must be in accord with the genius of an advanced civilization. Allow that Wesley and Fletcher and Whitefield and Watson and others of the same class did tolerably well in their day, what is that to us? Don't the world move? And haven't we reached a higher plane than they occupied? Suppose that they had the same Bible that we have, and read it in the same languages in which it was first given; and suppose they experienced pardon and adoption and purity and all the fullness of God; and suppose thousands were awakened and converted, and led into purity, and the exemplification of all Christian virtues, and as they went on in their work of faith and labor of love they should > "See how great a flame aspires,

> Kindled by a spark of grace,
> Jesus' love the nations fires,
> Sets the kingdoms on a blaze."

What of all that? Didn't they go on with all gravity in that old humdrum way, preaching repentance and faith, heaven and hell, warning the people, after the manner of Paul, from house to house, night and day with tears! Haven't we got beyond all that? And can you expect the sparkling, progressive mind of this day to be hampered with such cast-behind ideas and modes? Just as though we are to hold forever past the old story of Jesus and his love—that he is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and even that the gospel was preached before unto Abraham.

Preaching for the times! What of it? 1. It must draw, because (a) thus the exchequer of the church is supplied; and (b), more especially because thus only can the preacher get into the papers, and scrape the sky. 2. It must be studiously wrapped about with the drapery of sensationalism, so as to ad captandum vulgus. Sensationalism! Did I write that word? Well—but I will not write what was almost on the point of my pen. Preaching for the times! Oh! where is the precious, dear old gospel? and where the men, moved of God, to preach it, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven? "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest."—California Christian Advocate.

Conference Minutes

Conference secretaries will please make their reports as interesting as possible. This can be done by making them condensed and pointed, and by omitting all statements of mere forms.

MINNESOTA Q. M.

The first Quarterly meeting for the year 1871, of the Winona District, convened in the State Tent at Elliots, Filmore Co., on Friday eve., May 26, continuing over Sunday.

Elds. Bursell, Allen, Mitson, Wilcox, Walker and Wellcome were present. During the meeting the following resolutions were passed, viz:

The following brethren were appointed by the President, Eld. Wm. J. Bursell, to constitute said committee Eld. T. K. Allen, Winona, and Brn. McCabe and Smith, of Burr Oak.

Resolved, That this committee shall have power to consult the different churches, and in vacant fields of labor within the bounds of this district, in order to ascertain the wants of the people and destitute places, to be supplied with preaching. This committee shall also consult with the ministers whose labors they may think the cause demands, and when they get their assent to fill the appointments that they may make, it will be the imperative duty of all such ministers to fill the appointments.

Resolved, That those churches that have or may have preaching, be urged to look after the wants of such preachers as may labor among them, and see that they are properly remunerated.

Adjourned to meet at Utica, Winona Co., Friday Sept., 1, 1871.

It being a busy time of year the attendance was not large, but we hope and pray that good may result from our meeting. Thanks are due to Br. Wm. J. Bursell and others, for their kindness and hospitality to brethren abroad. God bless them.

Rochelle. Elds. H G. McCullock and D. S. Clark pastors. Organized Jan. 15, 1871, by Elds. E. H. Burington and S. B. Mabey. Number of members, nineteen. Number baptised during the year, eight. Preaching every two weeks. Prayer-meetings, four a week. Average attendance, twenty. Others are in full sympathy and will unite soon.

Earl. L. H. Davis, pastor. Have a good growing interest. Preaching every two weeks. Eld. McCullock and Sr. Mansfield have labored with them profitably to the church.

Shabbona. Very small. Reduced by deaths and removals from over eighty to ten or twelve members. Br. Spencer preaches once in two weeks. Good interest here.

Aurora. Reported by A. Spaulding. Organized some time since with good interest. but an intruding element caused division. Later Bru. Himes, Smith and Buroughs have labored with them. Are now doing all they can to sustain the cause. Brethren are invited to visit them. Have about thirty members. Prayer-meeting each week.

Ancona. A good church and interest to hear in regions beyond. Under the care of Bru. Buroughs, Bailey and others, they hope to prosper. Twenty-five to thirty members.

Moline. Fifteen members. Hold meetings every Sabbath.

Long Point. Church steadfast, holding on to the faith. Several additions. Condition good. Eld. Buroughs labored with them one fourth of the time the past year.

Toulon. Reported by Br. H. Willett. Organized July 17, 1870. Members nine. Prayer-meeting once a week.

Providence. Reported by H. N. Bliss. A few faithful ones, who contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and are waiting for consummation of the blessed hope.

We omit farther report in detail of churches and Ministers. Upon the whole the prospect is cheering. The facts show that by the earnest faithful efforts of the ministry and churches, the cause is onward. The new additions of churches and members, tend to convince us that the efforts put forth have not been in vain in the Lord; and should time continue we may look for more work to be done. The field is large. The faithful laborers few. But shall we as faithful people of the Lord try and bring in many sheaves to crown the result of our labors when Jesus comes?

MISCELLANEOUS RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, that Art. 8 of the Constitution be so amended as to make the Vice President a member of the Board.

Resolved, That the Board be recommended to negotiate with the W. A. C. P. Association, for such of the campmeeting fixtures as may be needed by the Conference Campmeeting.

Resolved. That a campmeeting be held at Amboy the coming season. A committee of five brethren was elected to appoint the time, and make all necessary arrangements, as follows. D. S. Clark, Wm. McCullock, R. P. Hoge, J. W. Buroughs, W. T. Baker.

WHEREAS, a campmeeting has been appointed to be held at Long Point, Livingston Co. the coming season for the benefit of the cause of Christ in that vicinity, therefore,

Resolved, That we approve of the same, and do recommend that the Campmeeting Committee assist in promoting the interest of the said meeting and to so arrange the two campmeetings, at Amboy and Long Point, as not to conflict in time or interest.

Resolved, That the time of the Annual Session of the Conf. of Northern Illinois be changed to January, about the full moon at the last of the month.

Voted, to grant to Br. J. R. Towle of Earle, by his request, a letter of dismissal, as follows:

To whom it may concern: Greeting. This is to certify that our beloved Br. J. R. Towle has our Christian love, respect, confidence and sympathy. And by common consent, and mutual agreement, is kindly relieved of all obligations as a minister of said Conference.

Done this day June 2, 1871.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted and presented to Br. Buroughs for his consideration, and a reply requested:

Resolved, That if Br. Buroughs will state, that he is in full sympathy with the Northern Illinois Advent Christian Conference in its constitutional arrangement and work, we hereby agree to withdraw the charges preferred by the Board.

Br. Buroughs in open Conference declared his sympathy with the objects of the Conference and that he would heartily co-operate with his brethren in its constitutional order and work. And that he would, also, use his influence to unite the churches he has organized and may build up, with the Conference of which he himself is a member.

The brethren and churches in Southern Illinois, in the vicinity of Jonesboro, were invited to hold quarterly Conferences, as per our constitution, and Brn. Lawver, Thomason, and Spann to act as officers of the same.

The Conference was well represented, although many more desired to attend who were detained at home by the pressing business of the season. The preaching was good. On the Sabbath three were buried by baptism in likeness of Christ's death, and raised to walk in newness of life. Two united with the church at Earl, receiving the right hand of fellowship from Br. Davis. We hope that the cause may continue to flourish, and receive a new impetus from this meeting. Truly, as we contrast the present time with the past few years, we are lead to exclaim, What hath God wrought in our midst? It is the Lord's doings and marvelous in our eyes. Unity and harmony prevailed; our hearts were cheered, and we are encouraged to labor more earnestly for the salvation of the perishing.

S. B. MABEY, Sec'y.

—A deacon in Illinois objected to the organ purchased by his church, and when called upon to close the service with prayer said: "Call on the machine! If it can sing the glory of God it can pray, too. Call on the machine!"

C. C. MARSTON.

IOWA

The Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting will be held on the old camp ground at New Hartford, Butler Co., commencing June 22, and continuing until July 3. Brethren and sisters and all who can, come to this meeting. We are anticipating a great blessing from the Lord. The prospect is the best this year for a good meeting that we have ever had. There is to be many ministers present. Br. C. C. Ramsay of Chicago will be with us all through the meeting again this year.

Hay, straw and tent frames furnished free of charge.   ALONZO RAYMOND, Sec'y.

Partial arrangements have been made for the Chicago Tent, as well as the Iowa Mission Tent. This will give us a larger range of accommodations than we have heretofore enjoyed. We learn that many think of attending who have never been present before. We hope all the preachers will come and attend the feast. To secure this the brethren at New Hartford propose to provide provision for those who may need to cook for themselves and families. Other churches may assist in this, if they can. Be sure and provide those things necessary for yourselves in camp. The meeting will commence June 22. The campmeeting proper, on the Monday following, and continue until July 3. See notice.

PETER S. W. DETO.

The Iowa Christian Conference will hold its fifteenth Annual Session, in connection with the Christian Mission Campmeeting, at New Hartford, Iowa, commencing June 22. Let ministers and delegates be present. Ministers are required to report, by letter if not present, by the constitution. I cannot say positively when Conference will sit, probably June 27 or 28, as may be thought best for the interest of the meeting. All are cordially invited to come.

JOB GILDERSLEVE, Pres.
ALONZO RAYMOND, Sec'y.

MINNESOTA.

The Annual Minnesota Campmeeting will be held at Kasota, beginning June 27, and closing Sunday eve., July 2. Kasota is a station on the St. Paul and Sioux city R. R., about three miles above St. Peter. The Winona and St Peter R. R., also (which is just completed) runs within half a mile of the camp ground, making this point most convenient for a general gathering from the different parts of the State.

MINNESOTA CAMP-MEETING.

Friends in the south and western parts of the State will have no inconvenience in changing cars or staging, as heretofore, and those coming from the Northern part will have but a few more miles to travel

We trust that the liberal arrangements that we have made with the railroad companies will induce our brethren to make a grand rally and come to this meeting in such numbers as will show to the world that we are in earnest in our work of preparing a people for our soon-coming King. We have but a little while to work; now is the time to toil and sacrifice in this good cause; the resting time will soon be here, when our labors will cease.

In regard to tent accommodations we would say that the State tent will be pitched, and arrangements made to give homes in it to those not otherwise provided for; but we trust that those living in the vicinity, and all others that can, will erect family tents of cotton cloth or lumber. Those coming in wagons can make a roof with a few yards of cotton, and secure a very comfortable sleeping place in that way. Let all begin immediately to make their preparations to attend, and come with hearts warm in the Savior's love, ready to work for the salvation of perishing men.

HALF FARE RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

Persons going to the meeting on the Winona and St. Peter R. R. will ask for excursion tickets to the Advent camp-meeting at Kasota, for which they will pay full fare and it will return them free.

Those going on the St. Paul and Sioux City R. R. will buy tickets for Advent camp meeting at Kasota, for which they will pay full fare, but be sure and ask for a return ticket, which will be granted free.

Tickets on both roads will be good from Saturday, June 24, to Wednesday, July 5, inclusive.

Board will be furnished at reasonable rates for those who may desire it; but all that can are requested to come prepared to board themselves, and let all come provided with bedding, and those having no tents will be furnished with lodgings in the State tent.

A grocery and refreshment stand will be kept for the accommodation of the camp; also feed for horses.

Arrangements have been made for extra trains on Sunday, July 2, from Mankato and St. Peter.

We anticipate the largest gathering of Adventists ever held in the State of Minnesota, and shall welcome saint and sinner to this our annual feast, trusting all will pray that it may result in much good.   EDWIN T HIMES,
Chairman of Committee.

P. S.—For further particulars address me at Winona, Minn. Box 724. There will be services on the ground Sunday, June 25.

MICHIGAN.

The Annual Campmeeting of the Michigan Conference will be held at Jackson, on the Fair Grounds, commencing Monday June 19, and will continue over the following Sunday.

Ministers and delegates are requested to come early and remain throughout the meeting. Let the churches see to appointing delegates at once.

Board will be provided on the ground at twenty-five cents a meal. Those who wish to board themselves will find a good opportunity for so doing.

To ministers the board will be half price, or free, according to their circumstances.

Hay and oats for horses at market prices. The use of fine covered stalls for horses and carriages or wagons, FREE.

The buildings on the Fair Ground will doubtless afford ample accommodations for sleeping rooms for all who attend. If any prefer to do so, they can bring tents.

The grounds are close to the business part of the city, and convenient to the depot. There is no finer location for a campmeeting in the country. We hope for a feast of fat things, a feast with wines on the lees, well refined. We expect the presence of the Holy Spirit, with all its influences for love, joy and peace. Come and receive a blessing, and new strength.

A. E. BANCOCK, J. M. SHOOK, J. V. HIMES,
Committee.

TERMS: Two Dollars a year. One Dollar for six months.

☞ The TIMES maintains the doctrine of the personal advent of Christ as an event "nigh at hand," his personal reign and the saints' inheritance in the earth renewed, the atonement, the unconscious state of the dead, their literal resurrection; the finite nature of evil, the final destruction of the wicked; personal holiness and entire consecration to God on the part of the believer, and kindred Bible truths.

The W. A. C. P. Association is composed of ministers in good standing in the various Conferences, and delegates from churches composing the same, meeting at least once each year for the choice of officers and the transaction of other business. The officers are a Board of Trustees as follows:

Those who write to the office on business should say whether we may send them a package of envelopes, for weekly use in laying by a little each week, for the publishing cause. Those who have read the correspondence of THE TIMES the past few months need not be reminded of the importance of the Tract interest. Shall it be FULLY SUSTAINED? Will you help, by laying by every Lord's day, as you may have been prospered?

The Quarterly.

Having a few odd numbers of the last volume of THE QUARTERLY, we will send as follows: For July and October, 1870, and January, 1871, the three for 50c. post-paid. Single numbers, 20c. This is a good chance for those who wish specimens for themselves or their friends.

Volume 2, unbound $1. Bound, $1.50.

How to do Good.

We will send THE TIMES, post-paid, on trial, for three months to any address in the United States or Canada, for thirty-five cents. We make this offer to enable every one to introduce Scriptural views of the second advent and related doctrine to their friends and neighbors. If received weekly and candidly read in any family for three months, THE TIMES cannot fail to make an impression in favor of the truth it teaches. A goodly number have already been converted by its influence. To those who wish to procure or send to their friends the paper, on this plan for trial, we offer the following terms: One copy three months, 35c. Three copies (may be to different addresses), $1. Eight copies, $2.

N. B.—These figures are special, and are for three months only. After that time the usual terms must be paid, which are as reasonable as could be desired. The low terms for three months are afforded solely on the ground of getting the doctrine we teach before those we could not otherwise reach.

Obituary.

HOUGHTON.—In De Kalb, Ill., March 31, 1871, Nancy A., daughter of Geo. and Betsey Houghton: aged 16 years and 6 months.

Parents, brothers, and sisters, are left to weep, but they hope to meet her in the kingdom of God. Though

In the bloom of her youth she has gone to the grave,
And they mourn for the young and the fair;
The Savior is coming his children to save,
And they'll meet her in paradise there.

Sermon by the writer; "Death is swallowed up in victory."

H. G. McCULLOCK.

HURRY.—Died, at Long Point, Livingston Co. Ill., March 16, 1871, Sr. Ann Hurry; in the 57th year of her age.

Sr. H was from Canada. She has been a firm believer in the soon coming of Jesus for many years, and was a zealous Christian. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn. They sorrow not as those which have no hope, for they expect soon to meet her where death will sever them no more. Words of comfort by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 29.

J. W. BURROUGHS.

TREADWELL.—In Chicago, Ill., June 18, 1871, Br. Stephen B. Treadwell: aged 42 years.

Br. Treadwell was formerly from Huron Co. Ohio, where his father now resides.

He was a firm believer in Christ as the Lifegiver, and his last words were those of trust and confidence in Jesus. In his life he was lovely, and his death is a grief to many hearts, but there is good hope for him in the future. He leaves a dear companion to tread the vale alone, but her hope "reaches to that within the vail." Text for the funeral sermon, Ps. 116: 15—"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

The Times.

AT HOME.

A despatch from Admiral Rogers, of which the following is the substance, was received at the Navy Department, dated at Boisee, Island of Corea, June 3, and sent from Shanghai. Our Minister and the Corean Envoys exchanged professions of amicable intentions. The Coreans made no objections to the survey of their waters. The Monocacy, the Palos, and four steam launches, under Commander Blake, were sent, on June 1, to examine the River Sable, at a point called Difficult Passage on the French chart No. 2,750. At a point where the navigation was most perilous, masked batteries, manned by several thousand Coreans, were unmasked and opened a heavy fire without warning upon our people. The French ship in advance fought gallantly; our vessels, bearing up, drove the enemy from their works. The tide swept all the ships past the batteries. They anchored and threw shells among the retreating enemy. Eight-inch shells were evidently not expected. The Monocacy was slightly injured by knocking upon a sunken rock, but now is temporarily repaired. The vessels returning received the fire, the enemy having been driven from the forts. Our people displayed great gallantry, and only two were slightly wounded. A communication was received to-day which may open negotiations. Otherwise, since the Coreans have met peaceful overtures with unprovoked war, our force will take such other measures as the interest of civilization requires.

ABROAD.

France.

In the Assembly, June 20, during debate on the loan bill, President Thiers made a statement of the financial condition of the country. He said the German war had cost France 3 milliards francs. The deficit for the fiscal year of 1870–71 reached 1,631,000,000 francs, but of this amount the Bank of France had advanced to the Government 1,330,000,000 francs, so the immediate deficiency for the year was reduced to 301,000,000 francs; but to this must be added 436,000,000 francs for expenses since incurred in suppressing the insurrection in Paris. This total deficit of 737,000,000 francs Thiers proposed to meet by imposing new taxes. The situation, he said, was difficult, but not disastrous.

The war between the eighteen Monarchist and five Republican journals is bitter in the extreme. The latter repudiate the Commune, and the general impression is that their leaders represent the sentiments of more electors than their adversaries. They are also united, while the Monarchist journals are divided. A manifesto from the moderate Republicans announces the adhesion of sixteen more newspapers to their cause.

The London Daily News' special dispatch says that instructions have been given from Berlin to stop the return of German troops from France, and to discontinue the surrender of French prisoners.

Sweden and Germany.

A special from Berlin says there are rumors of negotiations between the German and Swedish Governments, with a view to internal relations, that may result in the union of Sweden and Germany before many months. The Kreuzische Zeitung says the rejection of Swedish Hungarian union by the Legislature of Norway is a signal fiasco for the projects of the King of Sweden, and for some time past there has been a growing inclination in Stockholm to cultivate friendly relations with Germany.

The Pageant at Berlin.

BERLIN, June 16. The triumphal entry of the army and inauguration of the equestrian statue of King William III. took place to day.

The procession was one of the most magnificent of modern times, headed by eagles and standards captured from the French. It marched in the order set forth in the Imperial programme, from Templehof field to the palace, between two rows of cannon, numbering some 2,000, taken during the war. At intervals along the line enormous trophies, formed of captured arms, were erected. After the first division of the victorious column had passed the Brandenburg gate, the Emperor with the German princes in his train, preceding the army, was received at the portal by deputations from the municipal governments of Berlin and the principal cities of Germany, and addresses of welcome and congratulation were presented....The army then entered the gate, with the Prussian Guards at the head of the line. It was mainly composed of detachments representing every regiment which took part in the war, each bearing the regimental colors. The appearance of the men was superb, and the enthusiasm of the spectators as they passed by was unbounded. Each regiment as it entered the Pariser Platz, where the crowd was greatest, was cheered with unfailing enthusiasm. Some regiments, well known by the Berliners, and others which had particularly distinguished themselves during the campaign, received special ovations, the people breaking into their ranks, crowning them with wreaths, and overwhelming them with flowers.

When the procession had concluded its march, the Emperor proceeded to unveil the statue of his father, Frederick William III. All the dignitaries of the Empire, victorious Generals, and the Members of the German Parliament, assisted at the ceremony. In the presence of the army and the countless multitude of spectators, the veil of the statue was removed amid tremendous cheering, firing of cannon, and music from the military bands. The Emperor, standing at the foot of the statue, delivered a speech, closing with these words: "This monument, which was projected in time of peace, now becomes a memorial of one of the most brilliant though bloodiest of modern wars. May the peace so dearly achieved be a lasting one."

Wrecks of the War.

A special from Frankfort says the number of invalids by the late war amounts to 4,990 officers, and 112,038 non-commissioned officers and men. The Alsatians and Lorainians, though they became invalid in the French service, will participate to a certain extent if they choose, for the German nationality. The municipality of Strasbourg has received as a first installment, 110,000,000 francs from the Imperial Treasury for rebuilding the houses burnt during the seige.

The Infallibility Dogma.

The Bavarian Government is now proceeding against the clerical agitators. A Professor at Munich has been dismissed for teaching the dogma of infallibility. Addresses have been sent by all the principal towns to the government not to tolerate any stretch of authority in clergymen, and to protect those in opposition to the Archbishops. A scism in the Catholic Church appears imminent.

The Pope.

Pope Pius IX. has just completed the 25th year of his pontificate. No pope ever has worn the triple crown so long, and according to superstition no pope ever will. Giovanni Maria Mastai Ferretti, (for that is his private name) was elected to the Papal chair June 16, 1846, and was duly proclaimed upon the following day. He is now in his 80th year.

The Pope on the 25th anniversary of his pontificate, received deputations from all countries, even from Poland. At least 2,000 delegates and 800 ladies waited on him during the day. The Pope, in his replies to the congratulations of foreign deputations, said he hoped soon to bear the cross through the streets of Rome without fear of outrage. To the French delegates he spoke feelingly of the situation of France, and congratulated them on her victory over the powers of darkness. He was gratified at receiving a telegram from the Queen of England, in which wishes for his long life and happiness were expressed. During the day the Pope distributed 15,000 francs among the poor, and received munificent presents from the faithful throughout the world. Notwithstanding the precautions taken by the police, visitors while on their way to the Vatican, frequently were insulted by crowds in the streets. Many soldiers who had served in the Pontifical army, were arrested before the day of the festival to prevent disturbance. The city is perfectly quiet.

A turbulent state of affairs prevailed in Belgium. The Pope's Jubilee was the occasion of much violence, and sixty-eight persons have been arrested at Brussels for complicity in the riotous proceedings.

Czar and Kaiser.

The article in Blackwood descriptive of the conquest of England by Germany in 1875, as narrated by an old English Tory in 1925, is a significant indication of the growing feeling on the part of British statesmen that, without the loss of a man or the firing of a gun in her defence, Great Britain practically fell with France into the condition of a second class power. The former tract, "The Fight in Dame Europa's School," which has been read by millions all over the two continents, equally proves the keen sense with which England is waking up to her humiliation. Five years ago there might be fairly said to be five great powers in Europe. In the order of their actual and direct influence they were France, England, Russia, Prussia, Austria. But even then they ranked in actual power as follows: Germany, Russia, England, Austria. To-day they rank as follows: Germany, Russia, Austria, England, France. The balance of power, for which three-fourths of the national debt of England and half that of France was incurred, is gone with a breath, and gone irretrievably. Had England and France combined to prevent the humiliation of Austria in 1866, it might have been preserved. Now Europe lies at the mercy of the Emperor William and of the Czar Alexander. And these two men have met in significant and important conference at Berlin. Much as we vaunt the progress of the masses in freedom, there never before was a time in Europe, not even when the First Napoleon and the First Alexander met on the raft at Tilsit, when two individuals had powers so absolute over the lives and destinies of Europe's 200,000,000 as the Czar and Kaiser who are now in conference. It is not that they combine the military power to overcome all resistance to their joint will. The problem is far easier for them. Their power is so clear to the eye of foe and friend that, be its movement just or unjust, not even a show of resistance can be made to it. The great Pitt himself, were he alive, could not form a coalition which could resist any advance to which the two might agree. What means, then, this close conference between William and Alexander, while the German legions are taking up their return march to Berlin, and at the very instant when the complete submission of France results in peace? Two questions are just now agitating the English press in connection with this interview. One is that an extensive signing of petitions and publishing of memorials, and poems, and editorial articles, is going on throughout Germany, the aim of which is to beg the Prince von Bismark to seize from England the little province of Heligoland, which was wrested from Denmark by England in the wars with Napoleon, and which England has "set on" ever since, as she always has on anything that she had any excuse for taking, and that there was nobody strong enough to take away from her. The island itself is of no consequence. It is a mere rock, 200 feet high, surrounded by five and one-fourth square miles of sand, which is gradually washing away. At present about 2,000 fisherman and pilots reside on it, and it imports about £568 worth of produce, and exports to England just one fifth as much. So it is the merest chip. But, as a chip, Bismark is asked to knock it off from the shoulders of England, as a challenge to a "shindy," and as a punishment to England for selling arms and coal to the French, and trying to make money out of calamities she had not the courage to ward off or share.

English journals say that if Bismark did not want this agitation to go on, it would not have begun. If this be true, then it is the German Government rather than the people that are seeking the quarrel, and England may as well resign Heligoland as the best means of avoiding that arrival of the German armada which the article in Blackwood predicts. But the real danger is still in reserve. Germany has neither quarrel, nor serious cause of quarrel, with England. But Russia has an unhealed wound to avenge, and a broad sweep and circuit of manifest destiny to accomplish. She was humbled in the Crimea of England and France. She will remain so until her double eagles look over the Bosphorus and the Hellespont, and the Greek cross supplants the crescent of the infidel on the spires of St. Sophia.

Russia, however, is just now bending her energies to the construction of railways through her vast territory, and she is borrowing all the English capital she can get to build them. To set forth on a war of conquest would bring all this to an end. Her statesmen were probably sincere in stating that the demands of Russia were limited to an unrestricted right of ingress and egress from the Black Sea. That they intend to insist upon this right at all hazard there can be no doubt; and it is probable that the conference at Berlin, if it have any political significance, refers rather to this ultimatum than to the seizure of Constantinople and the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 4, 1871.

AN UNEXPLAINED PHENOMENON: OR THE DARKNESS OVER NEW ENGLAND IN 1780.

'Twas on a May day of the fair old year
Seventeen hundred eighty that there fell
Over the bloom and sweet life of the spring.
Over the fresh earth and the heaven of noon,
A horror of great darkness, like the night
In day of which the Norland sages tell—
The Twilight of the Gods. The low-hung sky
Was black with ominous clouds, save where its rim
Was tinged with a dull glow, like that which climbs
The crater's sides from the red-hell below.
Birds ceased to sing, and all the barn-yard fowls
Roosted; the cattle at the pasture bars
Lowed, and looked homeward; bats on leathern wings
Flittered abroad; the sounds of labor died;
Men prayed, and women wept; all ears grew sharp
To hear the doom-blast of the trumpet shatter
The black sky, that the dreadful face of Christ
Might look from the rent clouds, not as he looked
A loving guest at Bethany, but stern
As Justice and inexorable law.

—Whittier.

On the 19th day of May, 1780, the inhabitants of New England and the adjacent parts were the trembling witnesses of an event in nature which has never been fully described nor analyzed. We refer to the wide-spread and mysterious withdrawal of the natural sunlight, which so startled our ancestors and covered the land with gloom on that memorable occasion: a phenomenon in its kind never experienced before nor since in the country, and which, while religion attempted to account for it as a fulfilled prophecy, yet science has not unfolded its quality nor discovered its cause. Ninety-one years has passed away since the extraordinary darkness transpired: the living witnesses are getting to be few, but still our sources of information concerning all the features of the day and night are ample, and before us as we write are over forty different testimonses relating to the scene we seek to exhaustively depict. They are mainly from persons who saw what they describe, and embrace evidence from historical collections, histories of states and towns, histories of the Revolution, journals of legislatures, newspapers of the day, sermons of the ministry, personal memoirs, memoirs of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, professors in colleges, poets, philosophers, physicians, scientists and savans; among them Noah Webster, LL. D., who wrote, "I stood and viewed the phenomenon, for which no satisfactory cause has been assigned."

The year we have named was celebrated for its numerous auroral exhibitions in this latitude. They covered the midnight heavens with corruscations of red and silver and streamed out like lightning, seeming, says one writer, fairly to flash warmth in the face. A single sun spot over 50,000 miles in diameter was seen with the naked eye by William Herschel the previous year, and in 1780 others were visible and recorded by Lelande. The winter preceding May was marked by

EXTRAORDINARY SEVERITY.

Snow lay on the ground from the middle of November to the middle of April four feet deep everywhere. In December and January a snow storm continued seven successive days, and the snow fell to a depth of four feet on a level in this single storm, with drifts eight and ten feet high. Sheep were buried in the drifts for many days, and even men and animals perished with cold. Long Island Sound was crossed by heavy artillery on the ice.

Narraganset Bay froze over so hard that men traversed the ice from Providence to Newport in skating parties, and from Fall River to Newport loads of wood were conveyed on the ice through Bristol ferry. The journal of the House of Representatives of Connecticut records it as "the severest hard winter within the memory of man," followed by "the most backward spring recollected by aged and observing citizens." War, too, added its rigors to the dreary aspect of nature.

The month of May was dry and cold. Previous to the 19th a vapor filled the air for several days. There was a smell of sulphur in the air, and on the day of the great darkness Etna discharged lava from a new mouth and the eruption was accompanied with violent earthquakes in Southern Italy. The morning of the 19th was overcast with some clouds and rain fell over the country, with lightning and thunder. The sun on rising shone not with its accustomed clearness. Its face seemed veiled and the aspect somewhat lurid. Scarcely any motion was in the air; what there was of wind came from the southwest; vines were not stirred and sails and flags hung idle. By nine o'clock in the forenoon, without previous warning, the darkness stole gradually on, with a luminous appearance near the horizon, as if had dropped down from overhead. There was a yellowness of the atmosphere that made clear silver assume a grass-green hue. Then a dense undefinable vapor settled rapidly and without aerial movement over all the land and ocean from Pennsylvannia to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the darkness it caused increasing by degrees until the sunlight was effectually shut out. Ordinary cloud it was not. The rapidity with which so large an extent of country was enveloped precludes the possibility of supposing this to have been a natural cloud moving laterally. Besides this, the day was too calm to imagine such a thing. Down came the darkness thicker and thicker. By ten o'clock the air was loaded with a heavy gloom. The heavens were tinged with a yellowish or faint red; the lurid look increased; few, if any, ordinary clouds were visible. The sun, in disappearing, took on a brassy hue. The lurid, brassy color spread everywhere, above and below. The grass assumed the color of the sky, and all out doors wore a sickly, weird and melancholy aspect, a dusky appearance as if seen through a smoked glass. Nature donned a frightful look. No one had seen the like before, and the hearts of thousands grew faint with fear. So low was the overhanging vapor that it appeared to rest upon the very earth, and the hills in some places could not be seen at the distance of only half a mile. Especially was this true at Pepperell and Groton in Massachusetts. By eleven o'clock it was as night itself, and from this time until three in the afternoon the darkness was truly extraordinary and frightful. Some reported that the sun's disk could be seen dimly through the murky gloom at the period of the deepest darkness, but this seems hardly probable. At sea the air was thick and had an unusual smell and a

MOST UNNATURAL APPEARANCE.

Generally there was a sooty smell prevalent, and in a few places some drops of rain fell. Dr. Tenney, with a philosophic eye to turn the sable curtain into gold, wrote that all nature wore a resplendent and beautiful tint, the earth and trees appearing as if adorned with an enchanting glow! Mr. Temple of Boston saw things in somber color, and in a letter to a friend in England, described the scene as if a veil was drawn over all things, which he seemed to look through and see the heaven beyond it; while at Newburyport a pious women wrote: All nature seemed hushed, as though Jehovah was about to make himself known by some mighty act. Every eye was turned upward, every one inquiring: What is going to take place? At three o'clock the light came on from the west, and the heavens at its coming looked more brassy than at any previous time, while there were seen in some places quick flashes or corruscations, not unlike the Aurora Borealis. Gradually, and to the immense relief of more than half a million of people, the darkness passed off. Such was the general appearance of the earth and atmosphere.

The extent of the darkness was greater than is related of any other similar phenomenon on record, not excepting the celebrated dark days over Egypt and Judea. It reached south to the northern half of Pennsylvania, and from thence along the coast northeast to the wilds of Maine, eastward to the Gulf of St. Lawrenace, and out at sea 120 miles southeast of Boston, and undoubtedly much farther; west to the valleys of Lake Champlain and the Hudson river, and north into undefined regions in Canada. Portland, Boston, Hartford, New York, West Point and Albany were all affected by it. But the differed in different places, the deepest night settling over New England. A tract of land and sea 800 miles in length and 400 miles in breadth, embracing an area of 320,000 square miles, was known to be covered by the cloud, and so far as can be ascertained, a population of 700,000 souls sat for a portion of the day and night in gloom more or less profound and inexplicable.

Just how dark the day was is attested by indisputable evidence. The hour and minute could not be discovered on the face of a clock or watch by persons of unimpaired eyesight. Candles became an absolute necessity both out doors and in, as it was impossible to transact ordinary business without. Fires on the hearthstone shone as brightly as on a moonless November evening, and all dinner tables were set with lighted candles upon them as if it were an evening repast. The keenest eyes indoors could not see to read common print. So far beyond any ordinary fog was the effect that stages on the road either put up at the nearest hotel during the mid-day hours, or carried candles or lanterns to enable the perplexed driver to well see his way. This in many instances was performed as it invariably is at night. At Haverhill, N. H., at twelve at noon a man could not be seen in the road at a distance of only twenty rods, while an hour or two later the captain of a ship forty leagues at sea southeast of Boston was compelled to light a large candle to enable him to perceive his instrument and thereby steer his vessel. "It was so dark at noon," writes Dr. Adams, "that we could not tell one person from another in a room with three large windows in it." A writer in the Massachusetts Spy informs us that at the time of the light was less than the volume of light from the moon, while many other eye witnesses assert unequivocally that the greatest darkness, was fully equal to what is the season of "candle-lighting" in the evening. No London fog ever equaled this. The astronomer of Paxton, Samuel Stearns, calculated that the ratio of light borne by the moon at its full, as compared with the full light of the sun, is as 1 to 100,000. Later French savans make the difference as 1 to 300,000 and even 1 to 800,000. But if Stearns was right the sunlight of that remarkable day was immeasurably less than that of a common clear, sunny day, the ordinary sunlight being reduced below the light of the full moon. Connecticut went totally under the cloud. The journal of her House of Representatives puts on record the fact that "None could see to read or write in the House, or even at a window, or distinguish persons at a small distance, or perceive any distinction of dress, etc., in the circle of attendants. Therefore at eleven o'clock the House adjourned till two o'clock afternoon." At Ipswich, Mass., at half-past eleven, several educated gentlemen tested the depth of the darkness by attempting to read large print in a room with three windows of twenty-four panes each, facing the south and east; but, although their eyesight was good, they could not at all distinguish the words. At twelve, with the three windows still uncovered and open, substance, by the light of a candle, cast well defined shadows on the wall, and shadow profiles and images were as distinct and sharp in their outlines as in the evening. At 1 o'clock a single gleam of light, coming hitherto from the east, was wholly withdrawn or shut out, and it became darker than at any previous time. The amazement of the party was very great. At two o'clock the gleam which had disappeared in the east shone faintly in the west, as if the obscuring cloud had lifted or passed over; but the gentlemen, with the three windows still open, found it necessary to have two candles on the table to enable them to appropriate the dinner now set before them. At four the company said they had passed a very unexpected night together, and then parted, each musing on the strange adventure. With all these facts before us we can discover no extravagance in the language of the Boston Gazette, when its editor exclaimed, "In short, there was the appearnace of midnight at noon-day." Men were awe-struck; all busy sounds of labor ceased; and a calamity of some kind, none knew what, was confidently imagined to be approaching. It seemed, says one, like a great roof closing down upon the earth, and shutting out the glorious sunlight forever. (To be continued.)—D. T. T. in Boston Journal.

SEISS ON THE AUGSBURG CONFESSION.

In a paper on Eschatology from the pen of Dr. Seiss published in the Evangelical Quarterly Review, I find the following with regard to the testimony of the Augsburg Confession which is not within my reach. "In the Twenty Third Article, our Confessors assert to the Emperor, as their belief and confession, that they were then living "in the times and days foreshown in Holy Scripture, in which the world is to become ever more and more degenerate, and mankind more sinful and weak." In their view, then, the idea of a Millennium of general sanctity and blessedness this side of the day of judgment, is quite inadmissable, and contrary to the truth. But in the Seventeenth Article they express themselves still more pointedly, and formally "condemn those who spread abroad Jewish opinions, that, before the resurrection of the dead, the godly shall occupy the kingdom of the world, the wicked being everywhere suppressed." It is true that the Augsburg Confession condemns deservedly the gross carricature of the true Millennial doctrine as held by the fanatical Anabaptists, but it also condemns the common opinion that we are to expect a Millennium previous to the coming of the Lord, for in the exposition of the Seventeenth Article by Gœbel one of the leading authorities, he says, "The idea of a golden age in this world, before the resurrection of the dead, is a mere phantasm, not only contrary to the entire holy Scripture, but especially contrary to the clear and lucid prophecies of the Lord Jesus Christ and his beloved apostles, where they speak of the times immediately preceding the day of judgment—Mat. 24: 23; 1 Tim. 4: 1; 2 Tim. 3: 1; 2 Pet. 3: 3; and other places where more may be seen upon the subject. Nothing is there said or predicted of a golden age, but only crosses and tribulations which touch all the estates of the world."

It has excited the suprise of many who have visited Europe to find that in Great Britain, and especially on the continent, those whose religion is not a mere thing of State, or mixed up with an impious rationalism, or consisting of a hollow form of heartless ceremonies, are as a rule, firm believers in the pre-millennial advent of Christ. There are of course exceptions to the rule, but generally those who know upon the sure testimony of God that Christ's first coming put away sin, and who therefore rejoice in the full assurance of faith, also look forward to his second coming as the one event on which their hope is fixed, and do not expect any millennium before their appearance with him in glory. Spurgeon expresses the views of thousands, when he says in his sermon on the Frst Resurrection, "I look forward to this with joy, that though I may sleep in Christ before my Master come, and I know not whether that shall be or no, yet I shall rise at the day of his appearing, and shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just, if I have truly and faithfully served him; and that recompense shall be, to be made like him, and to partake of his glories before the eyes of men, and to reign with his during the thousand years."—Dr. Brookes.

A Chinaman was overheard the other day muttering: Mrs [illegible] he good woman at chur[illegible] beautifully, she all same perfect, she come to Sabbath School and help teach Chinaman there much. But at home she get mad, she take stick and strike Chinaman, she no good there, she no perfect at home. She no Christian. Christian no get mad. Me no Christian, but me no feel right to get mad. But Mrs. Z——, she get mad some days she mad all the time!—Evangel.

RESURGAM.

BY PHOEBE CARY.

O, mine eyes be not so tearful;
Drooping spirit, rise, be cheerful;
Heavy soul, why art thou fearful?

Nature's sepulcher is breaking,
And the earth her gloom forsaking,
Into life and light is waking.

Trees their green heads are adorning,
And the songs of birds give warning
Of the coming of the morning.

Late the cold earth lay unriven;
O'er it was the tempest driven,
And the snow like wool was given.

Of the dark seed in the furrow
Then we thought with faithless sorrow,
Scarce believing in the morrow.

But where there it lay snowed under
Now the glad fields break asunder,
And we see Spring's flowery wonder.

Roses sweet with dew are dripping,
Rivulets to the sea are tripping,
And the hills like roes are skipping.

Very sweet are earth's green places,
Glad and full the song she raises,
Giving her Creator praises.

Oh! the weakness and the madness
Of a heart that holdeth sadness
When all else is light and gladness!

Though thy treasure death hath taken,
They that sleep are not forsaken,
They shall hear the trump, and waken.

Shall not he who life supplieth
To the dead seed where it lieth
Quicken also man who dieth!

Yea, the power of death was ended
When he who to hell descended,
Rose, and up to heaven ascended.

Rise, my soul, then, from dejection,
See in nature the reflection
Of the dear Lord's resurrection.

Let this promise leave thee never:
If the might of death I sever,
Ye shall also live forever!

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

The Sabbath school is the child of the church. And as "new born babes desire the sincere milk" (1 Pet. 2: 2), so does the Sabbath-school desire the fostering care of the church. Who does not love the Sabbath-school? Who would not like to engage in this grand and noble enterprise? But the Sabbath-school work is a work that cannot be performed successfully without some general plan.

The painter who would execute a beautiful picture must have some general plan of work; and the sculptor who handles the mallet and chisel with such exquisite art, first forms some mental image of what he is about to execute. You observe his manipulations and soon the rough marble begins to assume the form of a human being: the natural expression begins to stand out in bold relief: and as the shadow resembles the substance so now you say this almost identifies the real person. The eyes almost seem to roll in dazzling splendor. The lips are sculptured in a line of perfect beauty. The rounded limbs are symetrically formed, and in fact the whole sturcture stands up before you almost like a living, breathing being. But let the untutored hand take up the chisel, and you will notice that here upon one side he has carved too deep. and upon the other perhaps he has left a protuberance: the eyes are ill-mated; the nose has been "chipped off;" one arm appears clumsy and uncouth while the other is stiff and paralyzed as with death.

As the sculptor is to the block of marble, so is the tutor to the Sabbath-school. To wake up the minds of the children, tell them some of the thrilling stories in the Bible. Tell them about Adam and Eve, our first parents; their creation, transgression and expulsion from the Garden of Eden. Tell them of Enoch the first translated, and of Methuselah the oldest man, who lived to the year of the flood, and then died before his father did. Tell them about Noah and the flood; how he preached to the antediluvians 120 years, and only converted his own family. Tell them of the tower of Babel and the confusion of tongues; of Sodom and Gomorrah; of Lot's wife and the pillar of salt. Tell them something about Abraham, the father of the faithful; of Jacob and Esau, the birthright and the pottage. Tell them about Joseph the little dreamer, and Pharoh the king of Egypt. Tell them about the frogs and the locusts, of Moses and Aaron, the Rea Sea, the journey in the wilderness, the brazen serpent, the golden calf, the smoking mountain, the tables of stone. Tell them of Joshua, of Jephthah, and his [illegible]iated daughter. Tell them of Daniel, Absalom and Solomon. Tell them about the Prophet who made the ax swim, of the boys who said, "Go up thou bald head!" and of the bears. Tell them of Daniel in the lion's den, and the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace. Tell them of Samson and his riddle, of the foxes and the firebrands. Tell them what became of the golden calf, the brazen serpent, the pot of manna, Aaron's rod and the Ark of the covenant. Tell them about Jonah and John the Baptist. Yes, and above all and first of all tell them about Jesus, The "King of kings and Lord of lords," "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," the Prince of the house of David," the Immanuel, "the Messiah," the Star of Bethlehem, the Redeemer, the Savior of the world. CORRECTION.

In The Times of May 30, you publish an article from my pen upon the Sabbath question, in which appear many and important mistakes. The portion I refer to, with a little improvement, should read as follows:

Now if the passover was "always" observed on the fourteenth day of the first month, then the day following the passover was "always" the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, and the first day of this feast was "always" a Sabbath to the Jews ever after they came into the land of Canaan. And as has been already stated, the Jewish seventh-day sabbath was changed to different days of the week, and that, too, every year, except when the passover fell on what we call Friday; then, in such years, the Jews would have two Sabbaths come together; and this is the reason why the day which followed the crucifixion of Christ was called "an high day" (Jno. 19: 31), as our Savior was crucified on a passover day, on a Friday, April 3, A. D. 33, as shown by the foregoing table.

Hence we see that if the passover fell on what we call Friday, then the weekly Jewish sabbath, for that sacred year, would fall on what we call Saturday. But if the passover fell on what we call Saturday, then their sabbath for that sacred year would fall on what we call Sunday. And if the passover fell on Sunday, then their sabbath for that sacred year would fall on Monday; and so on through all the other days of the week.

This proves that other days of the week besides "Saturday" were properly called "sabbath," as it made no difference to the Jews what day of the week their passover fell on, as the next day following it was, to them, "always" the first weekly sabbath for that sacred year; let it fall on whatever day of the week it might.

Hence, the passover being always holden upon the fourteenth day of the first month, whether it fell in the month we call March, or April, it must always be holden at such a time of the year as would enable the Jews to obtain a sheaf of ripe barley for a "wave offering," to be "always" offered on the sixteenth day of this first month, two days after the passover, or on the second day of the feast of unleavened bread. See Lev. 23: 10, 11. And this sheaf of ripe barley was always offered "on the morrow after the sabbath." If, therefore, the season was early, then this sheaf of ripe barley could be obtained in the month we call March. But if the season was late, then this sheaf of ripe barley could not be obtained until the month we call April. Hence, the variations as seen in the foregoing table.

NO FAMILY ALTAR.

Were it possible for the great Apostle to the Gentiles to again traverse our borders, that he might do good to the children of men, he would find in his journeyings amongst us in the families of many professed Christians, not only one, as he did in the Athenian midst, but the inscription written upon many hearth stones, No Family Altar! And it is presumed his words and astonishment at such a strange anamoly in the history of such a family, would be much greater than when he stood and gazed at their heathen inscripton,—"To the unknown God!" And as he beheld them, although they "ignorantly worshiped," he called their services "devotion," and was doubtlessly impressed with their spirit of consisiency, their zeal anp fidelity to the only religion that had hitherto opened to their benighted understanding. And in his love and tender regard for precious souls, attempted to guide their minds to the

WHAT SHALL WE READ.

That which we read doubtless has much to do in moulding our character and influence. A politician will devote much time in reading about politics, a merchant about commerce, a banker about securities; and so a long list could be enumerated; and thus naturally, and also wisely, people read about those things they are the most interested and absorbed in. But just as naturally, why should not a follower of the Lord Jesus read and delight in the Bible and religious literature? But, alas! how few do so! Thus the word, "that the children of this world are in this generation wiser than the children of light," is verily true, and to our shame and reproof. Therefore we ought to see to it that we get more wisdom, and even by their example gain profit.

In this age a very fruitful source of wisdom is through the newspaper and periodical press; and Christians and the world would be greatly benefitted if every Christian would patronize it more liberally, and, at least take one religious newspaper, and having read them hand to his neighbor. This would also help counterbalance the vile sinful literature that floods our land, by introducing more largely a healthier kind of reading.

I sincerely hope that no Christian who shall read these lines will say they are too poor to take a paper; for if we desire to take one and have a will, the Lord will open a way. May not most who do not take one deny self, perhaps in some worldly lust that we may well be rid of, and so get means for this purpose, and in this reap a double blessing? A. J. Marsh.

BAPTISED FOR THE DEAD.

Commencing with v. 16 (1 Cor. 15 ch.) "for if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised," he then depicts our condition if Christ be not raised; also logically reasoning as to the effect of Christ being raised (vv. 17–23), and says, "Otherwise, what shall they do who are baptised for the dead?" (Syriac.) Dead what? is the question that naturally comes up. Why, dead Christ—as he says, If it be not thus, "what shall they do who are baptised for the dead?" All who are baptised in the apostolic mode, are baptised for and into Christ; what is the use of it, if he is dead? I make direct connection between the reasoning of Paul concluded in v. 23, and his query in v. 29, because vv. 24–28 ought to be in parenthesis. C.

FAMILY CAMP REPORT.

This meeting commenced May 31 and held over Lord's day and increased in interest to its close, especially so among the people of God. Ninety-one spoke in love-feast on Lord's day morning; seven started for the kingdom; five were baptised; sixty-one gathered in memory of Jesus, around his table. Prejudice was removed from some, and a general good feeling prevailed, and the saints seemed to look up for redemption soon. Amen.

"BEHOLD I COME QUICKLY."

Upwards of eighteen hundred years have rolled away since the above assurance was given to John on Patmos, by the "Faithful and True One," through the messenger whom he sent to signify unto the congregations of the faithful ones things that should shortly come to pass.

The "Faithful and True" was none other than Jesus of Nazareth, the crucified one, who set forth his claim to be the Messiah in the following words: "I, Jesus, have sent my messenger to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star." (Rev. 22: 16.)

The Root and Offspring of David is heir to David's throne, and consequently the Messiah. It is proclaimed in the Oracle of David, (1 Sam. 23.) that he as the Just One shall rule among men, ruling in the fear of God; and that "he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth."

Prophets in the most glowing language have predicted his manifestation in glory and in brightness, to build again the tabernacle of David which has fallen down, to restore Israel to their own land, and to establish on Mt. Zion the throne of universal empire.

These things have not been seen or realized as yet, and are consequently matters of hope, and hoping for things unrealized, we with patience wait for them.

Eighteen hundred years have passed, consequently we are so much nearer that coming which was to be quickly; yet, how many are there of the professed followers of him who made the announcement through his messenger to John, that have any idea that his coming is near, or that he is to come at all personally, to this earth to fulfill the predictions of the prophets and his own promised word?

Very few indeed are looking for Messiah to come quickly, or to come at all. But the word stands out upon the sacred page:

"Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." (Rev. 3: 12.)—Messenger.

THE RESURRECTION OF NATURE

Away, fortunately, for a brief breathing spell, from the editorial office, we sit by a window, and look out upon a rural scene, on which, when our eye last rested there, several months since, death was the universal characteristic; for Winter reigned supreme. the freshly fallen snow covered the fields, and hid from view even the intersecting reads, sheeting in one vast robe of white, dead nature. The sad trees, bare of leaves, spread out their naked branches, through which mourning winds chanted a ceaseless requium. The silence otherwise was as unbroken as among the tombs; for the tuneful birds were gone, the humming insects floated not in the air, and there was no lowing of homeward going herds on any side. Even the lake gave no sign of life, had neither motion nor sparkle; for the ice was upon its breast as cold marble on a grave. The corpse of earth was there, in bleak hills and verdureless forests, but the spirit was departed. The one element of abiding joy in nature was the glorious sun in the heavens, which poured forth its splendor as though reminding the observer of its god-like superiority; that the earth was dependent upon it, and not it upon the earth, and that all prospect of future life in the world below was in its light and heat. It was present cheer and future prophecy, and kept the human heart in hope, amid all the tokens of natural death. And so, amid the dreariness of winter, with no verdure of grass below or of foliage above, with no music of birds and no visions of harvests, and compelled to defend themselves from the piercing cold as from the arrows of an enemy, men yet went about in good heart; for strong was their faith in the all-powerful sun.

And now how wondrous the change! We gaze as before, but the winding sheet of snow, and funeral marble of ice, and the other signs of death are gone! There has been a resurrection! The spirit of life has re-entered the body, and nature has arisen and put on her robes of beauty. The lake glistens in the light, and its playful waves chase one another to the shore. The once naked trees have donned their vestments of leaves, and wear crowns and garlands of flowers. The green carpet of grass is soft beneath the foot. The glad birds are back again. The robin whistles his mellow notes in the orchard, and hops to and fro on the lawn. The kingfisher drops like a plummet into the water before our eyes. The martins twitter on roof-ridge and want to set up housekeeping in the boxes under the eaves, but the bluebirds are noisily disputing possession; and a couple of sparrows are actually building a nest in a small evergreen, right under the parlor window, and but four feet from the door! The cherry trees are in blossom around the house, while the fields are dotted with the golden dandelions and marsh marigolds. The woods, too, invite the children to search for floral treasures, and they come home wild with delight from their wanderings, bringing baskets over-running with early violets and anemones, the curiously formed trillium, and the pure white blossom of the blood-root. Thus nobly has the sun vindicated the faith which men had in it during the death-reign of winter; and at its bidding the whole vegetable world has risen again to life!

Can the Christian witness the change, and not bethink him of his coming victory over death, and of the pledge of resurrection which shall as surely be kept as is the promise of spring made by the sun in winter? It is not that death is itself joyous or hopeful, any more than is the winter's snow or ice. But we look away from the cold grave to the blessed Christ, whose face bends over it full of bright and warm love; just as in winter we turn from the frozen earth to find our cheer in the glorious orb whose rays never know darkness or chill. In both cases we have but to wait, and our faith shall be vindicated. Spring shall succeed to winter, and immortality to death. That Christ lives and reigns is all the assurance we need that death shall be but a temporary experience, a brief and passing winter, whose dreary storms shall end in birds and flowers. And so Paul, thinking about it, exclaimed: "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Advance.

ETERNAL LIFE IN CHRIST.

Further, if there be no necessity for a resurrection as the orthodox teaching implies, when it asserts that every man, whether he be in Christ or not, is immortal, and has "eternal life," in that case the resurrection merely means a rising of the dead body to be united with the immortal spirit. Now, where do we read in the word of God of such a resurrection as this? Let us, however, see what absurdities such a doctrine involves.

First, according to this, the soul or spirit of the dead person goes direct to either heaven or hell, and in each case acts the part of a fully organized man, in singing God's praise, "tuning harps of gold," casting their crowns at his feet, walking the streets of the New Jerusalem, etc., things which must be performed by an organized body, as these actions require the voice, the hands, the legs of man; so that, to make this theory harmonize with the results, man, at death, must posses a body in heaven; and if so he cannot, by any torturing of logic, be said to still be a spirit, as "a spirit has not flesh and bones;" and to ask this glorified man, fully developed, and already participating in the joys of heaven, to come back to earth for a second body, may be theology, but to a man who thinks, weighs evidence, considers results, and searches the Scriptures, it is simply absurd and nonsensical. In the other case, the dead who depart this life, without being in Christ, having, as this theory belibves, "eternal life," as well as the dead in Christ, go at once to hell, and there "lift up their eyes in torment," see the righteous in Abraham's bosom, cry, Father Abraham, plead for their friends on earth, and ask for a drop of water to cool their tongues. Strange spirits, these! Cease, after this, ye orthodox theologians, to shudder at spiritualism, as your theory is more ridiculous than "spirit rappings" and table turning, however much deviltry and duplicity these may involve. And had you taught God's truth, men would have hesitated to be deluded by "seducing spirits and doctrines of devils," as it was your theories of death that left a wide, open door for spiritism.

AN ASSUMPTION.

It is assumed by all Christians that eternal life is in Christ. This may be called a theological axiom, as it is only through Christ that there is to be a resurrection; but when it is stated that eternal life belongs only to the just after resurrection, and that eternal death is the portion of the unjust, the vast majority of even believers in Jesus take exception, stand aghast at our impiety, and, as they think, infidelity.

Now, for argument's sake, grant to our opponents the premises that all men, "just and unjust," after resurrection are to have an eternal life, either in bliss ineffable or wo unutterable, and see in what an awful position such a belief places the Son of God! If there be eternal life in Christ for all, good and bad, this life is given at the resurrection by the power of Christ; then, logically, Christ is put in the unenviable and monstrous position of having called these dead bodies to—not merely punishment—but a life of everlasting misery and torment! And not only this, but God is, by this theory, believed to have given not only life, but eternal life, to countless millions of his own creatures, not one of whom did ask him to create them—for no other object than everlasting tortures in Gehenna's flames.

God, being omniscient, knew when he created these souls that they would not believe in Jesus to the saving of their souls; and can we believe that a God of love and mercy would do this?

I wonder if our good, and in many ways estimable, theologians have ever thought of the injustice such a horrible dogma implies on the part of a merciful and loving God and Savior.

England's laws are merciful and just. The criminal is condemned and punished; but not tortured for ever. The murderer is sentenced to death—"to be hung by the neck until he is dead." Herein are mercy and justice. But suppose the law said the offender is not to be permitted to die; but to be kept suspended by the neck from the gibbet in a conscious state of extreme suffering, night and day forever and ever; where would be either the mercy or the justice of the law?

A MONSTROUS THOUGHT.

Were such the case, would not the nation as one man, from John O'Groat's to the Land's End, rise, and with a voice of thunder, irresistible as the lightning's flash, demand that their suffering fellow creature be at once put to death; and therefore out of his misery? And yet! and yet! strange to say, what sinful and imperfect men would not permit to be inflicted upon their fellow man, they can believe and teach unblushingly that a merciful and gracious loving Father will inflict upon his creatures, and torture them in hell for ever and ever! The thought is monstrous! Having entertained this awful belief myself for the greater part of my life, I scarcely know how to feel thankful enough to my loving Lord for showing me my error, and for the privilege of standing here to-night to enter my solemn protest against such an horrible dogma, and to declare publicly my deep conviction that it is a LIBEL, emanating from "the father of lies," upon my gracious God and loving Savior.

I implore you, specially ye children of the living God, to reflect upon these things! We do not like to hear any one speak disrespectfully of our earthly father, more especially if he be represented as fearfully cruel. Such statements make the blood rush to our faces, and the fire flash from our eyes; and shall we remain unmoved and careless when we hear our heavenly Father thus maligned? Nay, let us repel the foul slander, and vindicate the mercy and justice of our God by believing that he has given us, his children, eternal life in his Son; but that the wicked will perish and be utterly destroyed, instead of being kept in suffering throughout eternity.

We therefore reject the dogma that Christ will raise the wicked to a life of eternal wo, as derogatory alike to the character of God and of Christ; and though such monstrous fictions may suit the pride of vain philosophy, the creeds and confessions of men—children of God—if properly taught "in the word and doctrine," should spurn them with holy indignation, and earnestly—though not bitterly—"contend for the faith once delivered to the saints,"—which faith is summed up by the Apostle Paul thus: "What fruit had ye in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of these things is death. But now, being made free from sin, and become servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life; FOR the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life."

THE PUNISHMENT ETERNAL.

We here notice an objection made with an air of triumph, Mat. 25: 46. "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal." Not at all discomfited, we reply,—Precisely so; that is just what we believe. Were your text worded thus: "These shall go away into a life of everlasting punishment," then we should have to bow to your interpretation; but as there is nothing said of a life of everlasting punishment, we believe everlasting punishment here simply means that the punishment is so decisive and effectual that it will never be repeated, or that it will be eternal in its nature. A death by punishment in the one case, because justice must be satisfied; life, in the other, because mercy has triumphed over judgment.

If we search the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation, this is the doctrine taught—death, i. e. utter destruction, if not "born of God," and made alive in the first resurrection; but if "asleep in Christ" at the resurrection, "we shall be clothed upon, that mortality may be swallowed up of life," for this is the promise which he has promised us, even eternal life," "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

LIFE AND DEATH.

Thus we find throughout the whole Word of God the antithesis death and life, and that death invariably means either an extinction of spiritual or physical life.

Death in the New Testament is referred to 1016 times, and in not one single instance is the "secondary sense" of an eternal life in misery attached to it, as theologians have taught for centuries.

Out of these 1016 uses of the words "death," "died," "dieth," "die," and "dead," in not more than fifty is it used figuratively.

When it is said, e. g., "and you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins, "the words explain themselves, as they tell us what is meant, "dead in trespasses and sins;" just as we understand in the common every-day language when we say a man "is dead to the world," or "dead to the things of God."

To maintain the theory that all men possess eternal life, our opponents are obliged to believe that death means life "in eternal torments," which is absurd, and a misuse of words; needful, however, to prop up their belief.

But do the Scriptures teach that when a person dies he is still alive? Every 999 persons out of 1000 think they do. They think, because they believe in the immortality of the soul, that by some process—of which they know nothing—the body at death merely dies; but the soul "wings its flight to worlds unknown,"—truly "worlds unknown," and which only exist in their fancy; and there and then, immediately after death, receive a "crown of life."

Was this Paul's doctrine? Nay, he did not look for the "crown of life" directly after death; but after resurrection; which, he said, "the Lord would give him at that day, and not only to him, but to all those who love his appearing"—i. e., at Christ's second coming and the resurrection to life.

THE INTERMEDIATE STATE.

Were the intermediate state, that is, the condition of the "just and unjust," between death and the resurrection, understood Scripturally, the dreams of a conscious intermediate state would soon vanish, and men's minds would cease to be disturbed and distressed by the awful thoughts of an unseen world, as it is called; and erroneous beliefs and practices would have to hide their diminished heads before the lamp of truth.

Death in Scripture is spoken of as a sleep; and certainly people are not conscious in sleep. Matthew, speaking of the resurrection of the dead saints during our Lord's crucifixion, says, "And the graves were opened, and many of the saints which slept arose." We see here that the bodies of these saints were the saints themselves, and they were asleep, not conscious, in the other world. Again, Jesus saith, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep." Then said the disciples, "Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well; howbeit Jesus spake of his death."

Here there is not a whisper of Lazarus being still alive and in heaven. He is dead, and is asleep.

Again, the description of Stephen's dying moments is full of meaning,—"Lord, lay not this sin to their charge: and having said so, he fell asleep."

Paul, referring to David's death, says, "For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep." Speaking of the brethren who saw Christ, he says: "But some are fallen asleep;" "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" "we shall not all sleep," in reference to those who shall be alive at the coming of the Lord.

Speaking of the dead at the second advent, he says: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep"—that is, the dead—"for them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

DEATH A SLEEP.

The word sleep occurs forty-four times in the New Testament, and in sixteen instances out of these it is applied to death.

If, then, death be a sleep, are the dead conscious? This is a solemn question; but it is high time the Bible should be read thereon, that the dreamy theology of ages should be brought to this test.

When it does speak on this subject, its voice is no undecided one—e. g., Psalms 6: 5, "For in death there is no remembrance of thee;" and yet we have been taught to believe that in death memory is quite perfect, and is occupied in praying and singing God's praises. "Free among the dead," says David, "like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more." Job says: "So man lieth down and rises not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything;" "neither is there any work or device or wisdom or knowledge in the grave, whither thou goest." (Eccl. 9: 5.)

Isaiah says: "The grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee;" and yet we are told that the dead do celebrate God in hymns of joy in heaven! Again Isaiah says: "Thou hast made all their memory to perish."

Numerous such proofs might be adduced; but the above will suffice to direct the thoughts of those who have not considered this subject, to view it in the light of God's word, and not to take for granted, as we are too apt to do, the teaching of the pulpit and the press. (To be concluded.

NOW.

A little word, but how full of meaning! You, who read this, mean to be a Christian. You know it is your duty. You feel it every day. You set a time when you will begin, but it is far ahead. By and by you reach it, and still longer postpone it. Will there ever be a better time than the present? Why not now? It may be that you are a Christian. But you have not as yet taken upon you the vows of the Church. You hesitate, waiting until you feel more certain of strength to hold out. Ah, friend! is it not a snare of the enemy? Be sure—

"If you tarry till you're better,
You will never come at all."

Be wise. Come now. Perhaps you have come. Your name may be upon the records of the Church, but this is all. You are a silent member of the great co-partnership between the Church and Christ. You are within the portals of your father's house, but you are hungry, destitute and alone. Around you there is a plentiful supply. Why not partake? And why not now? Or, you do partake a little; just enough to know how sweet it would be to have enough, and to be filled. But here you remain. Others are without in the storm and heat, hard at work in the vineyard. And still you loiter here. There is an abundance of work for you; work none of these others will be allowed to perform; your portion of the field lies a waste. It may be on the street, or in the Sabbath-school; wherever it is, it is your work, and one day the Master will ask it of you. You suffer for the lack of it. Your strength is growing less every day. O, famishing soul! seize upon the golden opportunity before it is too late. Work while the day lasts, for soon your day will have passed and gone forever. "Behold now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation."

BEWARE OF PREJUDICE.

An incident in the life of William II., King of Prussia, beautifully illustrates the care he took to guard against prejudice towards any of his subjects. He was passionately fond of flowers, and took great pains to have his gardens well supplied with the choicest kinds. On two days in the week these gardens were opened to the public, much to the disgust of the chief gardener. He seemed to think that flowers were only grown for the pleasure of the king and to display his own skill, whereas the king thought they were made to please everybody. On a certain occasion, the king's daughter, who afterwards became the Empress of Russia, sent him a very rare plant which produced a beautiful flower. The king took great delight in watching its growth, and when at length it produced its single flower, he could hardly restrain his gratification. He thought it the most beautiful thing he had ever seen, and was constantly speaking of it. But on one of those days when the gardens were open to the public, some thoughtless person plucked this flower. One of the gardeners happened to observe it, and immediately reported the case to the head gardener, who had the man immediately arrested. The gardener hastened to the king and told him what had happened, and volunteered the remark that the flowers never could be protected while the common people were allowed to visit the gardens, and he hoped his majesty would prohibit it in future. The king's only remark was: "How could any one be so thoughtless as to deprive me of so great a pleasure?" The gardener was proceeding to give the name of the offender, when the king suddenly and somewhat sternly said to him, "Do not mention the name. I never wish to know who has given me this pain, for it might prejudice me against him. I can never know in what relation, as one of my subjects, he may some day stand to me. Don't mention his name." This was not only kingly, but it was eminently wise and just. It is not easy to do right by those who have done us wrong or given us pain, and it is often a mistaken kindness which informs us of the names of those thus offending.—Sel.

The Word of God is pre-eminently a book for direct reading, and is never seen in its glory if we will persist in wearing the colored spectacles of another man's comment. Pure and cold are its streams if we drink immediately from the well head, but when the precious crystal has long stood in earthen vessels its freshness is gone: the truth is there, perhaps, but not the life. We should let texts lie in our hearts till they melt into them like snowflakes dissolving into the soil.—Sel.

MATTHEW 17: 6.

"But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea."

So reads this verse in the common version. The Greek word translated "offend" is skandalise, the third person singular of the first aorist subjunctive active of skandalizo. This word is not found in classic writers, but is used only in the Septuagint, New Testament, and in works of ecclesiastical writers. Donnegan's Lexicon p. 1122, Robinson's Lexicon p. 663. The Greek noun from which the verb skandalizo comes, is skandalon, (a later equivalent to skandalithron) which signifies a crooked or bent stick in a trap to which the bait is fastened, against which the animal strikes, springs the trap and is caught; hence metaphorically, it means a snare, a stumbling block. Donnegan's Lexicon p. 1112. Sophocles in his Lexicon, p. 993, defines skandalizo, "to cause to stumble, or fall," "to cause to err," "to seduce." Robinson in his N. T. Lexicon, p. 663, "to cause to offend," "to lead astray," "to lead into sin"—i. e., to be a stumbling block, or the occasion of one's sinning. The translation, "whoso shall offend" etc., does not convey a correct or intelligible idea of the original. The ordinary meaning of offend is to displease one by words or acts. Jesus did not intend to convey such an idea, when he used the word. The translation should be as follows, viz: "But whosoever shall lead one of these little ones into sin or astray," etc.

This translation gives the words of Jesus peculiar significance and force, and furnishes a solemn and awful warning to all who speak or act in the presence of children in such a manner as to lead them astray, or tempt them to commit sin. Let all, therefore, beware how they speak or act in the presence of "these little ones," lest the awful doom uttered by Christ come upon them! Let every one who uses profane or vulgar language in the hearing of children, ponder these words, and turn and repent of his terrible sin!

This exposition is applicable to the corresponding verses in Mark 9: 42, and Luke 17: 2. The Greek word in question should also be translated in the same manner in Mat. 5: 29, 30; 18: 8, 9; Mark 9: 43, 45 and 47, and in 1 Cor. 8 —C. H. Reed in Standard.

THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

What did Jesus mean by the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus?

This is a question that has excited deep interest in all hearts, and has puzzled many, even those who have demonstrated that it could not teach the

ETERNAL CONSCIOUS MISERY OF IMPENITENT SINNERS.

The question candidly considered.
Objections fairly met.
The true import demonstrated.
Hades not a place of consciousness.
Sheol not a burning lake.
Pharisaic Theology False.

This is Eld. L. C. Collins' latest effort, and will excite as deep interest as did his widely circulated Address to the Minnesota Methodist Conference.

A Presbyterian friend in New York City says of Br. Collin's late work (in a letter ordering eighty copies for distribution): "I have not read anything on the subject treated, with more satisfaction; and I believe it is the truth." Let all read it.

Another says: Allow me to call the attention of your many readers to this excellent tract. Different in exposition from anything I ever saw, I think it comes nearer the truth and gives a better explanation of this parable than anything yet published upon it. As this parable is one of the greatest strongholds (?) of "orthodoxy" (?) we ought to have the very best exposition of it possible; this I think we have in Br. Collins' tract. It is a straightforward, clear, unvarnished, and common-sense exegesis of this important passage of Scripture. It will do much good and ought to be widely scattered.

A LIFE EXPERIENCE.

We shall next week commence the article we promised some time ago under the above heading, using the following title:

A SEARCH FOR TRUTH.
BEING
BY GRAY QUILL.

The author prefers to remain unknown, at least for the present. We may say, however, that he is now an Adventist, and that we can vouch for the truthfulness of what he has written; that it is no tale of fiction, but of literal facts. Unless we are greatly mistaken it will be read by all with intense interest. Owing to its length, it will appear in chapters and occupy several weeks in publication.

Advent Christian Times.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 4, 1871.

ALL through the month of May the Romanists were praying to Mary to restore to the Pope his misused power at Rome. "But there was none that heard nor regarded their cry." How much of superstition has grown out of the notion that dead people are alive!

"Sudden death, sudden glory," says a correspondent of the Advocate. "These all died in faith....received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us, should not be made perfect," says Paul. Many of them met "sudden death." They are yet awaiting glory, even in the "better resurrection." (c. f. Heb. 11.)

At a meeting of Spiritualists at Saginaw, on Sunday evening, Moses Hull, one of the speakers, said that, when a little boy, he could see faces around his bed every night, and knew they were faces of those in the spirit-land. His mother reproved him by telling him to "Go to sleep, for nothing ailed him but worms."—Chicago Tribune.

—We dare say the mother was right.

Do not forget that important injunction couched in one word, which Jesus left for all —watch!

Watch your heart, your tongue, your business, your religious progress, the signs of the times, and above all watch for Jesus, lest coming suddenly you be overtaken unawares. He will come. Watch and be ready!

IT is a question of some moment, whether Adventists who do not give to send the news of their blessed hope far and near, love their Master's cause any further than word or tongue. Love rooted in the heart gets beyond words. Indeed, sometimes its only expression is in actions. Let us love our Master, his people, and a dying world, in deed and in truth. This will lead to self-denial—the renunciation of much that we should enjoy, in order that we may do good to others. One had better not talk for Jesus, if they do nothing for him. They will only get a reputation for inconsistency.

THE Record allows two correspondents to say of our discussion at Columbus, Kas.:

The sequel is that adventism in this vicinity is too dead to awake even at the Millenium. Br. Murray is too weak to chuckle, but I can see that he would sooner have another fight than not.

—The Advent side of the discussion was so strong, that our opponents dare not fairly report it; and it was published by them with the most contemptible garbling and misprinting that we ever knew of. Our Disciple friends will yet find that calling Adventism dead (or even spelling it with a little 'a,' will not make it so. It has survived that mode of attack numberless times.

IMMERSION CONTROVERSY DISPOSED OF.—The vexed question of the proper mode of baptism was thus disposed of by "Uncle Cæsar," a colored preacher: "Now, bredren," said he, "I hear great fuss about dese words in and into; and folks want us to believe dat dey mean under, and dat when de Scripture speaks of an indiwidual going down into de water, de Bible means to say dat he went under de water. S'pose some day I go ober to see Brudder Solomon, and Brudder Solomon wery politely say, 'Uncle Cæsar, come into de house,' do any body s'pose dis yer nigger would go under de house?"—Christian Observer.

—Of course not! He would expect that "Brudder Solomon" would whittle off a few shavings, or gather a handful of saw dust, pour or sprinkle the same on Uncle Cæsar, while he remained outside, close by the house. One must be very stupid not to see that!

EDITOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

There are many calls for labor, and I can supply but few of them. If I could multiply myself many fold, I should still have work for every hour. But as I can be in only one place at a time, I choose to go among those who seem the most needy, and least able to procure and sustain preachers of the word.

Those who wish my labors during the coming season will please give early notice, that I may arrange my work to the best advantage. Conferences, Quarterly, or other, who request my services, will please make appointments so as not to conflict with each other in point of time.

PRESENT APPOINTMENTS.

Loda, Ill., July 9 and 10.

Girard, Kas., July 15 and 16. This meeting will be held in the grove near Br. Joseph Freed's residence, eight miles from the city of Girard. There will be teams to convey those who come by the Fort Scott Railroad, if they will write to Eld. Munson, at Girard. Let there be a general attendance.

Columbus, Kas., July 17.
Oswego, " July 19.
Iola, " July 21, over the 23d.

Topeka, or Middle Creek, July 25 to 30, as Brn. Linville and Corey may arrange.

After this I shall still have a few days to spare for labor in that region. Friends desiring my services may write at once to Columbus, Iola, or Topeka, Kas., or to Buchanan, Mich.

August and September appointments will be duly announced.

THE QUARTERLY.

We are sorry to be compelled to announce a temporary suspension of the Quarterly, owing to a lack of adequate support.

From the time the Bible Banner was announced, last fall, with its monthly issue and its strong corps of editors and contributors, the subscriptions to the Quarterly immediately fell off. We had feared this result, and were thus prepared for it, though we did not expect so great a reduction of our patronage.

We do not speak of this to complain. It is better to have a monthly, circulating many thousands of copies, than a Quarterly, with only one thousand. And if only one of the two periodicals can be sustained, we say by all means, let the Banner live, and let the Quarterly expire, or, at least, be suspended until such time as it can be supported.

"But cannot both be sustained?" A large number to whom we had privately announced our intention of suspending the Quarterly, have asked this question. Our reply is, that we will continue the Quarterly, provided five hundred subscribers at one dollar each are pledged to us.

We leave the matter therefore, in the hands of the friends of the cause, simply remarking that if three hundred and fifty subscriptions, in addition to those we already have, shall be pledged to us within the next six months, we shall resume the publication of this valuable magazine at once. If the required number of subscribers are not received by January next, we shall indefinitely suspend its publication.

The Quarterly has found very few friends to aid its circulation, except THE TIMES. We have earnestly urged the importance of its work, and the necessity that it should live. We feel that we have done what we could for it. And we turn over the leaves of the two volumes that have been published, with a feeling something akin to pride that so valuable an addition to our literature should have issued from this office.

It has been urged by some, that the Quarterly has injured the quality of THE TIMES; that the best articles go to the Quarterly. This is a mistake. Many of the best articles in the Quarterly could not have been obtained for THE TIMES. And with very few exceptions, all of them come under the head of "long articles"—for which the Editor gets more scoldings, perhaps, than for all other causes combined.

We can obtain for the Quarterly much matter that the writers would not prepare for THE TIMES—articles that cost weeks of labor; and while it would not pay to publish them in book form, they can be issued in the form of a magazine, and thus be preserved for future reference and reading. In days past, how many have said of this or that article in the weekly paper —"I wish I had that in some convenient shape for preservation." True THE TIMES is now in a more convenient form for reference and preservation; but, after all, we need the Quarterly, too.

But we have said enough. Shall we have the additional three hundred and fifty subscribers at one dollar each? Remember, that for one dollar, you thus obtain three hundred and twenty large pages of the very choicest reading matter; some of which can be procured elsewhere at more than ten times the cost, and some of it can be found only in its pages.

What will you do?

N. B. Any one who has paid in advance, and may be dissatisfied at the suspension of the Quarterly, can have their money returned, or applied elsewhere, by writing to the office.

ANOTHER CHEAP EDITION.

We shall soon as possible commence work upon another cheap edition of Whitmore's Immortality.

We would like to make it 5,000 copies.

Shall it be done?

Where are the rest?

Cannot you afford to give away (or keep to lend in your neighborhood) at least four copies of this invaluable work?

It will preach, very silently, but very effectually, every where it goes. Many have already been converted by it. More would be, if it were only generally introduced.

We have orders for nearly one thousand of the new edition.

How much will you do toward making it FIVE THOUSAND?

Will you take one hundred copies? It will cost you but $16. Fifty copies will cost you but $8. Thirty copies will cost but $5. Five copies for one dollar, (or four copies, if sent by mail, prepaid.)

If every subscriber of THE TIMES would purchase and circulate four copies each, nearly eighteen thousand would be put in circulation.

We think the dry bones in the valley of theology would be stirred!

Why not do this work?

FIVE HUNDRED copies are wanted for missionary work in South Carolina alone. Will you help send them there?

Is it right to enjoy these glorious truths of God ourselves, and do comparatively nothing in dispensing them to others.

We think not.

Do you agree with us?

Then send in your subscriptions or orders.

The next cheap edition will be ready in September.

The cash may be sent with orders, or when the books are ready, as subscribers choose. Cash orders will be placed on file, and filled in the order that they are received. Those coming first will be filled first.

REMEMBER THE PRICES.

THE GOOD WAY.

The second number of this tract journal is about ready, and will be issued in a few days. It contains as much matter as a 24pp. tract.

Price: $7 a thousand, by express.

By Mail: 80c. a hundred. For any number less than one hundred or over ten copies, one cent for each copy.

It is good and cheap.

LOCALIZING "THE GOOD WAY."

Some ministers and churches have taken advantage of our liberal terms, and have had "The Good Way" published in their own names. We do this where not less than 500 copies are ordered, without additional expense.

It is too late for any to localize the July number. But if you wish 500 of the August number, published for yourself or the church where you live, send in your order at once.

Let the good seed be faithfully sown in the shape of tracts, papers and books. We shall reap the glorious harvest by and by.

THAT CHEAP EDITION.

The first cheap edition of Whitmore's Immortality, comprising nearly 2,500 copies, is now exhausted. We have not a copy left, with which to fill orders, either new or on account of subscriptions.

As previously announced, we have a few copies, bound in cloth, with slightly defective covers, but otherwise perfect, which we will send by mail, post paid, for 50c.

The best edition will be sent by mail, post paid, for $1 a copy as heretofore. tf.

NOTES OF A DISCUSSION.

A discussion held at East Randolph between Elders W. A. Fenn (Adventist) and Alvin Burgess (Methodist), commencing March 17th 1861, upon the following resolution:

Resolved, That Reason, Philosophy, and the Bible, teach that man has no rational soul or spirit that continues uninterrupted as a concious entity between the death and the resurrection of the body.

Fenn affirms, Burgess denies.

Fenn's first speech.

The qualifying terms of the question are rational and entity. Mr. Webster informs us that rational means having reason; or the faculty of reasoning: endowed with reason, etc. Entity means, (1) being, essence, existence. (2) A real being, or species of being.

According to Webster the question resolves itself into this form: Man has no reasoning soul or spirit that continues uninterrupted as a real being, between death and the resurrection of the body.

I firmly believe in the existence of spirit or soul; but that the soul or spirit of man is a real being, having reasoning faculties and continuing uninterrupted as such, between the death and the resurrection of the body, I deny.

Man is a created being, (Gen. 2: 7), and the functions and attributes of his being are dependent upon the laws adjusted by his Creator. We are not to ignore the work of God in producing the body of man, by claiming as much or more for a part of him as we would claim for the whole. In other words is it consistent to claim that the immaterial part of man, detached from the material, is much more in power and capacity than the whole is when united? In short is any one part of man greater than the whole of him?

We affirm that such a claim is contrary to reason. As thought or reason is claimed to be the essential quality of the spirit of man abstract from the body, we should be able to think or reason under any circumstances, or condition of physical existence. That there are conditions of physical existence which forbid reasoning or thinking, is a fact familiar to all. Indentation of the skull to any considerable extent invariably stops all thought and reason, and when man is again resolved back to his original elements, all the functions of his being must be suspended for the time.

The person who is made unconscious by the injury we have referred to, will, when restored to consciousness, begin their mental work exactly where they left it when the injury was inflicted. No other argument is necessary to establish the affirmative of this question that such a fact furnishes; for if reason be the essential quality of spirit, and can be suspended while the spirit is embodied, by simply compressing the brain, reason demands us to conclude, that thought, from whatever source it originates, cannot be enjoyed when man, brain and all, is dissolved in death.

Again, if the disturbance of the physical being, without destroying its organization, suspends the functions and attributes belonging to the parts injured, reason demands that we conclude that these functions cannot be enjoyed in a state of complete dissolution of the physical being.

No examples have ever been furnished of disembodied human spirits enjoying the functions of real beings, except those which modern Spiritualists provide; and they are unreliable, in that they themselves own they lie; and one must be exceeding credulous to accept the testimony of a witness that professes to lie. I reject such testimony as altogether fallacious.

Burgess first speech.

Fenn refers to Gen. 2: 7, and distinctly claim man to be a unit. He then goes on to speak of God's resolving man into his original elements. What was made of the dust of the ground? If that was man, why was another act necessary to complete the being? God breathed a soul into man after he had formed him. He did not make the soul of dust. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." (Eccl. 12: 7.) If the spirit returns to God, it returns as a conscious entity. When the spirit of man goes out from the body does it cease to have existence? He has no Scripture to show that when the spirit leaves the body that it is extinguished; neither has he reason or philosophy to show it. He claims we go out on the wings of imagination. So much the better, if we have the warrant of God's word.

(Mr. Burgess then read during the remainder of his time from a manuscript, since published, which we need not copy here.)

Fenn's second speech.

My opponent has given us quite an array of Scripture, but with one or two exceptions, his passages are simply irrelevant, and have nothing to do with the question we are discussing.

The existence of the various parts of the man's composition as distinct elements, detached from each other, is no proof of rationality being enjoyed by either. My opponent would prove that the spirit or soul of man is of itself a rational entity, even while connected with the body. I claim that the union of these elements under the condition of physical life, is indispensable to conscious existence. I admit that the spirit exists as a real thing, as the result of the creative power of God; but there is a difference between a conscious rational entity, and spirit power or element, in the abstract. There is a vast difference between spirit as a reasoning knowing entity, and spirit as an element belonging to the body, and working with it.

What does death do? Does it disturb the laws that govern our existence? God declares (Gen. 3: 19), "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Did he address a man, or the man's house? He addressed the man: for he made (or formed) man of the dust of the ground.

The inquiry is made, 'What becomes of the spirit when the body returns back to dust?' Solomon tells us, "it returns to God who gave it." (Eccl. 12: 7.) This is only one of many passages which intimates the existence of spirit abstract from the body: but does this prove a conscious existence between death and the resurrection?

My opponent contends for the perpetuation of the spirit as a conscious entity, in that its nature will not admit of unconsciousness. If its functions are not varied by circumstances, or if so radical a change as death involves does not interrupt the attributes of the spirit, we may reasonably conclude that it never was interrupted by any event, and, consequently, conscious existence ever has been its condition since it existed; and if it is a part of God, as is claimed, then it has always existed. But has any one any knowledge of existence prior to birth? If consciousness is an essential quality of spirit, and cannot be destroyed, then as long as the spirit has existed it has possessed the quality: and if the spirit is created and put into the body it must have existed a longer or shorter time, before being placed in the body. If the spirit began its consciousness with the body, reason demands that we admit that consciousness will end when the separation occurs. Consciousness should not be disturbed by any physical injury, if it is the attribute of a spirit that cannot be interrupted by death. But we know very well that consciousness is in many instances totally suspended, by a simple indentation of the skull: and that the mental exercise stops immediately on receiving the injury, and begins exactly where it stopped when the injury is repaired; and this will be the course irrespective of the time intervening between the injury and the repair. This fact stands as an invincible argument in favor of the affirmative of this question.

Mr. Burgess second speech.

I understand Fenn to say he can't meet my Scripture citations. (Fenn) A mistake. I said I considered them irrelevant to the question. (Burgess) I proved that believers have consciousness here, and Christ says that they have the same consciousness hereafter. If human spirits cease to exist between death and the resurrection of the body, are they not lost to all intents and purposes? (Complains bitterly because Fenn gives his rebutting 'Scripture argument' the go by.) Let Fenn prove that the spirit does not have consciousness. He claims that modern Spiritualists are the only authority in favor of the intelligent existence of spirits abstract from the body. I would sooner believe in Spiritualism than Adventism. (Indignation manifested by the audience.) I hope Fenn will not give my arguments the go by.

Fenn's third speech.

The distinction between soul and spirit. They are not from the same term, and are never used interchangeably in the Scriptures. To contend for a conscious entity in the soul and also in the spirit, would not do for my opponent's theory, as he would have two entities to dispose of instead of one; for the apostle talks about "dividing assunder between soul and spirit," etc. (Heb. 4: 12.) We have no reason to infer that because soul and spirit exist separately, that they therefore exist consciously.

The term soul or spirit is used as an accommodated form of expression; as are head, heart, back, etc. When I speak of my head aching, I do not mean that my head is not a part of myself. When Job says "his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn," he would not be understood to mean the flesh on him was not a part of 'him,' nor that the soul within him was not a part of 'him.' (Job 14: 22.) And he tells us that the 'him,' with all his parts is, when in death, in a state where "his sons come to honor and he knoweth it not, they are brought low and he perceiveth it not of them." This condition is just what I claim for man in death, so Job's testimony agrees with my philosophy.

Thus far in this debate no higher authority has been adduced, for the consciousness of the soul in death, than human assertion, and I reject such authority and demand higher proof. My opponent argues that to prove the unconsciousness of the spirit in death proves its annihilation. But revelation proves that man is unconscious in death, and declares a future for him by way of a resurrection. And here we rest our faith. My future eternal existence is a matter of faith. My opponent's theory of a future life, is a matter of necessity, and has nothing to do with faith. He claims an eternal existence by virtue of the nature of man, independent of faith. If the element of soul is susceptible of being changed from unconsciousness to consciousness, as at creation, why is it not susceptible of a change from consciousness to unconsciousness again at death?

I do not know why the logic that claims eternity in life for the soul, because it has been made alive once, should not claim the same thing for the body because that has once lived. If one can be reduced back, the other may be. The argument that claims perpetuity of conscious existence between death and resurrection, should, to be consistent, claim a pre-existence in order to present being. If God can begin man's existence from an unconscious state, he may suspend it, or temporarily destroy it, and begin it again. Why not?

Burgess in his third speech, admits that the term nephesh is not rendered spirit, nor is ruach translated soul in the Old Testament; and that the corresponding Greek words are not interchanged. He claims the passage in Job, referred to, proves his position. In this chapter Job says, "Thou shalt call and I will answer." Does God address a dead body? Can a dead body answer? Mr. Burgess then resumed the reading of his manuscripts, until the expiration of his time closed the first session.—(To be continued.)

ONNFERENCE MINUTES.

In the report of the Illinois Conference the 95 members of Sunday-school belong to Ionia, instead of New Rutland. And in the report of Ionia church it should read "a number moved away." S. B. MAHEY.

MISSOURI AND IOWA.

The Third Q. M. of Missouri and Iowa Conference met at Greenland, June 6. Brn. A. F. Dugger, H. Billmire, J. M. Bliven, and G. L. McClure present. The Greenland and Ailanthus churches were presented by Br. A. F. Dugger, and received. By recommendation of the church, Br. J. E. Healey was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry. Br. and Sr. Shurtleff were present from Davis Co. They want preaching there, and must have it soon.

Preaching by Brn. Bliven, Billmire, Dugger, and McClure. We had a blessed good meeting, long to be remembered. The cause is prospering in this region. Praise the Lord.

HUTCHINSON DISTICT.

This Conference was held at V[illegible], commencing June 9, and co[illegible] over Sunday. It was held on [illegible] of Br. L. R. Wood, in his cab[illegible] and adjoining frame of a W[illegible] not yet enclosed, which wa[illegible] conveniently and hung with green-boughs to protect the congregation from the heat of the sun. We had a "feast of tabernacles," indeed. The Christian friends came in from the several small churches in this district, full of faith and love.

Brn. Parsons and Raymond, who were present, had no cause of discouragement, while they saw the fruit of their labors in this Christian gathering.

The interest to attend this meeting was seen in the effort made by certain persons to reach it—some walking long distances for the privilege. Br. Weis and wife walked eighteen miles, taking with them their two children, one near three years old, the other an infant of ten months—carrying one in their arms and drawing the other in a little carriage! Young ladies (sisters in Christ) walked from three to twelve miles, and one twenty-two miles to reach this Conference! And when in the meeting they gave in their testimony for Jesus, which came from warm hearts devoted in the Master's service. These young sisters walked through forests, across fields, through swale meadows with grass to their waists, and in a rain storm drenching them so that when they came into camp they had not a particle of dry clothing upon them! How this condemns our city congregations, and those brethren and sisters so cold and lukewarm as to make almost any petty excuse from attendance on the means of grace.

The Christian friends in the neighborhood of the meeting made all the preparations possible in a new country to entertain their brethren and sisters coming from abroad. Bed-ticks were filled with new hay and laid on the floor, and both the lower floors and the attics were furnished with beds. Eld. Raymond and myself rested in an attic of a log-house, where we could not stand up straight under the roof, and through which we could look up and see the day-light as it dawned.

Br. L. R. Wood, formerly a Methodist licensed preacher, and who has recently embraced the Advent faith, against which he was once so bitter that he said "an Adventist should not come into his house," and his oldest daughter was so prejudiced after he began to be favorable to the views, that she said "If he joined the Adventists she would not call him father!"—to entertain the brethren fatted a pig, which he killed and dressed in my presence, and I had the privilege of eating a delicious morsel of the 50 lb. porker after it was roasted by his good wife, wishing all the time that Br. Hiram Munger was there to enjoy the repast, as well as the feast of soul with the saints.

The Lord sent Br. Jacob Whitesel, who had no pig to fat and kill, a most beautiful deer of the forest. Sr. Whitesel was out at the door, when she saw two of these beautiful animals come the clearing; she at once told her husband, who was in the house. He found his gun unloaded, his ammunition missing, and was much hindered in time, but the deer remained until he was prepared and deliberately walked several rods toward the creatures, who were eyeing him as though spell-bound, and then he aimed so accurately that one of them dropped dead on the spot. I had the privilege of eating a sweet morsel of this delicious venison God sent our brother, after it was prepared by his "Sarah."

Three were baptised at this Conference, among them Br. L. R. Wood. This makes twenty-three I have baptized in this region within a month—seventeen at Independence, three at Minneapolis, and three at Victor.

Br. Wood was ordained to the gospel ministry by request of the church at Victor, the vote of the Conference, and the laying on of hands. Eld. Raymond offered prayer, I gave the charge, and Eld. Parsons the right hand of fellowship. Br. Wood's ability and influence as a Christian minister will be valuable to our cause in this State.

Sabbath morning at nine o'clock, we had a love-feast, at which there were thirty-two testimonies given, and all hearts were blest. At five p. m., after the third service, we had the communion of the Lord's Supper, when forty-three sat around the table of our Lord and commemorated his sufferings and death, in hope of his return, and of the marriage feast of the Lamb. Our parting was sweetened by the reflection of meeting again in the kingdom of God soon.

After the Conference I returned home, tarrying the night before taking the cars, with Br. and Sr. Corey, where I had refreshing rest, and they, after administering to the temporal wants of myself and family, conveyed me to the Railroad at Howard Lake, whence I departed for Minneapolis. The cause in this region is onward; but the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Who will come and help us?

O. R. FASSETT.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

The A. C. Conference of Central Illinois met in Antioch chapel, near Denver, June 10.

Conference officers were mostly present. The minutes of preceding meeting were read and accepted.

Ministers present were L. Scott, Denver; G. W. Hurd, Hopper's Mills; O. D. Gibson, Clayton; J. G. Bush, Winchester. Delegates: R. D. Wiley, H. Shepherd, J. Knott, J. Willhite, Denver. C. C. Connor, Clayton. C. Herring, Oakland.

A. S. Calkins, President; G. W. Hurd, Vice President; O. D. Gibson, Secretary.

The following Business Committee was chosen: J. G. Bush, R. D. Wiley, J. Knott.

The old Board made a report, which was accepted.

It was then moved to discuss the best mode of conducting religious meetings. A warm discussion on long sermons arose, which resulted in the offering by O. D. Gibson of the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference that our preachers should study brevity in their sermons. Carried.

Reports of churches:

DENVER. As a church remain about the same as last year, holding on to the faith. Have preaching two Sundays each month by Eld. Hurd. Have a fair Sunday-school each week.

OAKLAND. We number twenty-three members at present. Some have moved west. Several new ones added to fill their place. Regular preaching only once in two months, by L. Scott. Occasional preaching by others. Have a Union Sunday-school, with attendance from 75 to 90.

WINCHESTER. We are few. Formerly numbered 21, but now there are only six or eight left, many having moved away. Those left are all good, and desire to have ministering brethren call and give the word of life.

CLAYTON. We have no regular preaching at present. Have occasional meetings only. We are few, but are holding to the faith. Would like more preaching.

Reports from preachers.

L. SCOTT. I visit Brown Co. once a month, and preach also in this county. Some are quite interested. I have also visited Scott Co. There is more interest than ever before. Have been to Green Co., where some became interested and desire to hear more. I have not done so much the year past as I might; mean to do more the year to come.

O. D. GIBSON. My labors have been of the Evangelical nature. Last fall I labored in Brown Co. a little, which resulted in five or six conversions. I held a tent meeting with Br. Hurd in Piatt Co., with good prospects, but no very definite results. Held a meeting in the winter in Christian Co., where a lively interest was awakened and still continues. Also in Sangamon Co., which two places I for the present visit once a month.

J. G. BUSH. I have preached but little the past year; mean to do more. Have charge of a neighborhood Sunday-school of fifty or more scholars.

G. W. HURD. I preach in Denver once in two weeks, West Point once in four weeks. Ended my labors in Burlington, Iowa, last spring. Held a tent-meeting last fall with Br. Gibson at Milmine, Ill. Visited them last winter, and found a good hearing. I then went home to Buckhorn, Brown Co., where was also a good interest. Went to Oakland, where Br. Scott was holding meetings. Excellent interest; several had come out on the Lord's side. I baptized six, and twelve were added to the church. I also visited Henry Co., had a good hearing; some embraced the truth. Visited Henderson Co.—good hearing among Universalists. Have been much in debt; am getting out. Hope to do more in time to come.

J. S. ALEXANDER. (By letter.) Not doing much. Am closely confined—being in debt from reverses.

O. D. Gibson was requested to inquire into the expediency and cost of repairing the tent.

L. Scott, J. G. Bush, and C. Herring were appointed as a Board of Directors.

Preachers present examined and passed. O. D. GIBSON, Sec'y.

SIGNS AND PORTENTS.

Dr. Cumming, the eminent prophet was lately good enough to postpone the destruction of the world a million of years or so beyond the unpleasantly near date he had previously fixed. [Dr. Cumming has not changed his views. Ed. A. C. TIMES.] Within a few months past he may have found reason to revise his opinion. Certainly, rarely before in so brief a period have been crowded together such a multitude of signs and portents. Not to speak of the Battle of Armageddon and the fate of the Horned Beast—which long-looked-for events many first-class modern prophets find agreeably realized in the war just ended—we have had of late all over the world an abundance of rather startling physical phenomena. Whether or not there is any soundness in the theory first advanced by French savans, and renewed by the English electrician, Mr. Varley, that earthquakes are the result of the action of adverse subterranean currents of electricity, there has been for some time past unusual activity in these forces. From time to time, nearly the whole surface of the globe has been upheaved in the most unaccountable manner, and this, too in places and climates where earthquakes were previously thought to be impossible. From South America, unstable always, one expects nothing better. But San Francisco is now shaken so often and so regularly that it can scarcely be regarded as resting on terra firma at all. Even here, in New York, we have had a perceptible shock, and a day or two since we heard that Quebec was similarly treated.

To be sure, these were the merest baby earthquakes, the play of that mysterious and terrible power whose wrath vented itself so awfully in China, when the town of Bathang, in the province of Se-chuen, was destroyed. The ground yawned in deep fissures, and rocked like the sea in storms; the buildings were everywhere flung down, and nearly twenty-five hundred of the luckless inhabitants perished in the ruins. One of the South American republics, within a comparatively recent period, was the scene of a similar, and quite as appalling disaster, with the dreadful addition that the victims were literally swallowed up in the earth. Nor have the other elements displayed less abnormal violence. Across almost the entire breadth of our continent, from south-west to north-east, there has swept a tornado, the like of which for fury and destructiveness has seldom been known. St. Louis, at least, will long remember it, as well as the many other towns lying in the broad swathe of devastation it has made from the Mississippi to the ocean. The little town of Windham, in Massachusetts, is its most recent victim, and let us hope its last, before it blows itself out in vain fury on the sea.

The waters, too, have been, in their turn, quite as reckless and uncontrolled. Everywhere is the same story of unexampled floods, with here and there a submerged city, New Orleans or Vienna, to count among their unusual trophies. Lesser signs have not been wanting. Boiling springs, that have gone on placidly simmering for centuries, suddenly stop, and volcanoes, as long extinct, burst all at once into unreasonable eruption. Meteors trouble every quarter of the heavens, and no doubt people of the proper texture of imagination can detect those cloudy battles that were wont of old to prefigure all momentous changes.—N. Y. Times.

THERE are mysteries which, if they are not solved by the truths of Christianity, darken the universe. There are griefs which, if we do not receive them as divine chastisements, are too much for our humanity. There are ties sundered here below which, if we do not hold immortal relations, are inexplicable. And nothing but the power of religion enables us to use our afflictions as the instruments of our spiritual advancement—to convert the crown of thorns into a diadem of victory.—Chapin.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

THURSDAY, June 8. Met with the Board of the A. A. M. society, to make a final close of the Mission in Memphis, and confirm the sale of the property there. In doing so, the Board made provision for a suitable place of worship for the freedmen, to be held in their own right, independent of the society, in the future. And while they were not able to sustain the meeting and school as first arranged, they have done the next best thing for the freedmen and church there, by providing a place of worship.

At the close of our meeting I took carriage with L. T. Cunningham, some nine miles, to his residence in Newton Upper Falls. Eld. C. is one of the most earnest and reliable of the old Adventists, and is wide awake in the cause. Besides his frequent articles in the papers on the soon coming of the Lord, he has published a pamphlet on "The Judgment Impending; Prophecy and Chronology Converging to one Grand Culmination," with an Appendix on the periods of Dan. 9 harmonized. In this pamphlet he sustains the view, that the 1260 years of the papacy ended in 1798, and consequently the 1335 years of Dan. 12: 12, will end in 1878, when Daniel will "stand in his lot." The 2300 years of Dan. 9 are to end 1875 when the sanctuary is to be cleansed. On this last point he takes the position advocated by Eld. Thurman, in his work entitled "The Book of Daniel opened."

This is the clearest and most earnest tract we have on the time argument, and I would commend its careful perusal to all. We certainly stand upon the threshold of the kingdom of God. The work may be had at the Times and Crisis offices. Send and get it. It will do you good. But after all that has been said on the subject of Christ's near coming, what indifference, and what slumber prevails! Nearly all are indifferent to this solemn subject. I pray that God may awake the slumberers to a full preparation ere the archangel's trump shall sound.

FRIDAY June 9, I was nearly prostrated with the heat and overwork, and took rest during the day. I had a long converation with Br. C. on the times and its duties. The apparent indifference and slumber of the church and the world was viewed with astonishment. How in the midst of blazing light, and signs of the end, so nigh, there can be such terrible indifference is a marvel. And still the judgment hastens.

SATURDAY, June 10. At an early hour took a carriage with Br. C. for Boston, to finish work there. The first thing I heard on my arrival was the death of Br. W. B. Herron, editor of The Young Pilgrim. He died at his residence in North Somerville, on the 8th instant, of pneumonia. Of late he has sustained an important business relation with the Congregationalist. He was forty-six years old. He was an old Adventist; was formerly engaged in the Harbinger office at Rochester, N. Y., and later years in the Crisis office, Boston. He originated the Young Pilgrim, and was its chief editor. He signed himself "Uncle Pilgrim," and greatly endeared himself to many thousands of our children, who will lament his sudden death, with many brethren and sisters who knew his worth, with a large circle of friends, also. He leaves a widow in feeble health, and several orphan children. May God be gracious to them.

In conversation with Eld. S. G. Mathewson, one of the early believers, and always faithful, he remembered that he told the brethren at the Salem conference "that we, as a people had got to abide in the old ship, if we would enter into port safe. And that the judgment is now right upon us."

The attempts to remove the old landmarks, and ignore Adventism, are in my judgment all wrong. The Advent faith and hope has called us out and made us what we are, and when we abandon it, we abandon all. It is this or nothing. Let us hold fast to the faith and hope, and not be ashamed of the Advent name.

In the p. m. came to old Salem, one of the first settlements of the pilgrims on the sea side, more than two centuries ago. I have known the town about forty-two years. But in that time there has been but little increase or change. The inhabitants are social and benevolent. We now have an Advent church here, of which Eld. C. E. Barnes is pastor. They worship in the chapel on Sewell St. I spoke at night. I was greeted at the close by many old believers and friends, who still cling to the blessed hope. Eld. Thurman was present, and said to me that he had been studying hard the last year, and had obtained more light on the time. He now thinks the 1335 days will end in 1875, with the 2300. We all ought to rejoice in the increase of knowledge, from whatever source it may come. But since the people of God have been disappointed in different times, they will not be likely to have the confidence in them they once did. But each one must be faithful to their own convictions, and let their light shine. What we have said and done, as a people, for the last thirty years, has placed us in a position to wait and watch for the speedy coming of Christ, and we shall be without excuse if not ready amid the signs and fulfillment of prophecy in this last hour of time.

Br. Thurman has just published his views on the time, in a pamphlet called the "Morning Watch, or the Watchman's Morning Report." 16 pp. In looking it over I see that he endeavors to terminate eight of the periods in 1875. I do not see the evidence or proof of all his reasonings, and could not adopt them. But I agree with him that so far as we have light on the periods, they terminate between this and 1875. But I am not prepared to take a positive position. I am willing to walk in all the light we have; and if God has more light, I am ready to receive it.

At night I preached for Br. Barnes, in Sewell St. chapel, on prophecy. We had a good season, and so the busy week closed.

SABBATH, June 11. I gave three discourses on prophecy to full audiences. I enjoyed great freedom, and it brought to mind other days within the last forty years, when I spoke with freedom and effect to the people of old Salem. Many of the old friends that remain, who were not in on Friday night last, came to hear and greet me with kindness. They said the word seemed better now than at first. Their disappointments have done them good. And now they wait and watch with a stronger faith and hope than ever. The church are united with Br. Barnes, and among themselves, and so prosper in the Lord.

My attention was called to the fact to-day that Eld. M. Bachelor has a son who is pastor of a Unitarian society here; and Eld. H. Pratt, also, has a son pastor of a Baptist church here, both rejecting the faith of their fathers. I have reason to be thankful that all of my sons are with me in the faith, and two of them are true yoke fellows in the ministry. May God yet give to Brn. Pratt and Bachelor, old Advent ministers, their sons to help prepare a people for the coming kingdom. For the kingdom is coming, and not a worldly millennium.

MONDAY, June 12. Took leave of Sr. Jackson, whose hospitalities I have enjoyed at times for forty years. Came to Boston to finish my work, and then for the West.

Here I met at the Crisis office Brn. Mathewson, Bachelor, Couch, Ross, Higgins, Adams, Leslie, and others, who were there on business, with whom I took sweet counsel. Dr. Leslie was appointed editor of The Young Pilgrim, in place of Br. Herron, deceased. May he have wisdom to feed the lambs. The Doctor was also appointed to visit Memphis and assist the Freedmen in putting up their new chapel, and will go in September. He told me they had a fine meeting at the dedication in Carver, and they wanted me to visit them the 18th instant, which was not possible. The Lord prosper and build them up.

THURSDAY, June 14. Took leave of Br. Cunningham, and started for the Campmeeting and Conference at Albion, in western New York. As I lost one train from the East, I only arrived at the close of the meeting. But I had the pleasure to see many of the elders and brethren, from whom I received warm greetings. This being their first Campmeeting, it may be regarded as a decided success. They have only to keep united to prosper abundantly in the Lord.

The cause in this region has suffered much for many years for the want of organization and united action. These evils have now disappeared. They have healthy church organizations, as also a conference and campmeeting, and are prepared and united unto every good word and work. A bright day is dawning upon them. They understand the secret of their success—organization, united action, and consecration of all to God.

Among the visitors I met Eld. Hastings, of Boston, Sr. Stoddard, of Worcester, Mass., and my son William from Buchanan Mich., with a large number of the members of the Conference, among whom were Elds. Fenn, Stevens, Whitmore, and Br. J. Wendell, who was lately published in all the papers as a criminal. The Conference fully exonerated him, and the man who published the scandal has corrected it before the public and done what could be done to retrieve the wrong. God bless and keep our brother from all evil, and bring him to the heavenly kingdom with all his tried people.

I turned aside for a day to rest with kind friends in Brockport. We have a little church here, tried and faithful. I enjoyed the hospitalities of Brn. Davis and Brownell. God bless them for their kind attentions.

FRIDAY, June 16. Took leave of friends in Brockport, N. Y. in the p. m., and on Saturday evening met Br. Mansfield and others in Jackson, Mich., where we are to hold our annual State, Camp and Conference meetings. The Lord give us unity and success in our good work in the week before us. For unless God be with us we "can do nothing."

SABBATH, June 18. The day is not bright outwardly. The sky is overcast this a. m., and it is damp. This seems to be against us, as our tent is not up. Still we cling to the promise "all things shall work together for good."

At half-past ten our grove was seated; the sun came out, shining beautifully; the air was fresh and reviving; the gloom of the morning disappeared in brightness. The people gathered, to whom I spoke from 1 John 3: 8, from which I showed that Christ would utterly destroy all the works of the devil. Sin, pain, death, and all evil, with him, also who "had the power of death, which is the devil." (Heb. 2: 14.) The head of the old serpent is to be bruised or broken utterly when the earth will be filled with his glory. And that this time is coming soon.

In the p. m. Sr. Mansfield spoke on the crucifixion. The audience were spell-bound for an hour, while she touched on all the main features of the sublime scenes of the crucifixion. Many a heart was touched, and eyes were moistened, as they listened to the blessed gospel of the suffering Son of God. A nail was fastened in a sure place in many hearts to-day. At night Br. Mansfield spoke and followed up the subject of the afternoon. And so the day closed with joy.

MONDAY, June 19. It is intensely hot. We have got up our tents, and at night I spoke on the evidence of Christ's divinity from the prophecies. How clear and strong the proof. Truly, it is a "saying worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."

TUESDAY, June 20. Showers, and dull weather. Conference and prayer in the a. m., preaching in the p. m.

At night Br. Mansfield spoke on the history and character of Elijah, the prophet, showing the faithfulness of God in his care over his people. Good time.

WEDNESDAY, June 21. Good weather, and good gathering of the saints from different parts of the State. I spoke in the a. m. to the ministers, from 2 Tim. 4: 1–5, showing the duties and responsibilities resting upon them in this last hour.

In the p. m. Eld. Babcock spoke on the signs of the soon coming of the Lord. It was a season of blessedness. At night Br. Bower spoke to a full house on the "treasure hid in the field." Good impression. He was followed in some pertinent remarks by Wm. L. Himes, when the day of joy and worship closed.

THURSDAY, June 22. Conference, election of officers, and reports from quarterly conferences, and the passage of resolutions. At eleven a. m. I spoke upon the subject of Christian unity, and action, from Ps. 133. I showed that we as a people were indebted to unity and harmony for our prosperity. And any division or strife among us would ruin our cause. Hence the importance of keeping the unity of the spirit in the band of peace. In the p. m., Dr. Drummond spoke on the faith and hope of the gospel, with much interest. At night Sr. Mansfield spoke on the time and nature of reward. We had a great crowd out to hear, who listened with breathless attention. It was an effective discourse. We have had a good day for the cause in Michigan. Many new ones have come in, and our tents are all crowded, as also the buildings lent us by the Superintendent of the Fair Grounds.

FRIDAY, June 23. Elds. Preston, Ferris and Mackey occupied the stand to-day, and gave us good sermons. All the meetings have increased in interest to-day. God is with us.

In the reports of churches and ministers to-day, I find that we have about 1,300 members, sixty churches, and over forty preachers. These have been mostly gathered within five years. Truly, we may ask, "What hath God wrought!"

SATURDAY, June 24. We had a tremendous thunder storm and rain last night. But no damage was done. Some few got wet from defective tents. But our family tents from Buchanan, with the fly-roof, were entirely tight and dry as a board house. Our camp is all in good cheer. The dry air soon absorbed the moisture, and our camp was comfortable for prayer and preaching service. The a. m. was spent in conference in hearing the balance of the reports from ministers and churches; and arranging for our next feast of tabernacles.

In the p. m. Br. Babcock spoke to the unconverted. He made a strong appeal. At night Wm. L. Himes spoke on the subject of Christian character, from Eph. 3: 1–4. Two young men were then set apart to the work of the ministry—Brn. Branch and Graham. It was a solemn, simple and imposing service. It was said by many that they had never witnessed a scene of this kind of so deep and solemn interest. Prayer by D. R. Mansfield; charge by J. V. Himes, and right hand of fellowship by J. R. Preston.

Our camp was crowded, and many had to go to the hotels to-night for lodging. Next year if all is well, our people will come up with their tents in such numbers that all will have room.

SABBATH, June 25. After the heavy rains we have a clear day, with a bracing atmosphere, and all the camp are in good cheer. This is the great and last day of the feast. We have had seven services, all full, and of the happiest and deepest interest. Many were blessed. Some yielded to the truth and will in future enjoy "the blessed hope."

I spoke in the a. m. on the signs of the soon-coming of Christ. Sr. Mansfield spoke in the p. m. on the "influence and work of the Spirit;" and Eld. Mackey spoke on the way of coming to Christ, and of the promise to those who come, that they should be "raised up at the last day." The crowd listened to these discourses with the deepest attention. The doctrine was not only favorably received, but accepted by many as the gospel.

At the close of the last sermon the communion was administered to 150 souls. During the sitting at the table many testimonies were given by the faithful. It was a season of blessedness not to be forgotten.

Take it all in all, this has been the greatest and best meeting we ever had in Michigan. There has been much labor performed, and much fruit gathered in the last few years. It was hard to get started, but now that the work has fairly begun, it goes on with a rising and successful tide. The Lord keep us humble and faithful.

MONDAY, June 26. At an early hour most of the families packed up, when we broke camp and went on our several ways rejoicing. But we left the Pioneer Tent, and Brn. Mansfield and Preston, by invitation of the church, to remain and preach another week, with the hope of gathering souls to Christ. And I returned home for duties there.

I came here last Friday with Br. Mabey. We feared at first the wet weather might interfere with our meeting in the grove. But we have been happily disappointed in this. The meeting commenced yesterday morning in good earnest with a most precious love feast. It was good to be there. In the p. m. I gave a short address, having a practical turn, with a view to getting our hearts ready for labor in the meeting. In the evening I answered from the Scriptures the question: "Will Jesus come again?" Congregation and interest good. This morning at 10 1-2 o'clock, we had a large gathering. I took up the "signs of the times," and showed from five Bible standpoints that we may reasonably expect the end of this dispensation and the inauguration of the eternal age to come soon. Oh! blessed hope! The Savior's terrestrial and celestial omens of the Advent are in the past. Paul's "perilous times" are here. The departing from the true faith and giving heed to "seducing spirits," which was to be near the end, has been fulfilled. The prophetic predictions and historic facts of the Papacy, also, show that the time is nearly accomplished when the kingdom is to be given to David's rightful Heir.

This afternoon I continued the subject of last evening in answer to the query: "How will Jesus come?" We had a free time in giving the Bible view of this blessed subject. Congregation very large; don't see where so many people come from. In the evening we had the largest turn out. The grove was literally full. Was quite hoarse and weary from the hard work already performed, but upon the whole had a very profitable time, and the meeting closed with a fine interest. I never enjoyed two days better in my life than I have with the dear brethren of this community. There is truly a bright prospect for the extension of the cause of truth all through this country. Br. Mabey has labored faithfully here and his labors have not been in vain. I shall never forget this pleasant and happy season. Although I am very weary yet I feel doubly repaid in the consciousness of having done my duty and in seeing the cause prosper.

Last Sabbath I had the pleasure of leading two more intelligent believers into the water, where they understandingly put on Christ by being buried in the likeness of his death; and raised with him "through the faith of the operation of God." The ordinance being administered according to the divine appointment, spoke the language God intended it should speak; and caused some to question whether they had done the will of God in submitting to the meaningless form of man's arrangement rather than the beautiful symbol appointed by our heavenly Father, which so vividly illustrates those precious truths which form the asis of the Christian's faith and hope. Praise the Lord.

Next Lord's day I am to preach at Beemerville, where last winter assisted, by Br. L. H. Davis, I held a series of meetings, which resulted in organizing a little church of eight members. Six were baptised; and others, I think intend to join. The meeting was held in the Methodist church, which is open for our use. The Methodist members treat us very kindly. I trust a church will be raised up here that will be an honor to the cause of our dear Lord.

I am still striving for the faith "once delivered to the saints; for the glorious life and immortality brought to light by the gospel through Christ. We have lately been called on to see exemplified loving confiding trust in Lord Jesus, in the death of a lovely young girl of our connection, just blooming into womanhood. On being often asked, "How is your mind today?" The answer was, "All peace, I expect to meet you all in that better land." Not a struggling of doubt or darkness or conflict with evil did she encounter, but with childlike trust in the offer of salvation, "fell on sleep."

I must say I felt reproved and encouraged, and with an increased trust in God and the words of his promise. I feel I am nothing without the grace of God.

We will rejoice in the parable of our Savior: "Where the carcass is, there the eagle be gathered together." There will be the better land. Christ compares us, when he shall come, to the strongest birds of flight. We shall mount up as on the wings of an eagle, we shall run and not be weary; we shall walk and not be faint." The thought is deep and thrilling. We have need of patience, holy living, faith and love amid all the cares, sufferings, death, disappointments and uncertainties of these days. Let us strive to keep our heads above the tidal waves of life. Great, and exceeding great are the promises of God.

From J C Laughlin Mitchell Co Io June 12

I love to read the letters of the dear brothers and sisters of like faith. I have lived in the West nearly twenty years, and have not heard an Advent preacher. Indeed, I did not know till lately that there were any Adventists in this county, but I find there is at least one in almost every place. I am searching them out, and will try and have some preaching soon. I find there are quite a number down the Little Cedar, toward Floyd. I live ten miles north-east of Osage. I want the brethren to stop and see me. I think Osage would be a good place for a campmeeting. I pray God there may be a great waking up at some place around here, so that we can have a church of our own. Brethren, pray for me and for the Advent cause.

From W Johnston Shiremanstown Penn

I went to Siddensburg, six or seven miles from here, last Saturday. Attended Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. I had an appointment given out for preaching at night, and the Bethel was crowded with people from the village and country to hear the "old man of eighty-three years." I spoke from Rom. 6, the three last verses, and, I am ashamed to say it, last Sunday night was the first time that I preached the whole truth and the plain truth contained in these verses, in the State of Pennsylvania.

At the conclusion of the discourse a prominent member of the church offered up one of the most earnest and affecting prayers, embracing all the strong points discoursed upon, that I ever heard. His whole soul appeared to be enraptured with the idea of the coming of Christ to reward his humble followers with crowns of glory and eternal life. He prayed earnestly for the careless ones, who were rushing on to death, that dreadful death—the second death, from which there will be no resurrection. He prayed for the old brother, and that the truth they had listened to might make lasting impressions on every mind. Upon the whole, it was the best meeting I have attended for the last three years.

I would like to say a few words to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, and especially to those acquaintances and fellow-laborers of '43, who would like to know where I stand and what I have been doing since they heard from me. I would say I stand in the same path as in former days—the path of obedience; but know that I have made some advancement in it. I am looking for that very same Jesus and expect to see him very soon. I have passed through prosperity and adversity, light and shade, sickness and health, and through it all the Lord hath kindly held me up.

I truly thank God for affliction, for I know that we (I say we, for my husband is with me in it all) have been and are still learning many a lesson of humility, patience, and trust, that we never otherwise would have known. With what firm and steady confidence we now look for the coming of our Savior Jesus Christ, and with what mute patience we wait for his appearing, with joy unspeakable, anticipating the day, our loving and faithful Father, whose hand holds the rod, only knows! How many lessons it has taken to teach us where our great strength lies, and make us able to say at all times, and under all circumstances, not my will, but thine be done.

Many years ago I ventured out on the promises of the Lord as I then understood them, and could say and feel, I know that all things work together for good to me, for I knew that I loved God. Storms and tempests have tossed me hither and thither, still by the grace of God I have been enabled to hold on to the text referred to above, and have never for one moment been turned away from the hope of the gospel. But when I first started out and said "all things," that sum was very small to what it is now. I thought then it only included a few things expressly connected with my spiritual enjoyment; but I have been learning day by day to add to that sum all things with which I meet, and all that pertains to me temporally and spiritually. All things! I find the conditions to be not a profession to love God, but an inward emotion of the heart, that brings trust and confidence, the effect of which is peace like a river; peace that passeth understanding; peace that the unheard of temptations and commotions of these last days cannot disturb. This, my dear brethren and sisters, is a part of the lesson I have been silently studying these years, in which many of you have not heard from me. And although the chastening rod has often been applied to make me understand and remember the lesson more perfectly, yet I can kiss the hand that holds it, and feel that it is good for me to be afflicted, and can say more emphatically than ever, I know that all things work together for good to me.

From S E Lanphere Paw Paw Mich. June 11.

I get almost discouraged sometimes. It has been nearly one year since I heard an Adventist preach. If it was not for the paper which I receive regularly every week, I should be entirely lost. When I receive it I with eagerness peruse its pages to see if I cannot find something that has taken place that declares our blessed Redeemer nigh. I know that it will not be long before that day will appear. Oh! who will be ashamed in that day, and cry for the rocks and mountains to fall on them, to hide them from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne. But I want to live so that I may hail that day with joy, hear the welcome, Come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Pray for me.

THE GREAT NEED OF THE CHURCH.

There is no organization needing to be reformed more than the church of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. When upon earth, he threw aside all the old forms and beliefs, and made it his work to lift men up to a hi[illegible] —physically, morally, intell[illegible] and last, but not least, spi[illegible] Religion, like politics, has drifte[illegible] to sects and parties; men in a church are prized and petted according to the amount of party spirit they possess; if one will only believe that their church is the only one worthy of the name of church, then he will pass as orthodox, otherwise not. We fear that the work of reform and religion will soon have to be done outside of the church, for it is getting to be notorious that men, not even moral, are sent out as representatives of churches. Such men have left more infidelity on the field where they have walked with their wolfish feet, than all the infidel books could possibly do. Now, we are well aware of the hatred such exposures will bring down upon our heads, but we propose to cry aloud and spare not, until we see better and holier men sent out to do a God-like work. God wants no man wallowing in the slough to do his work, until he has, at least, washed himself. God usually puts Cain's mark on such men, and the hollow, hypocritical voice, tell the story of deception plainer than words; and all the oil and soft soap don't satisfy a truly spiritual nature.

Were that dear Savior to stand again upon earth, as he did when he wept over Jerusalem, how he would weep over the fallen condition of his church—He who wants pure and holy hearts and lives to do his work; men in whom should dwell the ever conscious presence of the Spirit; men that should live so near God that their presence would be a rebuke of sin; men who will not hate a brother, or try to tyrannize over him, but in whose heart there is ever found a desire to help man not to be a member of our party, but to be good, pure, holy, consecrated, Christ-like Christian, trying all the time, everywhere, in every way, to help men to be better.—Life Boat.

DR. BROOKES ON THE GREAT IMAGE.

In the second chapter of Daniel there is recorded the remarkable dream of the king of Babylon which the prophet of God recalled to the mind of the monarch.

There is no dispute concerning the meaning of the various portions of the image before described. That they signify the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman empires is admitted by post-millennialists without a moment's hesitation. This is the view of Barnes, and of all other commentators whom I have had an opportunity of consulting. Even Gibbon could say, "the four empires are clearly delineated; and the invincible armies of the Romans described with as much clearness in the prophecies of Daniel, as is the histories of Justin and Diodorus." Indeed, it is apparent that we have here and in subsequent chapters of the book of Daniel a symbolical history in prophetic outline of what our Lord calls "the times of the Gentiles." (Luke 21: 24.) At the beginning of the Babylonian captivity, Israel, having proved to be utterly unworthy of the exalted trust committed to it, was rejected, and the power that might have been wielded by a government that was once a pure and happy Theocracy passed into the hands of the Gentiles. It pleased our Father to reveal the character and course of this Gentile dominion down to the close of the present dispensation, and this is what we have in Nebuchadnezzar's vision. It is a fact so remarkable it cannot be explained at all except on the ground of divine inspiration that a captive Jew living six hundred years before Christ boldly and repeatedly asserted that there was to be only four universal monarchies until the close of the world's troubled history. Nor do we need to resort to human authority to confirm the truth of the prediction, for in the word of God we find the four monarchies distinctly designated, and that word is sufficient without adding to it the poor testimony of man.

"Thou," said Daniel, addressing the king of Babylon, "art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron." Babylon then is the first kingdom, and in the eighth chapter of Daniel where the course of Gentile dominion is described under another symbol. it was said to the prophet, "the ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia. And the rough goat is the king of Grecia." (Dan. 8: 20, 21.) Here therefore, are three of the kingdoms named by the Holy Ghost, and by turning to the gospel according to St. [illegible] we read "that there went out a [illegible] from Cæsar Augustus, that all [illegible] should be taxed." (Luke 2: [illegible]) Hence we do not ask uninspired history to tell us what kingdoms obtained universal dominion over the earth, for the Sacred Scriptures inform us that they were the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman, and besides these there will be none other to the time of the end. Men of boundless ambition, and marvelous military genius, and powerful resources, like Charlemagne and Napoleon, have endeavored to establish kingdoms equal to these in extent and duration, but their efforts have been baffled and the scepter of universal empire has been wrested from their hands. "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: but the word of the Lord endureth forever." (1 Pet. 1: 24, 25.)

The reference in the prediction before us to the stone that was cut out without hands is generally thought to allude to the first advent of Christ, and to the setting up of his kingdom in the hearts of his people, and to the gradual spread of the gospel until all the kingdoms of the earth shall be brought within the pale of the Christian church; but a moment's examination will convince the unprejudiced reader that this view is wholly untenable. In the first place it is plainly declared that the last, or Roman empire, shall be divided when the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom [illegible] shall never be destroyed; bu[illegible] child knows that the Roman [illegible] as not divided when Jesus was [illegible] and the gospel began its blessed [illegible]eer. On the other hand it was at the zenith of its glory and grandeur, nor was it divided till centuries afterwards.... It cannot be therefore that the prediction concerning the stone was fulfilled at the birth of the Savior and at the introduction of his kingdom of grace through the preaching of the gospel.

In the second place, if it was the design of the Holy Spirit to teach that a sudden and swift destruction should overtake the kingdoms of the Gentile power, it would be impossible to use language more suitable to this end than when it is said that the stone should smite the image, and break it to pieces, and make it like the chaff of the summer threshing floors, so that the wind would carry it away, and no place could be found for it. But if it was the purpose of the Spirit to teach a gradual spread of the gospel and the conversion of the nations through faith in Jesus, it would be difficult to conceive of language more inappropriate or more calculated to mislead the humble reader. In no proper sense can it be said that the meek and lowly Savior attacked and destroyed the Roman empire at his first advent, but it is certainly true that the Roman empire, through its representative attacked and crucified him. In no sense were his disciples permitted to attack it, but on the contrary they were commanded to be subject to it, even though a Nero held the reins of government. And yet the words of the prophet clearly imply that a blow fell in an instant and with terrific force upon the image, grinding it to powder, instead of denoting the mild and peaceable progress of the truth through the earth." "On whosoever," says Christ, "it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." (Mat. 21: 44.) "This is the stone," says the apostle Peter, "which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner." (Acts 4: 11.) Again he writes, "unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed." (1 Pet. 2: 7, 8) How differently he writes to the church: "to whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 2: 4-6.)

Here then we have the relation which this stone sustains to the Jews, the Gentiles, and the church of God as the three great divisions of the human family recognized by the Sacred Scriptures, according as it is written, "give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God." (1 Cor. 10: 32.) To the church the stone is inexpressibly precious as the sure foundation of a heavenly hope; to the Jew it is a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence; and upon the Gentile dominion which will prove more utterly apostate than ancient Israel it will fall with dreadful energy, grinding it to powder. The Medo-Persian empire succeeded the Babylonian; the Grecian succeeded the Medo-Persian; the Roman succeeded the Grecian, each inheriting the authority as well as the territory of its predecessor, and deteriorating in splendor while increasing in power until the entire course of "the times of the Gentiles" is fitly symbolized in the vision of a colossal image, not to be changed into the likeness of Christ, but to be destroyed as suddenly as if crushed by a stone falling from heaven. The moral character of the Gentile dominion as independent and irrespective of God in its conduct is not only plainly declared in many portions of the Sacred Scriptues, but it is strikingly illustrated in the four chapters of Daniel which follow the one now engaging our attention. If any are disposed to ask why we should find at the end o the second chapter of the book such a remarkable break in the prophecy which is not resumed until the seventh chapter, and why the interval is filled with the personal actings of heathen kings, the reply is that God is setting forth in those actions the character of the Gentile power "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." In the third chapter we have its idolatry delineated in the golden image which Nebuchednezzar set up in the plain of Dura and which as a masterly stroke of state policy he required all the people to worship. In the fourth chapter we have the results of its brutal forgetfulness of God represented in the degradation of Babylon's proud monarch who was reduced to the level of the beasts. In the fifth chapter we have its gross impiety rehearsed in the wild revelry of Belshazzar when he "brought the golden vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God which was at Jerusalem; and the king and his princes, his wives and his concubines, drank in them." In the sixth chapter we have its daring self-exaltation typified in the blasphemous decree of Darius forbidding his subjects to offer prayer to any one except himself. Thus do these four chapters announce to those who have ears to hear that there is to be a wider and still wider departure from God during the period of Gentile dominion until the Stone shall fall upon it and make it as the chaff of the summer threshing floor; and as it has already been shown that this did not occur at the first coming of Christ and cannot occur until his second coming, the conclusion is irresistible that no millennium need be expected before his appearance in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.—*O. A correspondent of the Guide to Holiness makes the following statement, which we give for what it may be worth:

We learn on reliable authority that the Catholics are taking a course throughout the world to ascertain how many will stand by the pope. It is said they mean to fight for him if necessary. They appear to be getting ready for a death struggle. They find they can do but little without temporal power; and they intend to make one grand united effort for its restoration.

Scribner's Monthly is styled "the best, the most beautiful, the cheapest." We endorse the saying. The July number is fully up to its high standard. Scribner & Co., New York city. $3 a year. 25c. for single numbers.

LIGHT. This is the title chosen by Rev. A. Burgess for "a brief outline of his argument in a discussion with Br. Wm. A. Fenn, at East Randolph, N. Y." We consider the title inappropriate. We cannot use the term 'light' concerning its sentiments, except as the Savior once used the word; when he said, "If the light that is in you be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

The Religious Free Press is the title chosen for his new monthly by Dr. D. Winder, of Carthage, Ohio. It proposes, if we understand it, to give a hearing to every side of all Christian opinions, and to promote Christian union. Its tone is frank, manly, and independent. The editor is nominally a "Disciple." We shall watch his experiment with interest, and, so far as we can judge from Nos 1 and 2, be happy to chronicle his success. The Religious Free Press will be furnished at $1 a year. 25c. for three numbers.

Littell's Living Age gives an article from Blackwood's, that has caused much angry excitement across the water. Occupying thirty-four pages, is a striking composition, "The Battle of Dorking: Reminiscences of a Volunteer," which may be said literally to have alarmed and annoyed John Bull. It is a well-told narrative, which reads like truth, purporting to be related, fifty years hence, by a grandfather, who had "assisted," as a Volunteer, in the mock-review at Dorking, near London, in 1871. The veteran, supposed to talk to his grandchildren, A. D. 1921, traces England's decline, step by step; the loss of India and of Canada; the establishment of Ireland as an independent country; the annexation of Holland and Denmark by Prussia; a war with Germany, commencing with the defeat of the British fleet, and ending with the invasion, conquest, plunder, and occupation of England; the West Indies taken by the United States; the loss of Australia; Gibraltar and Malta ceded to Germany, which becomes a great naval power; trade gone, factories silent, harbors empty, pauperism predominant; credit lost, and oppressive taxes levied by the conquerors. This, after all, is on the cards, and therefore the government journals, because of its truth, have bitterly denounced this remarkably outspoken article in Blackwood.

The above mentioned article may be found entire by American readers in No. 1411, of Littell's Living Age, published by Littell & Gay, Boston: price, 18c.

AT HOME.

A late daily paper says: Within the past two weeks, five girls under fourteen years of age, have committed suicide in the United States. One, of ten years, hung herself because her brother died. Two, between twelve and fourteen, poisoned themselves in consequence of love and disappointment. One, of eleven, told her companion she intended to jump rope until she killed herself, and did so, dying the next day. The fifth, only eight and a half years of age, threw herself into a mill-pond because her mother insisted upon her wearing copper toed shoes. To these may be added the novel suicide of a girl twenty-one months of age, the child of Mr. William Deavers, residing near Alexandria, Va. The child held its breath while in a pet, as children frequently do, and died, although she was perfectly well before the crying fit.

The Methodist asserts: The most menacing vice of the country is our growing unscrupulousness in business. It seems to be spreading everywhere, a moral miasma, poisoning the very life of the nation. It is corrupting our church life, as well as our business life, and, unless it be checked, we shall be overthrown in both. The most urgent duty of our pulpits and journals, at this hour, is the restoration of the national conscience.

This summer has been, so far, noted for an unusual number of severe and destructive hurricanes in various parts of the West. Of one in Illinois it is said that from the evidences left, it could scarcely have been exceeded in violence by the hurricanes of the tropics. Complete desolation marked its narrow track. And just now another has occurred in Butler Co. Kansas, still more violent and destructive. The young town of Eldora is nearly in ruins. A friend who witnessed the storm says that it was a most fearful and sublime sight. He being on the road, sought refuge behind a small hill or knoll, which sheltered him partially. He saw houses taken up and scattered as if they had been composed of feathers. His horse and buggy were taken up bodily and blown to a considerable distance—the one killed and the other smashed to atoms. He thinks that one hundred thousand dollars will scarce cover the damage. As this is a newly-settled district, the loss will cause a large amount of suffering, unless aid is received from without.

ABROAD.

England.

It is suspected that Germany is desirous of becoming a maritime power. Russia is known to be ambitious in the same direction. Both regard England as their great enemy and overshadowing rival—as the great bully of the ocean, in fact—for England invariably throws every obstacle she can in the way of any other nation seeking to become a naval power. The Emperor of Germany has just been visited by the Czar of Russia. Indeed, the two are together at Ems, at this moment; and it is suspected that this very matter of rivalling England on the sea is one of the chief reasons for their meeting. To this end, Russia is supposed to have a greedy eye upon Turkey, and Germany to entertain sinister designs upon Holland. And it is also suspected that Bismarck is shrewdly resolved upon laying conveniently the foundations of a quarrel with England for future use. Russia has already taken her step in that direction, by abrogating that part of the Crimean treaty most regarded by England. So strong are their suspicions that the English people have been much agitated by an article in Blackwood, entitled "The Battle of Dorking," which predicts the seizure of Holland by Germany within four years, that England will declare war, and that Germany will invade and conquer England, as she did France, and that Germany is already preparing for this performance. Indeed, it is a general apprehension in England that it will be her turn next to measure swords with Germany.—Detroit Tribune.

Says a London letter: "The old war between guns and targets is still going on, and for the moment the targets are having the worst of it. Trials at Shoeburyness have shown that ships' decks, when plated with iron one and a half inches in thickness, are not proof against large Palliser shells; and that the sides of most iron-clads at present afloat are perfectly vulnerable at 1,000 yards distance when attacked by modern heavy ordnance. The Woodwich Infant, as it is called, when filled with picric powder, glyoxiline, lithofracture, or similar compound, will act like a mine, and sink, burn and destroy to an extent hitherto unknown."

The John Bull newspaper, of London, believes that "England is hastening, with self-accelerated momentum, to the dreary abyss of democracy."

The Dublin correspondent of the "Pall Mall Gazette says that thousands of well-dressed, intelligent young men and women are leaving the ports of Dublin, Derry, Cork, and Waterford for the United States. The Inman line of steamers was increased during the month of May by the purchase of two ocean steamers, to meet the increased demand for passage to America; and the Cunard vessels often leave passengers behind.

France.

Pere-la-Chaise presents a deplorable sight; the resting places of the dead are much defiled; the monuments have been greatly injured by the firing; coffins have been broken, and the remains lie scattered over the ground. You may measure the dead not by numbers but by the rod. They lie in a double tier on the grass, powdered with a coat of lime. There are many women among them, and faces the ferocity of which makes one sick to look upon. In one place there was a hole dug knee deep to hold the people while being shot. The blood is still in pools there. At Belleville there is a continuous chain of sentries in the streets, and strong posts at each corner are required to dominate the still active ferocity of the district. The women curse the soldiers as they pass, who, on their part, smile at their impotent ebullitions of fury. Scarcely any men are left in the district. Those who are curse, and hate with a fury which no force can quell. The Chateau d'Eau and the neighborhood are ghastly ruins. Everywhere are barricades; everywhere shell and bullet marks."

Spain.

The impending crisis in Spanish political affairs has come at last. The party of the government has not been able to withstand the combination of Republicans, Carlists, and Progresistas in the Cortes, and has been outvoted on the question of an address to the Throne. The Cabinet having resigned, Serrano has undertaken the difficult task of creating a new one. This is probably only the beginning of troubles for the royal Savoyard who just now happens to be at the head of the Government of Spain. The Opposition is growing more confident, bold, and—what is more—united; and Amadeo is but an experiment, after all.

Asia.

A Bombay telegram of late date says: Yakoob Khan, since the capture of Herat, has met with further successes, and is marching on Kandahar.

The following sketch from the New York Tribune will give our readers a clear idea of the above dispatch:

It is to the interest of Russia, in pursuing her conquests in Central Asia, to advance cautiously and quietly, and so successful has she been that she seriously menaces the predominance of England in that region. Khiva having been captured by the Russians, nothing separates them from India but Afghanistan. The ruler of that territory, Shere-Ali Khan, has been sustained in his power by the English, who desired to extend a sort of protectorate over him, and to this end granted him liberal subsidies in arms and in money to assist him against the Persians, the hereditary enemies of his country. It appears to have been the policy of the English to procure an ally in Shere Ali Khan, who might be of service in preventing the Russians from pushing their conquests to the borders of India. At one time the English showed a great desire to capture Herat, in the northwestern part of Afghanistan. But their plans are seriously menaced. Yakoob Khan, the son of Shere Ali Khan, having been deprived of his rights by the latter, has made friends with the Persian, and, with some wild bands, has captured Herat; not satisfied with this, he is now marching on Kandahar, the residence of his father, in the interior of Afghanistan.

Arminius Vamberg, the famous traveler in Central Asia, foresaw the danger of England, and quite recently in a letter to the Times of London, wrote:

"I repeat what I said before—the capture of Herat is the beginning of the end of Shere-Ali Khan's rule, being led to that supposition by the following circumstances: 1, judging from my personal acquaintance with Yakoob Khan, and with the men of his surrounding—namely, his doctor and his chief aide-de-camp, I am fully convinced of his aversion to the English, to their alliance, and to their influence in the affairs of Afghanistan. Having fostered those ideas when comparatively a child, he had no opportunity, and still less the will, of changing them now in a riper age, when he saw that the English were the chief impediment in his ambitious way, and that he really must gather all his strength to overcome them. Already at the meeting of Umballah, it excited astonishment that Yakoob Khan, who made himself famous by the valorous defense of the cause of his father, did not appear on British soil to partake in the honors bestowed upon the successor of Dost Mohammed. At that time the Anglo-Indian press made us believe that he was kept back at Cabul in order to have an eye on the unruly elements of that town. This report found its believers, but I always knew that the most unruly element is in the brain of Yakoob Khan itself, and that it was only his English antipathy which bade him renounce the gifts presented by the Earl of Mayo on behalf of the Queen. 2. He has always been on good terms with the King of Persia, and it is not improbable that his persevering in the long struggle against the forces of his father, and his final success before the walls of that fortress, where Major Todd and Eldred Pottinger made themselves immortal, is chiefly owing to Persian support and Persian friendship."

It now remains to be seen whether the British Government will give Shere Ali Khan such material support as will enable him to repulse the insurgents, or whether they will leave Yakoob Khan to carry out his own projects which are already very popular with the Afghanistans.

FAMINE IN PERSIA.

Persia is suffering from a terrible famine, details of which have just begun to reach us. It is so severe that parents are giving their children away into slavery, and starving men digging up the corpses of the buried to feed upon them. The Province of Khorassan—the same which is celebrated by Moore, in Lalla Rookh, seems to be the region most afflicted. It is a barren region, dependent upon irrigation for the moisture necessary to raise the scanty crops of grain and fruit which serve to subsist its people. The political and religious despotism of the Shah of Persia is so oppressive as to leave little opportunity or incentive for developing the arts of industry, hence the country is liable to famines. The present one, however, is much worse than usual, and seems to be quite as severe as that which visited the neighboring country, India, a few years ago, with such terrible results.

The severest famines of the last hundred years have been those of Bengal, in 1771; Cape de Verd, in 1775, when 16,000 persons perished; France, in 1789; England, in 1795 and 1801; Drontheim, in 1813, growing out of the war between Sweden and Denmark; Ireland in 1814, '16, '22, '31, and '46; and that of India already referred to. The destitution of Ireland was the greatest in 1846, and many of our readers remember the horrors of that catastrophe, as they then appealed to our sympathies, and elicited our substantial aid. The sufferers by the present famine are probably too remote to receive such succor from this country.

The general results of the darkness afford an interesting study both for the scientist and the divine. The natural world was singularly affected. All the brute and feathered creation seemed puzzled and agitated. The birds ceased to fly, and hid themselves in the branches of the trees. As the darkness increased they sang their evening songs as they do at twilight, and then became silent. Pigeons on the wing took to the shelter of the forest as they do at night. The whip-poor-will, as if it were truly night, cheerfully sang his song through the gloomy hours. Woodcocks, which are night birds, whistled as they only do in the night time. Bats came out of their hiding places and flew about. The fowls marched solemnly to their roosts as they do only at nightfall, and after cackling for a while over the mystery of so short a day, became still. Cocks crowed as is their custom at nightly intervals and the early breaking of day. Frogs peeped their evening concert, and dogs whined or howled and ran away as on the approach of an earthquake. The herds of cattle on New England's thousand hills sought the shelter of the shed or barnyard, lowing as they came to the gate, and sheep huddled around in a circle with their heads inward—the invariable token of apprehended danger.

On the human family the effect was still more curious and terrifying. The mechanic left his tools in the shop, the farmer his plow in the furrow, and each moved in silent and marveling mood toward the barn or dwelling. On the home threshold they were met by pale and anxious women, who tremblingly inquired, "What is coming?"

seeking the sympathy of his fellow man as one impressed with a sense of impending peril, put up at the nearest house and mingled his anxious questionings and forebodings with those of the family. Strong men met and spoke with surprise on their countenances, and little children peered timidly into the deepening gloom, and then sought the sheltering parental arms. Schools broke up in affright, and the wondering pupils scampered homeward with many expressions of childish fear. The inevitable candle shone out at the windows of all dwellings—every countenance gathered blackness—all hearts were filled with with fear of an approaching, unparalleled storm, or the occurrence of a terrestrial convulsion, but it was not the blackness of the storm cloud, such as sometimes with frightful agitation breaks over a single city; it was the silent spreading of the pallcloth over the earth by strong, invisible hands. Many anecdotes of terror are related. Men well remembered the earthquake of a quarter of a century before, but this darkening of the earth at noonday—what could it portend? In Boston, from the hours of 11 or 12 till 3 o'clock, business was generally suspended and shops were closed. Those who had the courage to continue them open, illuminated them artificially. At Groton, a court was in session in a meeting house full of large windows, as was the old style of houses of worship, but at half-past eleven all faces began to wear a somber hue, whereupon magistrate and people followed suit with all New England, and called for lighted candles—gas and kerosene being then unknown in the land.

Very little of jesting or humor concerning the day was indulged in. Indifferent persons who were enthusiastic and anxious during the darkness gave way to some raillery as soon as the shadow disappeared before the welcome shining of the sun. When the news was carried to England, gentlemen who were prone to laugh at the expected discomfiture of the then revolutionary colonies allegorically of the gloom thrown over the minds of the "Boston rebels by reason of the reduction of Charleston, the defeat of Clinton, etc.; but when subsequent letters confirmed the tidings and asserted the event to have been a sober, literal fact, astonishment knew no bounds. Meanwhile the jeering tories sent home word that "it was the devil spreading his wings over the northern rebellious colonies, and if they do not repent, the next time he will certainly [illegible] off with them all." But the answer from England was: "I do not believe all the wise men of Boston will be able to explain it."

But it cannot be denied that the predominating feeling on that day was awe and fear. At many a dinner table no food was eaten; the family sat pale and often silent. Amazement hushed all boisterous sounds. If any spoke it was in a low, subdued tone. Pious fathers took down the family Bible, read it reverently, and then kneeled and prayed. Prof. Samuel Williams of Harvard College testified years after that the terror "surpassed description." The bells were rung in the large towns, and the people in masses forsook their toils and crowded into the churches. Thousands sought the minister for an explanation of the darkness, who, in response, took Mat. 24: 29, 30. or Rev. 6: 12, or Isa. 13: 10, or Ezk. 32: 7, or Joel 2: 31, or some other sacred prediction of the darkening of the sun, and improved upon them in sermons on

THE LAST DAY.

The neighbors flocked around holy men, who calmly pointed them to the Lamb of God as their only refuge at all times. Some, with lanterns, went from house to house with warnings on their lips. The darkness was compared to that which overspread Judea at the crucifixion of of our Savior, and it was asserted to be not a whit less divinely caused. Sober men, unaccustomed to such a freak of nature, deemed the Day of Doom at the door. We cannot sneer at these alarms; they are legitimately born. President Dwight, an adult eye witness, asserts this to have been "the general opinion." Even the gathered wisdom of the Council of Connecticut waited and listened, writes Whittier,

"To hear the thunder of the wrath of God, Break from the hollow trumpet of the cloud."

The darkness of the day having been succeeded for an hour or two before evening by a partially clear sky, and the shining of the sun, still obscured by the black and vapory mist, this interval was followed by a return of the obscuration with greater density, that rendered the first half of the night hideously dark beyond all former experience of the probably a million of people who saw it. From soon after sunset till midnight no ray of light from moon or star penetrated the vault above. It was pronounced "the blackness of darkness." Horses in numerous instances, when wanted for service, could not be compelled to quit the stable. Others on the highway, unable to see for the darkness, seemed to be seized with fear, and moved their feet cautiously and with bewildering hesitation, as if apprehensive of plunging into an abyss. Travelers on foot, who supposed themselves acquainted with every foot of the road, lost their way in familiar localities. Some totally bewildered, shouted for aid but a few rods from their own door. Lost persons in some instances felt their way home, being guided by the fence. Dr. Adams says almost everybody who was out that night got lost. Sharp eyes could not distinguish between the heavens and the earth, the line of the horizon and white large substances placed before [illegible] discovered either in their color or outline. At nine o'clock the moon rose at her full, but had not the least effect to dispel the death-like shadow. At between nine and ten, a sea captain more than a hundred miles from the New England coast, ordered his men to take in some sails, but they could not find their way without light of candles from one mast to another. Like a chain this blackness bound the whole coast line for more than 200 leagues. It was compared to a solid wall, impenetrable and forbidding, and had an oppressive, choking, overpowering effect on all who tried to brave it. At Salem an intelligent writer said: "Perhaps it was never darker since the children of Israel left the house of bondage." Dr. Samuel Adams and Hon. Wheeler Martin, as also others, testify that "it could be felt" on waving the hand in the air; language used by Moses concerning the supernaturally and miraculously produced cloud that shut down over Egypt, causing a "thick darkness" of three days' duration. But lest this description may be considered exaggerated by the excitement engendered by the immediate occurrence of this phenomenon, we here reproduce the strong language of Dr. Samuel Tenney, written in calm mood to the Historical Society five years subsequent to the scene he is describing; the language of a philosophic mind deeply impressed. He says: "The darkness of the following evening was probably as gross as ever has been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light. It wanted only palpability to render it as extraordinary as that which overspread the land of Egypt in the days of Moses. And, as the darkness is not substantial, but a mere privation, the palpability ascribed to that by the sacred historian must have arisen from some peculiar affection of the atmosphere, perhaps an exceeding thick vapor that accompanied it. I could not help conceiving at the time, that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable shades, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes was equally invisible with the blackest velvet." (To be concluded.)—D. T. T. in Boston Journal.

FIRST TRUTH—THEN SENTIMENT.

The Pall Mall Gazette (London) has the following strong and equally sensible language:

He seems to think that worship ought at once, or as soon as possible, to be moulded upon the April-shower view of life, and that to adhere to the highly dogmatic modes of worship now in use is "stupid obstinacy." We say that truth must come first and sentiment afterwards; and that it is far better to go on as you are, pending further inquiry, than to take as your guide in matters of public worship a sentiment which to many people is highly repulsive; and which very possibly may be founded on a mistake. Dogmatic forms of worship can at all events be discussed and may be set right if they are wrong; but found your worship on sentiment, and you arrest its progress forever, and shut out the prospect of arriving at truth. As "L. S." well observes, religion becomes a matter of taste, and ceases to be a matter of belief. You mix up your crying and your laughing, throw in a due proportion of rose-colored sky in the distance, and typify it all by your religion. No wonder that people should despise and neglect it in proportion to their vigor of mind and body. Sentiment ought to stand to faith—that is, to an opinion about facts—in the relation of effect to cause. Reverse this relation, and it becomes what the ivy is to the oak—an apparent support, but in reality a deadly enemy. Your belief makes you happy, your happiness makes you hug your belief, and it is first cramped and then stifled by embrace. It seems natural, and even beautiful, to say, Feed the poor, the weak, the ignorant, tired women and little children, with food convenient for them. Teach old age to look forward to a near and happy futurity. Help misery to rise out of itself and live a little while in a happier land than ours. But this in reality is cruel kindness. One thing only is good for all alike, strong or weak, men and women, old, young and middle-aged, the prosperous and the wretched, and that one thing is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as far as we know, or can reasonably conjecture what it is. If we are all to die like beasts, say so, and say so crudely and boldly. If it is certain, or reasonably probable, or barely possible, that we are to live after death, in such and such conditions, say that equally crudely and boldly. If nothing is or can be known or reasonably conjectured about it, and if in consequence it is the best course to let the whole subject drop, then say that; and if you have no opinion at all, hold your tongue and let others speak who have an opinion; but on some such rock as this—hard and stern as it may be—and not on the shifting sand of personal inclination, must all worship be built which is in the least degree worth having.

BE REVERENT.

I am much obliged to you for your kindness in answering my questions. I feel with you that the subject of the Divine existence is a "tremendous" one, and "should be approached very reverently." When I sent those queries to you I had heard the Deity spoken of in such a manner, here in the East, that I wanted to learn your opinion, and hence wrote. To me it seems there are two extremes—one mystifies everything beyond all conception, with its immaterialism, and the other is that of some who indulge in too gross views, thereby bringing our Creator down to our own level, and making him altogether such an one as ourselves. I have at times been shocked to hear some brethren talk upon this subject, treating it with such lightness and familiarity.

HEAVENLY PHOTOGRAPHY.

Fresh information from the next world has lately been received in London of a most interesting character. A certain Miss Houghton has furnished (under spiritual guidance) a series of portraits which are now on view and for sale in Bond-st. All London is crowding to see them: and it is no wonder, as among the subjects are to be found likenesses of the crown worn at present in his new abode by Prince Albert, flowers from heavenly hills, the Hollow of the Hand of the Holy Ghost, and eight separate views of the eye of Jehovah.

"The paintings to a purely earthly observer, "resemble," The Examiner tells us, "splodges "and dashes of lurid colors, or a full-bodied "black beetle mashed between two sheets of "marbled paper;" which description assumes a deep significance when we learn that each color has its spiritual meaning. Thus the "Rock of Ages" is expressed by yellow ochre (delicacy of mind), raw sienna (consideratedness), madder (adjustingness of temper), and more than all, brown pink (economy). This medley, which is to [illegible] by crowds of devout believers in Miss Houghton and her angelic painters with earnest zeal. We are led to suspect that either American spirits are sharper and more matter of fact than their brethren, or else that only the work-a-day part of heaven lies over our patch of the world's surface. We have no such subtle glories unfolded as these. Our spirits, it is true, have devoted themselves lately to pictorial art, but it was rather in a photographic line. They have been going about through Ohio and among the Pennsylvania Dutch leaving likenesses of themselves on street lamps and drug shop windows, in indubitable trowsers, coats, and crinoline. Occasionally, the portrait of a ghostly pup, or chicken, or other spiritual poultry, has been found with the others. In one house in Ohio, the spiritual artists varied their labors at the camera by chipping the dresses of the women into shreds, tumbling the old ladies down the cellar stairs, and abstracting greenbacks to no inconsiderable amount from the breeches pocket of their host.

Seriously, we have every cause to think that art in all its branches is but poorly comprehended in the future world. If the Ohio lamp-post daguerreotypes and Miss Houghton's efforts are the best which new-comers of æsthetic tastes may look for throughout the coming ages in the heavenly regions, it is a pity that moth and dust will be left to corrupt their Turners and Jeromes here, and that they cannot be taken with them.

Belief in these things is by no means confined to the illiterate or vulgar. Some of the wisest, most practical, most refined men and women among us give them unswerving confidence. How do they explain these mysteries? Is there no way by which they can make this hurly-burly of raps, dancing tables, inane rapsodies, and colored daubs representing the "Eye of Jehovah," as attractive to an ordinary mind as the heaven of which they have robbed us—the shadow of eternal beauty and eternal peace from hills afar off, beyond which each man in his rare best moments saw his God and his loved ones as in a dream?—N. Y. Tribune.

An editorial in the Examiner and Chronicle, discussing the "best evangelizing agencies," concludes that the best evangelizing institution is the individual Christian.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

John [illegible]; Romans [illegible]; Philippians 1: 20: 21; Revelation 22: 3-5; 1 Thessalonians [illegible].

"A little while" of mingled joy and sorrow,
A few more years to wander here below,
To wait the dawning of that golden morrow,
When morn shall break above our night of wo.

"A little while" for winning souls to Jesus,
Ere yet we see his beauty face to face;
A little while for healing soul diseases,
By telling others of a Savior's grace.

"A little while," and we shall dwell forever
Within one bright, one everlasting home,
Where time, or space, or death no more can sever
Our grief-wrung hearts—and pain can never come.

'Tis but "a little while;" the way is dreary,
The night is dark, but we are nearing land;
Oh! for the rest of home, for we are weary,
And long to mingle with the deathless band!

WAITING FOR JESUS.

"Jesus I wait." Last words breathed soft and low
From dying lips grown tremulous and faint;
O great Life giver, Thou didst surely know
The yearnings of Thy saint.

Waiting,—a moment only,—just a pause,
A hush before the music had begun;
A silence ere the cloudy veil withdraws,
And the bright home is won.

"Jesus, I wait." Is he not waiting too,
With hands outstretched in welcome, and with eyes
Brimful of love; to guide his servant through
The gates of Paradise?

Teach us to live, and living, wait for thee,
Redeemer,—making life and labor sweet;
Watching and working till our eyes shall see
The face they long to greet.

Our highest earthly bliss, to do thy will;
Our hope, the promise of thy great reward:
Our effort, all thy purpose to fulfill,
And magnify the Lord.

Teach us to wait,—as waits the ripened corn
In golden fullness for the reaper's hand;
Meet for thy garner, when the harvest morn
Dawns o'er the weary land.

And Thou wilt come with radiant angel train,
Lord of the harvest: calling all thine own;
Then shall we greet our dearest ones again,
And know as we are known.

Then shall the endless festival begin,
And the long waiting, as a dream, go past;
For love, triumphant over death and sin,
Shall reign supreme at last.

CHAPTER I.

I do not know but I am constitutionally different from many other peoble. I think in some respects I may be. Yet when I compare notes with others concerning my own feelings, hopes and desires, I find a remarkable resemblance, at least in one important respect: for all desire to be happy, here and hereafter. And not only so, but as a general thing the expectation is strong that whatever their condition may be here, in a future life they will be happy, though in most cases they admit some action on their part may be necessary to insure the fruition of their hope.

This latent impression is not by any means confined to Universalists, but seems to be a germ primarily planted by the Creator in the heart of humanity at large, and doubtless was designed to be, and often proves an oasis in the desert of this life, to cheer and refresh the spirit. What the effect on the world at large would have been if the doctrine had generally obtaintained, that all the race, irrespective of character, would ultimately realize this hope, I am unable to say; but one thing is certain: the almost universal propagation, for seventeen centuries, of the opposite doctrine—that the wicked, who constitute the vast majority of mankind, must, and will exist forever in torment as a punishment for their sins in this life, has not had a reformatory effect on the masses who have endorsed and believed it.

For it is true, as Theodore Tilton, for many years editor of the most widely circulated "orthodox" news-paper in the world, affirms, that "nine-tenths of all "the lewd fellows of the baser sort'—rowdies and ragmuffins, who use the name of the Lord Jesus to point their profane oaths—have never entertained a skeptical doubt as to Christ's divinity. Nine-tenths of the inmates of our state-prisons, and county-jails are thoroughly orthodox and evangelical in their belief. It is generally an old school Presbyterian, or Roman Catholic, or some extremely evangelical clergyman, who is chosen by the sentenced murderer to accompany him to the scaffold."

But while they sincerely believe in a burning hell where all unregenerate men immediately go at death, they do not intend, or expect to take up their final abode in that fiery realm. Not at all, for there is another item in their faith that bridges the vast gulf between Dives and Lazarus; and though it is but a narrow plank, they expect to walk it safely, and land at last in Abraham's bosom. I refer to the doctrine suggested in the old hymn—which they believe means, that they can serve the devil all their days safely if they can only have two minutes time before death to throw the fag-end of their lives to Jesus, so as to have their immortal souls wafted away to heaven and its glory.

> The vilest sinner may return;"

This portion of their theology has for its base and cap-stone the account given by Luke of one of the thieves who were crucified with Jesus. He, according to the record, repented just before his death, and (it has been taught) as a consequence of this act, instead of going to hell where a few moments before he properly belonged, sailed away that very day to Paradise. So they, after having done all the evil they could in the world, until outraged human law had numbered their days, follow his example, expecting the same result; and in their last moments exhort the gaping crowd, who have gathered to witness their execution, to follow their example and "meet them in heaven."

This is no ideal picture, but in nine-tenths of the executions, is a veritable truth is, as all do, or may know. The endless misery of the lost, or the immediate reception of rewards at death, both by the righteous and the wicked, based upon the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the repentant thief, or any other portion of the Bible, never emanated from the divine Master, but is an outgrowth from the Pagan belief in the innate immortality of man, and like it, owes its conception to heathenism.[1] The apostles never endorsed, believed, or taught it; and the honor (?) of first asserting it in the Christian church is due to Tertullian, a Presbyter of Carthage, in Africa, a Pagan convert, about A. D. 200.[2] Since that time though the dogma of eternal misery has been so thoroughly interwoven into the fabric of the faith of popular Christendom, that to deny it is considered rank infidelity, yet, it has ever been obnoxious to human minds, in proportion to their moral purity. Hence, while the low, the vile, and the corrupt adhere to it with pertinacious tenacity, and contemplate it without a shudder, the wise and the good, though often obliged by their creeds to endorse, yet in heart abhor it.[3]

There is another fact in this connection which should not be overlooked. It is this: that the character of nations and individuals is formed, and their actions toward their enemies are to a great extent guided by the supposed character of the Deity they worship. Find a vindictive nation, and you will find them believing in a vindictive God. So with individuals. Find a hard master, and you will usually find him imitating in that respect what he believes to be the teaching of his Deity. This fact is well illustrated in the case of our Pilgrim Fathers, who, though obliged to flee from their native country on account of religious opposition, yet when they obtained power, exercised it in the same way; thus adumbrating their belief in a stern, uncompromising, and, I may truly add, vindictive God. So it is to-day: for like begets like. And the main reason why at this hour enlightened nations are not as vindictive towards their enemies as the barbarous peoples are, is that while with the latter this false principle is so deeply seated that it governs and controls their actions, in the former, though a popular tenet of faith, yet the general impression of its truthfulness is so superficial that its deadly moral virus does not overshadow the mind. This may be thought by some rather severe, and it may be so; nevertheless it is unvarnished truth: for I speak not only from observation, but, so far as the demoralizing, paralyzing influence of this doctrine on the youthful mind is concerned, from experience, also, as you shall see. And while I chronicle the effect its application and influence had on me in early youth, I shall at the same time portray its influence on millions of others in like circumstances.

[1] On this point Herodotus, the oldest historian whose writings are now extant, says: "The Egyptians say that Ceres and Bacchus hold the chief sway in the infernal regions; and the Egyptians also were the first who asserted the doctrine that the soul of man is immortal." (Book 2, sec. 123.)

The Brahmins and Hindoos hold the same view of the nature of man, as is shown by the following extract from one of their works entitled "Bhagavad Gita" (Wilkin's translation, pp. 36, 37-40): "The soul neither killeth nor is killed. You can not say of it, it hath been, is about to be, or is to be hereafter. It is a thing without birth, it is ancient, constant and eternal. As a man throweth away old garments and putteth on new, so the soul, having quitted its old mortal frames, entereth into others which are new. The weapon divideth it not, the fire burneth it not, the water corrupteth it not, the wind drieth it not away. It is indivisible, inconsumable, incorruptible; it is universal, permanent, unmovable."

Hear also the testimony of Dr. John Mason Good (Book of Nature, p. 338): "The Hindoo philosophers, totally and universally denying a resurrection of the body, support the doctrine [of a future life] alone upon the natural immortality of the soul; while the Arabian philosophers (among whom was Job) passing over the immortality of the soul, rested it alone upon the resurrection of the body."

Dr. Whately, Archbishop of Dublin, in his work entitled Revelations of a Future State, says: "The very notion of the soul's immortality as explained by them [the ancient philosophers] involved the complete destruction of distinct personal existence."

[2] The following extract from his writings will give the reader a fair taste of his moral quality. Addressing the Pagans, he says: "You are fond of your spectacles, but there are other spectacles. How shall I admire, how laugh, how rejoice, how exult, when I behold so many kings and false Gods in heaven, together with Jove himself, groaning in the lowest abyss of darkness. So many magistrates who persecuted the name of the Lord, liquefying in fiercer flames than they ever kindled against Christians. So many sage philosophers blushing in raging fire, with their scholars whom they persuaded to despise God, and to disbelieve the resurrection. And so many poets shuddering before the tribunal, not of Rhadamanthus, not of Minos, but of the disbelieved Christ."

[3] This fact is well illustrated by Dr. Patton in his remarks to the Universalists some two years ago, in his own journal, the Advance. He said: "Do you imagine that only Universalists shudder at the idea of the eternal ruin of lost souls. All thoughtful men share your dread of the fact, and would gladly reject the doctrine, if they honestly could. Nothing prevents me personally from welcoming the doctrine that all will finally be saved, but the want of evidence for it. The Orthodox generally have the same feeling. It pains us to think that so many of our fellow men are living in sin, and dying without hope. We have had neighbors, friends and dear relatives who have died giving no evidence of Christian character, but of quite the opposite, and we should be overjoyed to know that at last we should all meet above, holy and happy. I frankly acknowledge that it would lift a dark cloud from the world and a heavy load from my heart could I believe your doctrine."

THE IMPENDING CONFLICT.

The Bible teaches us that man is depraved; that by nature he is at enmity with God; loving pleasure more than God; a despiser of those that are good. It teaches us that there is a constant warfare between the flesh and the Spirit, between darkness and light, and error and truth. This, I say, is what the Bible teaches, and if in looking out upon the world, we saw things to be different from what they are, then in this respect at least, the Bible would be at fault. But the Bible is not at fault, as the moral character of man everywhere shows itself to be just what the Bible declares it to be.

In all ages it has been demonstrated that "the carnal mind is enmity against God." Its first manifestation in the human race, was in Eden, and from that time to the present we can see the change demonstrated.

As there is a source from whence all good flows, so there must be a source of evil. If it is consistent to go beyond man, to trace this source of good then it is also consistent to go beyond him, in tracing our way to the source of evil. If the evil can be justly attributed solely to man's evil propensities, then the same principle of logic, will permit us to consider the opposite propensities as being the only source of good. The method of reasoning which leads to a denial of the existence of a personal spirit of evil, if carried out to its legitimate conclusion would also lead to a denial of the divine existence. I know that some Christians deny the one without denying the other; but it is because they have not followed to the end, their method of reasoning.

Between this spirit of evil and his adherents, and the followers of the truth of God, there has always been a warfare, and it will continue until he who is "the truth, and the life" shall come in glory and bruise, or, rather, crush, the serpent's head. The past six thousand years have been one long war, and while the enmity has never subsided, yet there are particular epochs or periods, which have been signalized by more than ordinary hostility, in which the battle has waxed hot and fierce. In Egypt we find more than ordinary efforts put forth to withstand the truth, and in the ensuing history of Israel, we see the efforts of "seducing spirits" to bring the worshipers of Jehovah, over to their idolatry and worship of demons.

Later, we see the spirit of evil working in Antiochus Epiphanes, till at last a fierce persecution is brought upon the people of God, in the endeavor to exterminate their religion from the earth. In the life of Christ and his apostles as recorded in the New Testament, we see the same hostility manifested in many ways; and these records which trace the conflict as it raged in the past, point forward by the finger of prophecy, to a time, then future, in which the conflict would be fiercer than in any preceding time.

The time or period of time which to Paul was future, to us is present, and signs on every hand indicate the "perilous times." In these perilous times Paul said certain ones would resist the truth even as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses; and surely we can see on every hand the hosts of the enemy, waging war upon God and the Bible, upon Jesus and his truth, and it is specially important for Christians and all that are interested in the cause of Christ, to be aware of the danger, and then to boldly face and resist it; to make no compromise with the enemy in any matter whatever, but to declare unconditional surrender the terms of peace.

The enmity of Satan has showed itself in many different ways; in all the various grades of unbelief, from Unitarianism to Atheism; but its latest manifestations is in what is called "modern Spiritism." Under the banners of this party, the various hordes of Satan are gathering with the avowed object of dethroning the God of the Bible; of wiping out all ideas of the atonement, and, in a word, of trampling the Bible and its religion in the dust.

Christian Reader, shall this be? Lukewarm professor, is not the advance of this anti-christ sufficient to arouse you from your lethargy? Unconverted one, are you longer to remain indifferent? Are you to continue saying you believe Christianity, without identifying yourself with its defenders? Oh! that the soldiers of Christ might arouse! That the unsteady ranks might be firm! That all discordant sounds might be hushed in the grand march on the enemy.

Christians, this is not the cry of an enthusiast, but the serious cry of alarm. When the forward watch, peering through the darkness of night, hears the roaring of the sea, and perceives the long, white line of foam, and knows that the vessel is bearing directly for the reef, is it the cry of an enthusiast, when he shouts "Breakers ahead!" Nay but it is the warning voice of a faithful man.

And now Zion's ship is laboring 'mid the perils of these last days with danger on every hand, shall the watch fail to give the alarm? Nay verily, he must lift up his voice like a trumpet and cry aloud and spare not.

It is a fact, an awful fact, that the great characteristic of the world to-day is infidelity and skepticism, and the time has come when the line of demarkation between the world and the people of God, can not be too distinctly drawn.

In this conflict, every individual is a participator, some unknowingly perhaps, but from a Bible standpoint there is no neutral ground. Hence every individual is identified with one side or the other. Reader, stop and ask yourself, Which side am I on? Jesus said, "he that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." (Mat. 12: 30.)

From his dwelling place in heaven, God looks down upon the children of men and sees but two parties: one he calls his children, the other he calls his enemies. Are you, dear friend, holding aloof from joining his children? Have you yet cast your lot with their's? Then if you are not with them, and if there be no neutral grounds, where are you? It is an important question, and I repeat it: Where are you?

And it is a question to be asked of professors of religion, as well; and particularly would I ask it of those who profess to be looking for the speedy coming of Jesus. Are you letting your light shine, or are you putting it under a bushel? Are you giving your influence and money toward sustaining what you consider erroneous doctrine, while it may be some Advent church in your vicinity is struggling for an existence? Is that the way to do, to say you believe the Advent doctrine, yet give your influence and your money to sustain those parties, who would love to see it subjugated? I fear that many who will read this, are so doing, but I think it doubtful if "Well done" ever salutes their ears when Jesus comes.

Christian brethren, let us not think of giving up the contest yet. Let us be faithful in our mission, in admonishing the household of faith, and in warning the ungodly world of its doom, and thus be found faithful at the coming of our Lord. C. E. BARNES.

MATERIALISM AS TAUGHT BY SCIENCE AND REVEALED IN GOD'S WORD.

ARTICLE FIRST.

Materialism is a subject extensively brought to the notice of thinking people for their personal investigation. It stands out at the present day in bold relief as directly opposed to the teachings of popular theology.

However much it may be antagonistic to ones early ideas, it is so great a truth based upon so many axioms that to rashly denominate it "Modern Infidelity," "An Exploded Heresy," etc., and judge it without a hearing, is simply foolishness. And every one who would not be antiquated in his ideas, must give it a candid and unprejudiced investigation.

If materialism be the "great error" that many popular modern divines and eminent philosophers are calling it, immaterialism, that axiom of axioms (?) will be in no danger in consequence of a little time spent in finding out where the "great error" of materialism lies. If materialism be a heresy, every live person wants to know why it is a heresy. If it be a truth, every lover of truth will wish to adopt it as his belief.

The one great difficulty encountered by immaterialists in considering materialism is a certain feeling of repugnance which always arises in ones thoughts when anything contrary to their former belief is brought to notice. This feeling expressed in words, is—"Altogether there are but two theories, the materialist and immaterialist; although but one can be right, and the other must be wrong, nevertheless as long as I can find one objection to materialism, I will refuse to adopt it as my belief although a thousand inconsistencies be shown me in *im*materialism." This feeling must be overcome and he who would give materialism and its opposite theory a fair hearing must approach their investigation in a different spirit, if he would distinguish between the truth of the one and the error of the other. He must say—"I will candidly examine each; and the one which approaches the nearer to perfection, that one will I adopt as the one most likely to be true."

That materialism is a truth which can be demonstrated by science, shown to be revealed in the Scriptures, and that the whole is consistent with common sense, I profess to show in these articles; as, also, that immaterialism is utterly without any such basis, and therefore ought not for a moment to be tolerated by those who love the truth. Let us then investigate materialism in the following order. (1) What is it, and what is its basis? (2) What relation does it bear to infidelity? (3) How does it compare with immaterialism in recommending itself to sensible persons for their belief.

MATERIALISM: WHAT IS IT AND WHAT IS ITS BASIS?

Materialism, as defined by the prince of lexicographers, Webster, is, "The opinion of those who maintain that the soul of man is not a spiritual substance distinct from matter, but that it is the result or effect of the organization of matter in the body." What is this grand truth based upon? Although not a savant with his Ph. D., nor a theologian with his D. D., yet we know our elementary knowledge of the sciences and of the Bible is in beautiful harmony with the claims of materialism. We know that the plain unsophisticated teachings of science, and the unspiritualized revelation of God to man, with, perhaps, a slight admixture of common sense, say in unmistakable terms that materialism is true.

First let us turn to science, and see what the knowledge of man will say upon this subject. Science proves the soul of man to be "the result or effect of the organization of matter in the body." What is the soul of man? For a definition of "soul" recourse must be had to the account of man's creation and, also, to the passages in which "soul" is included. Such reference will show that the primary meaning of soul is life. That life is the result or effect of the organization of matter in the body, we think no one who has studied the phenomena of life will deny. Let us turn to comparative anatomy, and trace life from its earliest indication. The first indication of life in the plant or in the animal is identical. It is motion in the germ cell. Matter that submits itself to the analysis of the chemist is placed in contact with matter which can also be analyzed, and motion is the result. Matter unites with matter and life results. The moment this life begins, that moment does it call for nourishment in the form of matter, and receives it from the abundant supplies an all-wise Maker has placed within its reach. This call is continued and responded to until through some mischance the supply is cut off, when death ensues. Then is not life dependent upon matter? Certainly. Then if the soul of man is this life, if that life results from and depends upon matter, and is incapable of existence independent of it, is not man's soul material? "Yes," one may say, "but according to this reasoning animals of the lower orders, and even plants have soul." Do we know that they have not? What do we have that they do not possess, though, perhaps, in a very faint degree. 'Intelligence,' say you? Let any one turn to his botany who fails to see that even a plant evinces intelligence in its instinctive turnings to nourishment and sunlight. Let any one study zoology who cannot admit that animals from the lowest orders up to man possess this.

This does not detract in the least from man's greatness, but, rather makes his superiority more manifest by the admission of contrast.

But Webster has a different definition for 'soul,' the one adopted by popular theology. The soul, in accordance with this definition is, "That part of man which enables him to think and reason." In defining "mind" he calls it "The power that conceives, judges or reasons." Turning to Prof. Upham's Mental Philosophy, we find him using the words soul and mind as synonymous; and, also, connected with soul and mind as a just equivalent we find the word spirit. Spirit is the "intelligent immaterial and immortal part of human beings."

Immaterialists claim science as being in favor of immortal-soul-ism. If the many works written by modern Socrates (?) and Platos (?) called Mental Philosophies, constitute the definition of science, then is their statement true. But science happens to be actual knowledge, not foggy metaphysical speculation, with guesses for a starting point. Give science, then, its true meaning, and we propose to show that it is decidedly against them. No one can claim to prove by science beyond a possibility that we are wholly material; but it can easily be shown that as far as we have any knowledge matter is inseparably connected with our existence. This once proven, immaterialism stands just on the basis that can justly be claimed for it, which is the imaginations and fancies of mankind, and not on man's knowledge.

Let us consider "mind" in its orthodox sense.

What is an evidence of mind? Thought expressed in word or gesture. What is the factor of thought? Let us again turn to Webster; "Thought is either the act or operation of the mind when attending to a particular subject or thing, or it is the idea consequent upon that operation." This is orthodoxy. The mind or soul is a "certain something I know not what," as Cicero says.

This certain unknown something—immaterial, immortal,—they conjecture to be the organ of thought; and by one sweeping unscientific guess, they think they have solved the whole problem in respect to man's present and the eternal hereafter.

We owe our thanks to men like Gall, Spurzheim and Combe, who, dissatisfied with mere guess-work, have pointed out the way to a tangible solution of the mystery connected with man's intellect. They, in the science of phrenology (which despite the derision heaped upon it and its advocates will rise to a first position among the sciences), have given us a basis upon which we can reason.

Phrenology claims that the brain is the organ of the mind and the direct factor of thought; and this is a fact so patent, so often demonstrated beyond the possibility of a doubt by every day experiences, that how men of general information can deny it to be so, without evidence to support their assertions, would be mysterious, but for history, which records the story of the days of Galileo. Let us cite a few instances in which lie direct proofs of the fundamental truth of Phrenology, that the organ of thought is the brain.

In a case reported by Dr. Pierguin, observed by him in one of the hospitals of Montpelier, 1851, he saw in a female patient in whom part of the skull had been removed the brain motionless and lying within the cranium when she was in a dreamless sleep; in motion and protruding without the skull when she was agitated by dreams; more protruded in dreams reported by herself to have been vivid; more so when perfectly awake and especially if engaged in active thought or sprightly conversation." (Combe's Const. of Man, p. 123.)

"Richerand attended a woman whose brain had been laid bare. One day he pressed upon it a little more forcibly than usual and the patient became silent and unconscious in the midst of a sentence. On removing his hand consciousness immediately returned. As no pain was felt he repeated the experiment several times and always with the same result. Similar cases are related by many other witnesses." (Combe's Lectures upon Phrenology, p. 96.)

Sir Astley Cooper relates a story of a seaman who had his skull fractured and brain compressed by a fall. For thirteen months he remained totally unconscious. On Mr. Clines raising the skull, consciousness immediately returned. The last thing the man recollected was a sea fight in the Mediterranean, thirteen months before, in which he had received the injury." (Ibid.)

"The brain is regarded by physiologists and philosophers as the organ of the mind." (Cutters Physiology, p. 346.) "We have, therefore, evidence from three different sources that the cerebral hemispheres are the seat of the reasoning powers, or of the intellectual faculties proper. First, when these ganglia are removed in the lower animals, the intellectual faculties are the only ones which are lost. Secondly, injury to these ganglia in the human subject is followed by a corresponding impairment of the same faculties. Thirdly, in different species of animals, as well as in different races of men, and in different individuals, the development of these faculties is in proportion to that of the cerebral hemispheres." (Dalton's Human Physiology, pp. 498–9.)

"It [the brain] is the material organ of the mental and moral manifestations." (Dunglison's Medical Dictionary, under "Cerebrum.")

Everyday experience but confirms the above opinions that the brain is the organ of thought. The sensation of weariness felt by the brain after severe and long applied mental exertion, shows that the brain has been engaged in the manufacture of thoughts, and like the wearied muscle it demands rest. (To be continued.)

IS IT TRUE?

Is what true? That Ps. 19: 7, has reference to the ten commandments as being a perfect law which converts the soul. This was so stated in public a few weeks since by a preacher of the Seventh-day Sabbath theory, while reviewing some part of a sermon preached by the writer in Albion, Me., on the covenants made with Judah and Israel.

If the ten commandments are a perfect law (as Sabbath keepers affirm,) why add two other commands greater than either of the ten; thus making twelve commands instead of ten? This was done by the preacher referred to above, and when we asked him at the time, if the two great commands to love God "with all the soul, and thy neighbor as thyself" were on the tables of stone, he replied by saying that "the principles of them were." Does a perfect law need such additions as this? Will it not be safe to reject such explanations of the plain word of God, and stand on the broad platform of the gospel, and strive with all our hearts to "provoke each other to love and good works" in these last moments of time? The apostle admonishes us to "avoid contentions and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain." (Tit. 3: 9.)

If the ten commands are a perfect law and are a rule of action, they must be perfectly adapted to the people of God under all circumstances. But right here is a failure. In a work by J. N. Andrews on Sabbath and Law (page 43), the writer admits that the Sabbath could not be kept by many of God's people in Egypt. This admission is fatal to the theory that the ten commands are a perfect law. What then will become of those who died in Egypt, while violating the Sabbath for many years! Are not God's ways equal?

Was Paul converted by the ten commandments? That law slew him once (Rom. 7: 9), but it took the "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 8: 2), or the law of the new covenant, to convert him. "The righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise. "Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is to bring Christ down from above.) Or, who shall descend into the deep? (that is to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach. That if thou wilt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10: 6–10.)

Is it not strange that Paul was not converted before, if the ten commands are a perfect law, converting the soul; Was not the jailer converted through faith in Jesus Christ (Acts 16: 30) and not by the ten commandmdnts?

OUR TIMES.

The times in which we live are fraught with the most momentous consequences. All nature is pregnant, and her universal throes and pains and restlessness portend the speedy dissolution of the present state of things, preparatory to the glorious, final, and eternal restitution of all things. Every nation under heaven is clamoring for change. Rulers and subjects are everywhere in opposition to each other, thus giving tokens of their final, certain, and sudden perdition.

And how is it with the church? Many have departed from the faith, "giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." The bride of Christ is married to Cæsar, and hence what belongs to Christ is given to Cæsar. What will Cæsar do? what has Cæsar done? He banished the Lord Jesus Christ from the face of the earth, as the most disgraceful and infamous character that ever lived. And for what? what did the blessed Jesus do to incur all these taunts and reproaches and gibes and insults and crucifixion? It is true he was a poor man. His parents were poor. He was a carpenter. He was of the seed of Abraham, the son of David, a meek and lowly person, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He did no one any harm. He went on doing good. He loved everybody, and prayed for those who abused him. He spent whole nights in agonizing prayer upon the cold ground. He told the people if they would love and serve him, he would pardon their sins, sanctify their nature, sustain them amid all life's duties and sorrows and cares, and then give them immortality and eternal life with himself amid the splendors of a regenerated universe. And to show them that he could do all this, he was declared to be the Son of God with power. His mighty miracles, the wonders attending his death, his glorious resurrection and triumphal ascension, were all that was necessary to convince the world that he was able to save to the uttermost all that would come to God by him.

Now, where do you see in all the churches, or any of them, that repentance unto life, that faith which works by love, that all-subduing and consecrating power of God's Holy Spirit, which unites and holds together all the professed followers of the blessed Jesus in one vast army, fighting side by side with the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, for truth and righteousness, against the world, the flesh, and the devil? Alas! alas! private prayer, family and social religion, have almost disappeared from the church of God; and, in their stead, we have drinking and drunkenness, fiddling and dancing, balls and fairs; so that, instead of having one poor, old antichrist (whose doom is at the door), we have a thousand new ones springing up all around us. Surely we have got back again to the days of Noah. O Lord, how long? O Jesus, come quickly; come now. Come like the lightning's flash, put an end to evil, and bring in everlasting righteousness.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 11, 1871.

EDITOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

There are many calls for labor, and I can supply but few of them. If I could multiply myself many fold, I should still have work for every hour. But as I can be in only one place at a time, I choose to go among those who seem the most needy, and least able to procure and sustain preachers of the word.

Those who wish my labors during the coming season will please give early notice, that I may arrange my work to the best advantage. Conferences, Quarterly, or other, who request my services, will please make appointments so as not to conflict with each other in point of time.

PRESENT APPOINTMENTS.

Girard, Kas., July 15 and 16. This meeting will be held in the grove near Br. Joseph Freed's residence, eight miles from the city of Girard. There will be teams to convey those who come by the Fort Scott Railroad, if they will write to Eld. Munson, at Girard. Let there be a general attendance.

Columbus, Kas., July 17.
Oswego, " July 19.
Iola, " July 21, over the 23d.
Topeka, or Middle Creek, July 25 to 30, as Brn. Linville and Corey may arrange.

After this I shall still have a few days to spare for labor in that region. Friends desiring my services may write at once to Columbus, Iola, or Topeka, Kas., or to Buchanan, Mich.

August and September appointments will be duly announced. J. V. H.

WE conclude that 'no-soulism' is making considerable progress in the New England sect called 'Christians.' If it be otherwise, we know not how to account for the persistently unfair attacks upon 'soul-sleepers' in the Christian Herald.

THE articles on materialism, of which the first is given this week, are by a young brother in Wisconsin. They are a lecture composed by him in defense of his faith, which had been unjustly and unceremoniously assailed, which will account for the vigor of the reply, and the use of strong as well as pertinent language. It will repay a perusal.

THE daylight was shut out from the rooms occupied by the late Council of the Vatican [illegible] heavily draped, and the Council worked by candle-light—fit emblem of their neglect of the healing rays of the Sun of Righteousness, and dependence upon the light afforded by men—the lamps of tradition.

> Man's superiority to the brute is evident from the fact that one man held devils enough to destroy "two thousand swine."

—We think our immaterialist friend must have been hard pushed for jewels of sense when he christened such nonsense 'a gem.' We think the argument rather favors the pigs; for they preferred drowning to demoniac possession.

THE Christian Observer says:

> "Is it not a little singular," says a writer in one of the secular papers, "that the Catholic priest is called to give consolation to nearly all of our murderers?" Is it not a little singular, we add, that so large a proportion of the rum shops which crowd the streets of our towns and large cities are owned and run by members of the Roman Catholic Church? Those who murder, by the quick or by the slow process, are usually of the same faith. Why is it so? Is the faith wrong? Or are its professors held so loosely to it by the ministers who preach it that it cannot keep them from flagrant immoralities?

> As Dante says: 'Heat cannot be separated from fire, or beauty from the eternal; and this sentiment gives a rich purpose to generous and manly schemes."

—We also endorse the sentiment, and inquire, Where is the beauty of eternal sin, and its consequent eternal suffering? It is evident that only the good, that which can be beautiful, ought or can in the very nature of things be eternal. Evil will be wiped out because it is evil, and has no right to continue.

WE are obliged to the Christian Union for the following item, attesting the spread of Adventism:

> A sect called Soul-Sleepers is said to be making considerable progress in South-western Virginia. Their creed is that of the annihilation of the wicked, and the sleep of the righteous until the resurrection. The Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, publishes a private letter from a minister of the Disciples of Christ in which the assertion is made that the same doctrine is making considerable headway among churches of his own denomination, particularly in Southern Indiana.

THE theory of a resurrection into grass, thistles, and such like, does not meet with general approbation. The Examiner says:

> We wonder if Mr. Theodore Tilton could be induced to read with care the fifteenth chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and especially the last half of that marvellously sublime description of the resurrection in which Paul had faith. If rising to be a 'blade of grass,' or a 'head of clover,' to be nibbled, it may be, by some straggling goat or goose, is the sum of Mr. Tilton's faith in the resurrection of the body, we can think of nothing that so much needs "reconstruction" as his faith.

BR. Graves of the Baptist has been holding a very interesting discussion on Spiritism, which has appeared in the columns of his paper. Br. Graves in his issue of June 17 triumphantly refutes his opponent's claim, that the angel of the Apocalypse—John's "fellow-servant"—was the spirit of a dead saint.

Turning over the page our eye next rested on an article headed "Soul-sleeping," by J. B. D., who brings up this very angel as incontestable proof that dead saints became glorified angels, or ministering spirits—"that at death the spirit goes immediately to glory."

Brethren be careful; you may hurt each other!

THE fathers were right, after all; that is if the spirits were not liars (we fear they are!). The Spiritist publishing house in Chicago has issued a work of five hundred pages, called the Hollow Globe, in which it is revealed that the earth is a mere shell; and that inside, as outside, it is diversified with mountain, valley, ocean and river. If vessels can only get by the ice toward the Pole, they can sail about the inside of the globe as well as the outside.

Many ancient and some modern theologians have maintained that there was a place inside our world where the spirits of the dead do dwell. We trust friends of the theory will take great comfort in this confirmation (?) of their views, direct from the spirits themselves! As for us, we propose to await the return of the Polar expedition just leaving New York. If Capt. Hall finds Symmes' Hole, and penetrates the interior world, we shall have to yield our skeptical opinions.

IN Bp. Coxe's sermons on the Signs of the Times, we find a paragraph which might be entitled—"One of the uses of the dogma of eternal misery." It is as follows:

> They [the Jesuits] hope that when it comes to this, kings may be forced, by their ignorant but powerful people, to succumb. The Pope can place kingdoms under the terrors of an interdict, and the frightened peasantry would demand any concession from their rulers, [illegible] ASSURED PERIL OF ETERNAL TORMENT [illegible] unmitigated purgatory. Such is the scheme of the syllabus, of the dogma of infallibility of the Vatican Council. It is very bold, but its partizans have the merit of seeing clearly that unless this experiment succeeds, the Papacy must succumb, and not the nations.

—In the dark ages the lash of the eternal misery dogma was wielded with tremendous effect. But it is no longer available to control large communities. The masses have become tainted with infidelity in all Romanist lands in the recoil from horrors of Romanist teachings, and the right arm of priestcraft is paralyzed. Let us hope that Protestantism may yet remove its assent to horrible papal superstition of an endless hell of consciousness, and the eternal duration of sin and evil.

WE perused the funeral sermon by Bp. Janes, on the occasion of the death of Bp. Clark, with much interest. We herewith present our readers two extracts, that must have been spoken within three minutes of each other:

Just at twilight he suddenly roused, and though he had not spoken more than a sentence for nearly two days, as seeing his family around him, he said feebly, but distinctly, "Tireless company! tireless song!" He paused for a moment and then added, "The song of the angels is a glorious song; it thrills my ears even now." Pausing again, he spoke with renewed strength, "I am going to join the angel's song. Glorious God! blessed Savior! bless the Lord, O my soul! bless the Lord, O my soul!" and sank into an unconscious state from which he never roused till the glad messenger came and ushered him into the gates of heaven, no doubt, with the "abundant entrance" he so ardently longed for.	God grant That our lives may be beautiful and devoted and useful and even sublime as was his! God grant that in death our peace and comfort may be as abundant as was his! God grant that each one of us may make "our calling and election sure," and when our probation ends may we sleep in Jesus, may we all wake with him in the resurrection morn.

—We would very kindly ask, Why may not we all go directly to heaven at death, as well as the good bishop Clark? Why must we wait till the resurrection to wake up, while the bishop woke up as soon as he died? Please explain how it is that some wake up at 'the gates of heaven,' and others here on earth 'in the resurrection morn.'

THERE is very great, very hearty, and very natural rejoicing over the ratification of "the Alabama treaty," which heals up the long festering wound inflicted upon the temper of this nation by British conduct during the great civil war. It is, says one [illegible] enthusiastically, "the first step in [illegible] izing the nations"—which is a poor comp[illegible] to the progress of that system du[illegible] past nineteen centuries. But we have [illegible] of "first steps" in this direction before: let us hear of second steps now, and right [illegible]

It is no doubt a cause for [illegible] two nations settled a di[illegible]culty with[illegible] ort to arms: but it proves nothin[illegible] roximity of the Millennium, th[illegible] ent has occurred. And i[illegible] so think it does, it is the wi[illegible] dence or observation of the past—[illegible] ner to the thought. It is useless for us to suppose that at some point in its history [illegible] world is to commence action upon principles heretofore repudiated. The good there is in it is only partial, at the very best, and will never become universal until there is a change of dispensation—the temporal being moved to make room for the eternal; the kingdoms of this world giving way for the kingdom of Christ.

As to this change we know nothing except from prophecy. That declares it will be, not a reformation, but a revolution. And the time is at hand. Deluded by certain features of progress, the world and church cry "peace and safety—the conversion of the world is coming about!" But this is a delusion, a snare; and when the judgment trumpet sounds, church and world dreaming of long ages to come of prosperity and progress, will be taken unawares!

A LATTER-DAY HORROR.

The ship Don Juan sailed from Macao, May 4th with 650 Coolies on board. Two days out, the vessel, in some mysterious way, took fire, and but about fifty of the kidnapped Chinese escaped. It is supposed that the Coolies fired the ship, either with the hope that the conflagration might afford an opportunity for their escape, or with the desperation of blank despair hoping thus to, at least, shorten their sufferings. This Coolie business has been called "the modern slave trade," and justly so; for "Coolie labor" is but a cover for the most degrading, cruel and brutal slavery. The Chinese are kidnapped and sold from their homes by their own familes, nominally [illegible] term of years, but really to life-long servitude. The traffic is a disgrace to the boasted progress of the age, a shame to modern civilization and to Christendom. A few decided words from Great Britain and the United States, would, doubtless, put an end to the whole thing. We trust they may be spoken soon.

As to the burning of the Don Juan, we have no heart to tell the story of how when the flames were discovered the hatches were battened down upon over half a thousand human beings, thus left roasting alive for a full hour, when, it becoming apparent that the fire could not be stayed, the Captain and crew took to their boats, opening the hatches at the last moment, when the miserable wretches found egress from their fiery dungeon only to the blue sky above, and the waste of waters around, and such prospect of escape as was afforded by floating spars or portions of the wreck. Thus some fifty of these poor creatures escaped, one of whom testifies that he "saw blood ooze out from the sides of the vessel"—the gore of his companions who failed to make their escape from the vessel's hold.

We have only one word to add. Suppose the tortures of these poor wretches had been prolonged for a year—a month, a week, even, instead of a few hours! The blood chills at the thought of what they must have endured in the last minutes of their existence. Take, them, their tortures, and add the word eternal, and you have a faint picture of what the future punishment is often described to be. Believe it who can. We reject it as first, being intrinsically improbable and, second, contradicted by "the Scriptures of truth."

A PROFESSOR'S OPINION.

There has just been published another volume of Prof. John Tyndall's rich scientific lectures. In one of them the following passage occurs:

> In affirming that the growth of the body is mechanical, and that thought, as exercised by us, has its correlative in the physics of the brain, I think the position of the "Materialist" is stated, as far as that position is a tenable one. I think the materialist will be able finally to maintain this position against all attacks; but I do not think, in the present condition of the human mind that he can pass beyond this position. I do not think he is entitled to say that his molecular motions explain everything. In reality they explain nothing. The utmost he can affirm is the association of two classes of phenomena, of whose real bond of union he is in absolute ignorance. The problem of the connection of body and soul is as insoluble in its modern form as it was in the pre-scientific ages. Phosphorus is known to enter into the composition of the human brain, and a trenchant German writer has exclaimed, "Ohne Phosphor, kein Gedanke," (without phosphorus, no thought.) That may or may not be the case; but even if we knew it to be the case, the knowledge would not lighten our darkness. On both sides of the zone here assigned to the materialist he is equally helpless. If you ask him whence is this "matter" of which we have been discoursing, who or what divided it into molecules, who or what impressed upon them this necessity of running into organic forms, he has no answer. Science is mute in reply to these questions. But if the materialist is confounded and science rendered dumb, who else is prepared with a solution? To whom has this arm of the Lord been revealed? Let us lower our heads and acknowledge our ignorance, priest and philosopher, one and all.

—The "Materialist" to whom the Professor here addresses himself, is atheistic, and he evidently is acquainted with no other school of that theory. We wish that he might take up the Scriptures, and analyze them, as he has the teachings of science; and he would find that they agree: and as science knows nothing of immaterialism, neither do the Scriptures. And, also, that the soul whose mysterious connection with the body so many stumble over into immaterialism, is not a distinct intelligent entity, but is that mysterious thing we call life. It is the gift of God to man, transmitted by the laws of generation, which makes him a conscious, intelligent being; but it is not the man himself.

We ask for materialism no more than the Professor grants, except this: that it shall not be affirmed, that because materialism cannot justly go beyond a certain point, with our present state of knowledge, therefore immaterialism must be true. The facts, so far as we know them, accord with the Scriptures and with materialism. Hence we may presume that all facts which shall yet come to our knowledge, will also harmonize with them.

IMMATERIALITY — CONSCIOUS STATE IN DEATH.

Dr. Ridgely, in his body of Divinity (Vol. 1, p. 433), says:

> "That the soul exists after its separation from the body by death, is evident from the immateriality thereof, and its being of a different nature: so that the very heathen, who had no other light than that to guide them, discovered some knowledge of it. But this is more plain from Scripture, as it is said: Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." (Mat. 10: 28.)

First the doctor assumes the immateriality of the soul, a thing which is to be proved; and then he quotes a text in proof, which declares, that the immaterial soul, if sinful, is destined to destruction, with the body, in gehenna!

Then the doctor reasons thus:

> "The soul thus existing, though separate from the body, must be supposed to retain those powers and capacities it had while united to it, which are proper to it as a spirit, and particularly as the subject of moral government: and those powers and capacities may also be supposed to be in it in a greater degree, when dislodged from the body, which is a great hindrance to it in its actings, as every one sensibly experiences.".

If it is true that every one sensibly experiences that the body is "a great hindrance to the activities of the soul" (which we deny, emphatically), we call, further, for some experiences of those who have been disembodied. If the argument is to rest on 'experiences,' let us have the experiences. Our columns are open to any who have been 'disembodied,' and found themselves able to think more deeply and sensibly than while embodied. We would like the proof that any human being ever had a thought or idea apart from his material organization. The talk about intuitions of immateriality and immortality, is as baseless as the fabric of a vision. We doubt if it ever carried conviction to a single soul.

EGYPTIANISM EXPOSED.

We learn that T. J. Goodsir has published an able defence of the authenticity of the Scriptures. In it, we are told, there is "an exposure of the superstitions of Egypt: that country to which we have been so often relegated for everything curious, wise and ancient."

We wish we dared hope that Mr. Goodsir has thoroughly exposed that master-piece of Egyptian superstition, the dogma of the innate immortality of human souls. It would be for the health of popular theology if this could be done by some one to whom the people generally would listen. Too many of our wise men, failing to find the idea in the Scriptures, go down to Egypt for help, and coolly tell us that Jacob, and Moses, and David and Hezekiah must have understood and believed the doctrine—why? Because, forsooth, if they did not, they would have known less than the Egyptians! (c. f. Bartlett, Stuart, Lewis, and others.) Why did it never occur to these gentlemen that the holy men of God knew too much to believe the Egyptian philosophy? It is no great addition to ones knowledge when one believes an untruth. No doubt Moses and the rest knew of the Egyptian doctrine, but they never believed it. If they did, they present the remarkable spectacle of the only body of men that ever believed that the soul is immortal and yet have refrained from teaching it! We repeat it. If they believed the dogma, they stand alone among all the advocates of that theory, in keeping silence concerning their faith. And when we add to this, the fact that they did have faith in—and expressed it too—a future life by means of a resurrection of the dead, the inference becomes an overwhelming conviction, that the Egyptian dogma formed no part of their creed.

POPERY THEN AND NOW.

Hear what some of the predecessors of the present Pope have said of their power. Pope Martin V. wrote in the dispatches with which he furnished his ambassador to Constantinople:

> "The most holy and most happy, who is the arbiter of heaven, and the Lord of the earth, the successor of St. Peter, the Anointed of the Lord, the Master of the universe, the Father of kings, the Light of the world." (Giustianni's Rome as It Is, p. 181.)

Pope Innocent III. writes:

> "So hath Christ established the kingdom and the priesthood in the church; that the kingdom is sacerdotal, and the priesthood is kingly; he hath set one man over the world, him whom he hath appointed his vicar on earth; and as to Christ is bent every knee in heaven, in earth, and under the earth, so shall obedience and service be paid to his vicar by all, that there may be one fold and one shepherd."

An extract from the Bull of Pope Pius against Elizabeth:

> "He that reigneth on high, to whom all power is given in heaven and earth, hath committed the one Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church, out of which there is no salvation, to one alone on earth, namely: to Peter, the Prince of the apostles, and to the Roman Pont[illegible] successor of St. Peter, to be governed with a plenitude of power. * * * This one he hath constituted Prince over all nations, and all kingdoms, that he might pluck up, destroy, dissipate,

Another says:

"The Pope is the Lord of the wo[illegible] neither prince nor bishop, neither [illegible] nor ecclesiastical ruler, can have [illegible] lawful authority in Church or [illegible]e, underived from him."

Gregory VII., among many de[illegible]rations pertaining to the power [illegible] Popes, says:

"The Roman Pontiff alone can be called universal. * * * He alone has a right to use imperial ornaments. * * * That Princes are bound to kiss his feet, and his only. * * * That he has a right to depose Emperors. * * * That his sentence can be annulled by none, but that he may annul the decrees of all." (Taylor's Manual of History, p. 409.)

Now as a simple bishop or priest, Pius not only reigns over no kings, or emperors, but there is not a crowned head or civil ruler in the world to do him homage, or disposed to restore him to his former position. The papacy has fallen! And the next glorious event is the coming of the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords.

DEATH OF SR. SHERMAN.

Just as we go to press, we are saddened with the intelligence of the death of Sr. Charlotte L. Sherman, companion of Br. C. S. Sherman of Castletown, Vt. She has been very sick for long months; has been apparently gaining of late. But on the third instant, a few hours after her arrival at the Round Hill Water Cure, to which she had gone in hope of further relief, she died very suddenly.

Sr. Sherman was a remarkable woman in her sphere, which was the social circle, or, preeminently, the home circle. An affectionate wife, a fond yet wise mother, a kind friend, full of goodness to the poor—she will be missed by all who knew her, but nowhere so much as in the bereaved household. Those who have enjoyed her society there, and observed her never tiring care and impartial love for all, can appreciate the pall of wo that has settled there.

About the middle of May we received a letter, dated from her sick, bed from which we may be pardoned, now, for making an extract. We had written some words of sympathy. In reply among other things she said:

> Dear Brother: Can I fear, when I read—'The Lord is on my side.' 'The Lord taketh my part with them that keep me.' These words I opened to in my Bible, when my life lately hung upon a very small thread.
> It is nearly nine weeks since I was taken ill, and long weeks are before me. But I will trust in the Lord! I have suffered as few do. But it will enable me to be a more godly woman. ....I often feel that Jesus takes away local pain in direct answer to prayer. I know it is so. So keep praying for me....Yours, in the love of Jesus.

In this frame of mind she passed away. 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord.'—trusting fully in him. Sweet indeed is the Christian's hope, to those that mourn in its light. Its light clearly reviews a future life—a world where

'Those shall meet again
Who have loved.'

PRIMITIVE MAN.

We have not space for numerous articles we have received upon this subject. The controversy bids fair to become interminable. All sides have had opportunity to air their theories, and we learn that many of our readers are getting tired of it. If "salt is good," as the Scriptures affirm, one does not want it in every thing. Besides, to our mind, it seems to be chiefly a strife about words—all holding about the same opinion, but differing as to the sense of words chosen to express it.

And now a word to you whose pens are so quickly dipped in the ink when a point of your belief or opinion is disputed—Why can you not dip your pen in a better cause; and give the household of faith something sweet and juicy, without even the tang of household controversies?

[illegible] "RICH MAN AND LAZARUS."

[illegible]ve to announce that the first [illegible] of this popular exposition is exhausted. The second edition will not be ready for some weeks yet. Orders will be promptly filled in the order that they are received, as soon as the next edition is ready.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

WEDNESDAY, June 28. Came to Chicago, and was welcomed by Br. S. C. Raymond. Things are very pleasant and prosperous here. Br. Burr is doing a good work in this city.

THURSDAY, June 29. Attended the commencement of the Baptist University, at Cottage grove. The exercises were held in the new Baptist chapel on Michigan Avenue. On entering the building I was surprised at the elegant architecture and rich adornments. It had all the appearance of a Jesuit chapel. It has a grand organ, and a chime of seventeen bells. The whole expense of the establishment was about $200,000.

I found the audience room partly filled. The audience was a select one composed of the elite of the Baptist churches, of which there were twenty in the city. There was no enthusiasm, such as is usual on such occasions, and for a commencement it seemed dull. Nine young men took part in the exercises, who did credit to themselves. The University is prosperous, and has between three and four hundred students. It is a credit to the Baptist denomination.

At night I attended the prayer-meeting of the Advent Church, with Br. Burr. Th[illegible] have papered and painted the ch[illegible] and made it much more pleasant, [illegible] and comfortable. The meeting was [illegible] attended, and the brethren full of [illegible] and power. The exhortations and prayers were short, lively and edifying. It was a model prayer-meeting. They have been annoyed in time past with some, who have spoken too long, and treated upon controversial questions which only tended to strife. This difficulty is now disappearing, and a peaceful and healthful state of things succeeding. They are united and active in the Lord's work. I enjoyed the meeting much.

FRIDAY, June 30. Half of the year 1871 passes to-day. How quickly it has fled! Let the balance of the year be faithfully improved in every good word and work. Soon the end of al things will come.

OUR YOUNG MEN.

What can we do for them? Or what can they do for themselves to become more useful to the church? This subject has occupied my attention much. I am often asked by them for advice, as to the best way to qualify themselves for their work. "What books shall we read?" or, "What are the best works to aid us in the preparation for preaching the Gospel?" To these questions I have given the best answers that I could. But a systematic course of study is called for by many. And this ought to be supplied for young men among us who desire this aid.

In general, I have said to young preachers, if they have an English education, to take their Bible and concordance and faithfully search and study the word of God, and "preach the word." But while this course is indispensable for any preacher, there are other things that we should not neglect. We should seek to understand all useful knowledge. To understand the prophecies, one must be a student of history, by which we learn the fulfillment of prophecy. And he must study Ecclesiastical history, also, that he may know the doctrines, opinions, and ordinances of the true and also of the apostate churches. The evidences of the truth of the Bible should be well studied, so that they may meet the "enemy in the gate."

And some desire to study the Hebrew and Greek—the original languages of the Scriptures, that they may read for themselves the word of God in the original tongues. But we have no institutions, or teachers for such a work as this, and therefore cannot aid such. But I determined to see what I could do for these young men who are determined to read the Holy Word in the original languages. And the result of my inquiries has been, that among the many Institutions, where the languages can be studied, the University of Kentucky at Lexington, and the Union Theological Seminary at Chicago, Ill., are the best of these institutions now open to our young men. There is, also, an English department, for those who do not wish to study the languages, in each of the above institutions. I had an interesting visit to-day with Prof. G. W. Northrup, president of the Union Theological Seminary, in Chicago. I stated to him my wishes in respect to educational advantages which I desired to obtain for some young men who had applied to me for help. I as frankly informed him of their theological views. They were Adventists, out and out; believing in the speedy coming of Christ, his personal reign on the earth, the destruction of the wicked, and the extinction of all evil at the restitution.

The Professor remarked that their views would be no bar to their reception as students. There was perfect freedom of opinion. They taught what they believed to be the truth, and their students were left to judge of its correctness. As to the question of 'annihilation,' he said he should not shun the full and fair discussion of it, whenever it came up. He believed that truth would not suffer by its discussion. Religious opinions might, but the truth never. He thought the destruction theory would have to be fully discussed in this age, as other questions have been in the past; and when it comes up, it should be met fairly.

The Baptist Union Theological Seminary is located in South Chicago, Cottage Grove, in the rear of the University. It was finished in 1869, at a cost of sixty thousand dollars. It is 214 feet long and 48 wide, four stories high. It is a very pleasant place, and a home for students; as the scholars can unite in clubs and board themselves for from $1.50 to $2.80 a week. Tuition and rooms are free to Theological students. Lights, fuel etc., cost about $20 a year.

Any others wishing to consult me on the above subject can write, and I will give them full information and all the aid in my power. At night came to Westville on my way to Union Mills, Ind.

SATURDAY, July 1. Hired a team, but when within a mile of the Mills Dr. Mathewson met me. I left the livery team and joined myself to Dr. M., who soon brought me to his house, where I was more than welcomed. He intended to meet me at Westville, but I did not get the word in time to understand the arrangement.

I find Br. Matthewson very pleasantly situated here. When he came the cause had run down, so that it needed much hard work and patience to restore, and build it up. He has seen good fruit from his toil.

Last Monday his people surprised him with an unexpected visit, thus celebrating his and Sr. Mathewson's birthday. It was an exceeding pleasant season, and the friends left a substantial token of their esteem. These little attentions cheer a pastor's heart. The good will, and sympathy for himself and wife, in their work, are of the greatest value.

The church in Union Mills is one of the oldest of those raised up by the labors of Br. and Sr. Mansfield, and prospered so long as they remained with them. Since they gave up the field to others, the society has suffered many trials. But they still live, and their prospects are now good. Those who think 'changes' are a good thing for a church would do well to ponder this lesson.

I came here on a visit, to say a good word and cheer and help them. I met with warm greetings in my friendly calls among the brethren.

SABBATH, July 2. Attended the Sabbath school this a. m. The Doctor takes charge of it, and makes it interesting to both children and adults. In course of the lesson, the text of Acts 8: 38, was repeated by one of the ladies—"And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he sprinkled him." "No, no—Where did you get that," said Br. M. "I got it from Dr. Seeley, a good Presbyterian." "Well, you had better follow the Bible. That says he immersed him."

I spoke on the Messianic prophecies. Some in this vicinity have got so wise that they do not believe the prophecies of the Old Testamnt refer to Jesus at all. But I made the case clear, and strengthened the faith of the disciples.

At the close of the morning service rode twelve miles to Stillwell Prairie and spoke at 3 p. m. We have a good interest here, and a church will be organized by and by. On my return to the Mills at night I spoke again. My theme was the "signs of the times." The Pastor of the Presbyterian church was in, and took part in the services. We had a stirring time, and I hope it may result in aiding some to prepare to meet Christ.

MONDAY, July 3. My visit has been a pleasant one. I find Br. Mathewson doing well. May God continue to bless and prosper him and his good wife in their mutual labors. I returned home at night, like a pilgrim, to tarry for a few days.

AT HOME.

A Column of Fire and Cloud.

Last Wednesday week Dame Nature put on fantastic airs about five miles east of this city. It was something in the nature of a gigantic whirlwind. About half past two o'clock in the afternoon, men at work on the farms of Mr. Morton and Mr. Merritt were startled by a strange sound like that of a rushing, mighty wind. For a moment the under strata of the atmosphere seemed perfectly motionless. Then it began a circular motion with increasing velocity, gathering and taking upwards sheaves of wheat and every light substances on the surface. A cylinderical volume of dust was formed, reaching far into the heavens. There then seemed to be pouring into it a continuous stream of smoke, clouds, or some substance of an azure hue, perfectly visible to the eye, but of an indescribable nature. The elements seemed to be pouring through a tunnel upon the earth. The volume gathered in force and velocity as it continued to move in a southeasterly direction. Rails were sent whirling through the air with terrible force, branches were torn from the trees and houses unroofed on its march. Its final destination has not been ascertained. Its fury was probably spent in a short course. The amount of damage done is small in comparison with the terror inspired. At one time a river of fire seemed to be pouring into its vortex, filling the observers with consternation, and making the superstitious believe the day of final judgment at hand. It at one time covered a space exceeding one hundred feet in diameter. One man, Mr. James Danforth, who stood awed by its grandeur, was caught in its folds and only secured himself from being translated, like Elijah, by throwing himself prone on the earth, and holding fast to the shrubs around him.

All who witnessed it agree that it was the most terribly grand spectacle they had ever beheld.—Springfield (Mo.) Leader.

France.

The late elections have greatly strengthened the Thiers government, and are favorable to moderate Republicanism. The Monarchists are demoralized and Bonapartism is nowhere, in spite of all its efforts to make capital out of its former generosity to the Roman church.—The French have met their present financial necessities by a home loan. The people subscribed thrice the amount called for.—The government is organizing its army; 800,000 men are under arms. 100,000 were recently reviewed at Paris with great eclat. There is considerable talk of their hopes of future vengeance upon the late conquerors.—There are seven parties with more or less strength in the French Assembly.

Great Britain.

The decrease in the population of Ireland the past ten years is about 400,000, or seven per cent. The emigration has been over 800,000 souls. The increase in England and Wales has been thirteen per cent.—The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia are visiting in England.

Spain.

"During the afternoon of yesterday, the clergy of the church of St. Sebastien took it into their heads to have their religious procession of La Minerco celebrated. A long line of clergy preceded by a band of music and triumphal car, containing a little child dressed as Christ, leading a live lamb, with the ringing of bells, went through the streets. Wherever the procession went, the people uncovered and bent the knee. A young American who failed to do this was, at the instigation of the priest who led the procession, attacked, and would have been killed but for the interferance of some poor women, who rushed between him and his assailants, and who got him safely into the doorway of his hotel. He had begun to fight bravely, but indiscreetly, and the next moment would have been stabbed. As he is a brother of the Secretary of General Sickles, the latter intends to take it up, and obtain from the government assurances that foreigners who do not believe in these Popish absurdities may be absolved from the humiliation of bowing down to them or losing their lives."

There is great depression in business circles in Germany—almost stagnation.—There is great rejoicing in Italy over the removal of the capital. Many Cardinals and other high dignitaries of the church attended Court during the king's stay in Rome.—The Czar and the Emperor of Germany are to meet at Ems. —The Mont Cenis tunnel proved a partial failure. Large portions of roof have fallen in and many workmen buried in the ruins. So far seven dead bodies have been recovered.

A Speck of War.

The United States has been engaged in war in a small way in Asia, with the piratical Coreans. By the way of the East Indian and Atlantic cables dispatches have been received from Commodore Rodgers, dated June 22d. The barbarians have been severly handled in their attempt to withstand the peaceable invasion of the Westerners, and, after a vigorous resistance, were routed with great loss. The Corean manner of warfare does not appear to have been well adapted for defence against modern weaponry and American pluck. The Commodore says he counted two hundred and forty-three dead Coreans lying about, and four hundred and eighty-one brass pieces of Artillery and many small arms were captured. All this took place at Kiang-Ko, a fortified port on the river Kiang, on the western coast of Corea, the nearest point to China. The fight was still going on.

Egypt.

Now comes the report from Egypt that the Suez Canal is filling with sand, and that the company has obtained from the Sultan a recommendation that the Egyptian Government shall purchase it. The Khedive, sensible man, does not see it in a favorable light, and proposes to let the company have all the glory and all the profit and loss of the enterprise.

The Egyptian Viceroy has need of all his money. Ever since his accession to the throne he has employed his means most industriously to strengthen Egypt. He has taken into his service large numbers of American and other foreign military officers, and has organized an army and a navy upon the most approved modern style. He has had the sense to appreciate the weakness of Oriental barbarism, and has labored to place Egypt among the modern States of the world. At the proper time he will be prepared to assert the independence of his country, and will maintain it against Turkey. When the struggle comes he will find better uses for his money than having it invested in that canal.

Venezuela.

Accounts received from a trustworthy source represent the state of affairs in Venezuela as deplorable. Society is disorganized, in most parts of the country commerce is destroyed, and business of all kinds is exceedingly dull.

Correspondence

From E H Durand, Elkland Mich June 4:

I have just come from one of our good prayer meetings. Some of the wickedest men in this part of the country have been converted, and in some instances whole families. Some that had not been to meeting in ten years are now praying men.

Some two weeks ago a Methodist brother (minister) invited our little church in Grant to attend their Quarterly Meeting, held in this place. Our church here were all alive in the work, praising God, and thought we could all unite and help the Methodist brethren. As they were quite anxious I should do so, I staid with them. Last Thursday Eld. T. came out and preached in Br. Campbell's house, which he had fitted up for meetings. He took for his text, Ps. 49: 7-9. He misapplied Scripture and abused the brethren shamefully. On Friday night he preached another abusive sermon. He quoted Rev. 16: 13—"and I saw three unclean spirits like frogs"—and said the Mormons were one spirit, the Spiritists another, and the Adventists the third. This kind of work is new to the people up here; but, bless God, it only makes them stronger. The Elder told me he could not fellowship me, and did not consider me a Christian. He is taking a course to drive out some of his own members from them. The truth will have its weight, and the people see it. Doors are opening all around to hold meetings. It seems as if the Lord was opening the way for me faster than I dared hope. People see new light in their Bibles. It seems as if it were a new book.

From S S Campbell, Tuscola Co Mich May 31.

Br. E. H. Durand called on us some time in March and asked the privilege of preaching in our house, as there was no school house here. After preaching twice he left an appointment for a protracted meeting. My husband cleaned out our old log house, and put in some seats. I, for one, was prejudiced against his doctrine, but thought if Br. Durand was a follower of Jesus he could do us good. I attended every meeting, and never came away without some new light. I had in my younger days heard foreordination preached, but it always left me in the dark. We investigated these things, and prayed God to show us the way, and he has blessed us. We can now read our Bibles and understand them in a new light. Almost every family in our neighborhood has become a house of prayer. Oh! what a change in so short a time. It does my heart good to write and tell what a dear Savior we have found.

On the 27th, forty from this place went up to the Pigeon, eight miles from here. The little church met us at the new school house. Br. Durand spoke a short time, and after prayer we all went down to the river, and there he buried twenty in baptism. My husband and daughter and myself were of the number. It was a glorious sight. I trust it was a blessing to all. Two sisters came away with regrets that they were not baptised. They will be at the next opportunity, and I think there will be more.

The next day we were organized into a church. It seemed as though God was present to bless us. After conference and prayer we attended the Lord's Supper. Some of the church on the Pigeon came down to the organization. One of them remarked that one family reminded him of the Jailor's family. There were six of them baptised, all of the family except one child.

From A L Dresser, New Auburn, Minn.

I am trying to serve the Lord, and be faithful until he comes. I know he will soon come. I love my Savior and want to see him, My prayer is that more may be ready to meet Jesus when he comes. Dear brothers and sisters let us do all we can to lead others to God. I am going to do what I can. I am going to lay by a little money each week, and I hope it may do some good. I feel that we have but a short time to work, and let us do all we can to spread the blessed truth. I am a reader of THE TIMES, and would not do without it. I do love to read the letters from the dear brothers and sisters. I have never seen them, yet I love them and hope to meet them all when Jesus comes. Oh! what a happy meeting that will be. Then we shall part no more. We have no preaching here of our faith. We heard the truth preached a few times last winter, and I thank God for the good it has done. My Bible that was once a puzzle to me is now growing plain. May God bless the dear brothers that did so much good here. Oh! let us pray for each other, that we may be found faithful. Your sister in Christ.

From F Baldwin, Corydon, Iowa, June 15:

Eighteen months ago there were only two Adventists in this part of the country; now there are four churches and about one hundred members. I wrote you last winter about the interest in Bethlehem. I have since organized a church of eleven members. The Methodist brethren are very kind, and give us the use of their church. I hope to meet them in the kingdom. There is a Baptist church, somewhat prejudiced; but I hope as they grow in grace and knowledge of the truth they will learn that it is not the name that saves, but our faith in him who died for our lost race. They are a good people, and I hope will soon learn to love all for whom Christ died.

From D F Call Berlin Hights, O June 1:

I love THE TIMES; it is all the preaching I have that teaches the glorious truths of the Bible. I was converted something more than a year ago, under Methodist preaching, and joined that church in full belief that the soul of man was immortal, and that the body was only a clog that held us to earth, and that heaven was an immaterial place of abode. But when I came to search my Bible I found that man was mortal and that "the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." I am trying in my weakness to spread the truth. I am lending my paper to all who will read, and trying to show them the light. I thank God that the seed is taking root, and some are asking for more of the sound doctrine. I am making a good many foes in the church by teaching the life-giving truths of the gospel, but I thank God that he thought me worthy to bear the cross; for I can not repay the debt of love I owe.

We are a small family—mother, sister, and son—and are all looking for Jesus. Our prayer daily is, Lord Jesus, come quickly. We are trying to live so as to be ready to meet him at any time. We are poor, but thank the Lord we look for an inheritance which fadeth not away, at the right hand of God; and nothing short of the holy city which John saw will satisfy us.

From John L Paine, Salem Mass

I wish to say at this time that I feel deeply interested in the time of the Lord's coming. I read with much interest all that is written on the subject by your brethren, and hope they will still continue to investigate the subject. I feel very confident that the Lord has shown from his word that by a proper arrangement and right understanding of certain types, messages, and watches, the exact year of Christ's coming may be known. It is now about a year and a half since I first saw it, and I never can think of it without the blessed Spirit thrilling my soul with heavenly joy. In all my Advent experience for twenty seven long years I have never had anything sealed home to my heart with such certainty. I have but little heart to say much about it, well knowing that something mysterious and hard to be understood is more likely to be received than that which is plain and simple. Meanwhile let us be like men waiting for their Lord when he shall return, that we may open to him immediately.

NOTES OF A DISCUSSION.

SECOND SESSION, FENN'S FIRST SPEECH.

I feel that we are in one of the most direct avenues to the development of truth. There is nothing like investigation, to learn the truth. I repeat again the question, and call the attention of my opponent, to the qualifying terms, rational and entity. I regret exceedingly that he insists in trying to prove something that I have from the beginning admitted. Let me again say that I am not here to prove man has no spirit, but that the spirit of man, when separated from the body is not a reasoning real entity. I have reasoned from analogy, and proved that man as a whole is dependent upon the combination of all his parts, in a state of life and activity, to enjoy a conscious existence. I have cited you to examples where total unconsciousness has been suffered from simple indentation of the skull.

While I am not here to disprove the existence of spirits with the bodies of man, or without them, I shall not spend time to look at one or a thousand passages, where spirit is simply referred to as associated with the body in life, and separated at death. Let me say again, that all such passages are simply irrelevant to the question! And I need not presume upon your ignorance in telling you that no higher authority to prove that spirit is a conscious entity, than human assertion has yet been produced; and that is nothing but opinion, and your opinion is as good as any ones, in matters that are only guess work.

If the attributes and functions of man's mental nature are the essential fruits of spirit, which "cannot be brought into contact with matter" (for this is claimed), then we ought to know it. The physiologist ought to be able to discover it. Was God amusing himself, simply, when he formed the body with all its intricate and delicate machinery? Was he merely making a prison for the real man? Was he not engaged in a necessary and legitimate work, in order to the development of man? I dare not take a position that ignores the work of God in the creation of man's corporeal organism. Hence, I contend, that man, as a whole, with all the elements of his being combined, is essential to the enjoyment of a conscious, intelligent, active existence. And the facts produced relative to the phenomena of thought, are sufficient to prove this position.

The fact that thought is destroyed by the disturbance of the brain, furnishes a platform of faith sufficiently strong to sustain us in the belief, that spirit is not a reasoning entity apart from the body. Unconsciousness is produced while the body is still living, and this fact proves the spirit is susceptible of becoming unconscious. And not only that, but consciousness depends upon the organs of the body; and the only logical conclusion we can arrive at from such facts is, that when the organs of the body are dissolved in death, unconsciousness must be the inevitable result. The development of mental power in mankind is always commensurate with the development of the brain. A well developed brain is the basis of a well developed mind the world over; and physiology would laugh at a denial of this fact.

The brain is the organ of thought. If it is not to think with, what is it for? The lungs are the organs of respiration; the heart is the organ of circulation; etc. What function does the brain perform, if it does not think? No one but a theologian would insist upon ignoring the self-evident fact that the brain is the organ of thought.

If I am correct in my position, I shall doubtless find it in harmony with the word of God. Let us compare it with Ps. 147: 3, 4: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." This talks very much as I do. I think David must have been a believer in the unconscious state of the dead.

Let us see if David's son imbibed the same faith. "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing." (Eccl. 9: 5.) Really Solomon followed very closely in the footsteps of his father in this item of faith. As wise a man as he ought to have had some correct idea of man's nature? and if the dead do know more than the living, as Br. Burgess claims, Solomon must have been beside himself in saying "they know not any thing." I think Solomon's conclusion was philosophical, as well as inspired, and I shall agree with him and his father David yet a while notwithstanding Br. Burgess to the contrary.

BURGESS' FIRST SPEECH, SECOND SESSION.

I am glad Fenn has launched into physiological arguments, but I think he ought to meet my Scripture citations. I am going to show that consciousness is not destroyed, when even the brain itself is destroyed, [He then cited certain remarkable cases of partial destruction of the brain, where thought was not destroyed.] These examples destroy Fenn's arguments.

I admit the brain is the organ of thought, but there is something back of it that does the thinking. There is the organ [referring to the church organ], with every part all right; but there is no music. Ah! it wants the fingers back of it. Let them run over the key board and you get the music. There goes the gentleman's argument. Not a shred left, in the light of true philosophy.

I now proceed to give my rebutting arguments. [He then read again from his manuscript, as usual,]

FENN'S SECOND SPEECH.

I trust this audience failed to see my philosophy when it went with such a sweeping argument, as the one furnished by the organ illustration. I presume you all saw that when my opponent frankly admitted, the brain to be the organ of thought, he virtually yielded the whole question. But let us examine this "organ" illustration. I admit its aptness, in illustrating the point at issue. He asks us to give him music without the fingers on the key board. We ask him to concentrate all the fingers of all the musicians under heaven, with all the angel harpers, and produce one single strain of music without the organ! Ah! we see the organ is quite as essential to music as the fingers behind it. They are calculated to work together, and that philosophy which will contend that either alone, is all-sufficient to the work of both combined, is simply unsound.

When God Almighty made man, he made him agreeably to the law of adaptation, and every element and organ of his being is arranged so as to work together with all the rest. And when a man tells you that an immaterial, indivisible, intangible essence, having neither form nor parts, interior nor exterior, and uncompounded, is the all-important thing (or nothing) that thinks and reasons, here and hereafter, and is just as active while the body is dead as before it died, and, indeed considerably more so, I think it should be our privilege to question the soundness of such philosophy. This is truly the nature of my opponent's reasoning.

He seems exceedingly anxious that I should follow him in Scripture quotations. I will tell you the cause of his anxiety. He has traveled that road, until every thing on it is familiar; and he would naturally prefer it to the road I have led out on. I do not blame him. I presume I should feel very much as he does if I had got into the dilemma he is in. There will be time enough to attend to the Scripture arguments, when we get to them.

You will remember that some cases of mutilation of parts of the brain were cited, and that the individuals who were injured were not deprived of consciousness at the time. This might appear, to the casual observer, to militate against my position; but when you understand the matter you will see that my position is undisturbed by these examples. A thousand cases of the kind, will not weaken my argument, while I can produce one case where injury to the brain has produced total unconsciousness!

The question to be settled is not, that no injury to the brain can be suffered without unconsciousness; but that in certain cases total unconsciousness is the result of indentations of the skull; thus showing that thought or reason may be destroyed by injury simply, and must be destroyed by death, and dissolution of the whole man.

Thus far the affirmative of this question has been sustained by the most obstinate truths that reason, philosophy, and the Bible can furnish for any question. We might inquire who is responsible for idiocy, if reason and thought have nothing to do with material organisms? Has God shown partiality in giving souls to some and no souls to others? This is a sad dilemma, also, for the theory that claims spirit to be the fountain of thought and reason. The expulsion of Adam from Eden is an evidence that God designed him to die and come to nought. While in Eden he had access to the essential means to perpetuate his existence; and we are informed (Gen. 3: 19-22), that he was to return to dust; and to accomplish this end, he is shut out of Eden "lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever." "Therefore the Lord sent him forth from Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken." No one can reasonably conclude the death involved in the penalty here, to be other than literal or physical death.

BURGESS' SECOND SPEECH.

I do not laugh in God's face with accusations of partiality in producing spirits. Real argument is different from declamation. Fenn thinks by eloquence and declamation he can gain your sympathies. He thinks the idea of going to glory shouting hallelujahs as immaterial spirits is the fruit of fancy. Where did such a desire come from. Fenn will say the brain. But who put it in the brain. I answer God put the desire to go to glory into our hearts; and will he disappoint us, in the desires he has given? Fenn says his blood chills at our doctrines. The trouble is because he cannot answer them.

He says there is a right and left brain; but I never learned any such thing from my physiology. He concludes the brain can think with half of it gone. And as regards indentation, I should think when the tamping iron passed through the man's head in New Hampshire, that there must have been an indentation, first, before the rod went through: but the man was conscious all the time, I don't see how indentation can be worse than blowing away a part of the brain.

If thought remains when half the brain is gone, may not reason remain when the whole body is gone.

[He then cited the thief on the cross—a repetition of former passages, with nothing new.]

FENN'S THIRD SPEECH.

I am sorry Br. B. does not meet my arguments on physiology, in some other way than ridicule. I feel quite satisfied to leave them in the hands of so intelligent an audience as the one before me; and you will of course conclude that he cannot answer them, in that he does not do it.

You will observe that the passages he delights so much in, are not of themselves evidence in favor of his position, but he has to infer that the writer believed as he does, and would be understood to mean soul, or spirit, when he said nothing about either. I will assure Br. Burgess, that his passages will not afford him any more consolation after I have handled them; than they do now.

I will notice one or two of the strongest, as an example of the result of looking them all over. "For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, beholding your order and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ." (Col. 2: 5.) Was Paul dead when his spirit was present with the Colossian church? Oh! no! What, then, has this to do with man in death? It is simply irrelevant, as I have said. Again: Heb. 12: 22, 23, has been dwelt upon and repeated till it is worn threadbare. Now lest some should be blinded by it, I will glance at that passage: "But ye are come, unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." I suppose the grand center of consolation in this text, is in the expression "spirits of just men made perfect." But who says any thing about these spirits being disembodied spirits, or the spirits of dead men. Paul says no such thing, and if Br. Burgess thinks they are disembodied, he has no authority for his opinion from the author of the language. Perhaps he thinks they are disembodied spirits because they are made perfect. That cannot be, according to his own theory, for he does not claim perfection for the saints till the resurrection: and they would not be disembodied then. So the passage, according to his own theory, affords no consolation for the advocate of the consciousness of disembodied spirits, as spirits when made perfect are not disembodied.

Perhaps he is confused with the expression—"Church of the first born written in heaven." It is no evidence that they are in heaven, because they are written in heaven. I suppose all whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life are written in heaven? Are they therefore in heaven? My opponent himself would not contend they are. Should we be able to see that these spirits were made perfect and in heaven, it would not prove them conscious entities, unless we can prove them such, by some positive scripture. It is useless to spend time in reviewing such passages as the above.

I again repeat that not a passage has been adduced that tends to prove the negative of this question.

I have brought two positive declarations, asserting that thought perishes at death, that the dead know not any thing. Let my opponent furnish one such positive proof for his side of the question and he shall gain the day. This he has not done. But do not blame him for what he cannot do. God has not furnished proof for each of two opposite views. Therefore, I do not expect any conflicting testimony.

BURGESS' THIRD SPEECH

Friend Fenn would have you think that he is right, and I am all wrong. Perhaps I know as much about physiology as he does. What part of the brain is it that thinks? Is it the pineal gland, medulla oblongata, or sensory ganglia, or what? Is it phosphorus, or phosphate of lime, or what is it? It can't be the whole of it, for men think with a part gone.

He would have you think that all my passages are taken out of the way by the reference he has made to Col. 2: 5. I never said any thing about Col. 2: 5. I was talking about 2 Cor. 5: 8. [Reporter has the passage, Col. 2: 5.] He very adroitly slips over the passage in 2 Cor. 5: 8, and thought to cover up the facts I have brought out. Let him take up these searching passages and show you if he can that the spirit or soul is not a conscious entity. I have produced over fifty passages which teach my doctrine, and he has given them all the go by. He says they irrelevant to the question, and don't prove the soul or spirit to be conscious, or unconscious, and he therefore gives them the go by. Now don't you let him deceive you by any such reasoning. Let him prove that the spirit is not conscious in death if he can.

But he will say he has proved it, from Ps. 146, and Eccl. ch. 9. David means his past thoughts have perished, not that he will not have any more thoughts. If David meant that man was not to have any more thoughts when they perish, then Isaiah would teach us that man will have no more thoughts when he forsakes his thoughts and he tells the unrighteous man to forsake his thoughts. Here goes the gentleman's wonderful proof text to the four winds.

Solomon meant that the dead know nothing about what is going on here in the world; but he does not mean that they will know nothing of the future.

I have swept away the last vestige of his arguments derived from these texts. I now present my 16th negative argument. [Reads again from the manuscript, till his time is up.]

ETERNAL LIFE IN CHRIST ONLY.

[Concluded.]

The state of the dead between death and resurrection has a vital bearing upon "Eternal Life in Christ Only." If death be the utter extinction of man, not merely of the body, but the man, until the resurrection trump shall reanimate the sleeping dust, then those who believe in eternal torment, must, to make their belief consistent, believe that death is not death. They must see that their doctrine is untenable, if Scripture substantiates the position that death is a sleep, and our opponents cannot tell us, then, as they constantly do, and with great force, "that you do not believe that a man, when he dies, is 'as though he had not been" (Job 10: 18), but is still alive somewhere: hence you cannot believe that death means ceasing to exist.

It is a startling fact that religious beliefs have not been founded upon the Bible only, but that the philosophy of Plato, the fancies of Homer, and the dreams of Virgil, etc., have had a large share in moulding the opinions of men. The theory of these writers has been eagerly seized upon by that great poet, Milton, and by him captivatingly dramatized in that highly fanciful and sensational book, "Paradise Lost;" from which divines have drawn largely their ideas of heaven, hell, and death; and the consequence has been that the popular notions on these subjects have been almost accepted as Gospel truths.

I humbly suggest these remarks for the prayerful and Scriptural consideration of those who are interested in this subject of Life and Death: believing that a conscious state between death and resurrection is only a figment of the immortality of the soul, upon which are chiefly founded purgatory, prayers for the dead, and Spiritualism.

Lately I read this curious paragraph in the Daily Telegraph:

MR. BRIGHT AND THE SPIRITUALISTS.—A Chicago paper publishes a lecture delivered at Battle Creek by Mr. J. M. Peebles, the United States Consul at Trebizond, on the subject of Spiritualism. He said: 'While in England, I dined with John Bright, when transpired quite an earnest conversation on the subject of spiritualism. He said he had he had witnessed some of D. D. Home's manifestations. They were wonderful. He could attribute them to no cause, unless it be the one alleged—that of the intelligent disembodied spirits. 'But," he added, with due caution, 'I do not say this is so; but, if it be true, it is the strongest tangible proof we have of immortality.'"

How sad to think that, according to this, immortality derives its "strongest tangible proof" from a spirit-medium, and not from Scripture. Christ has the "keys of death and hades;" and "no man openeth, and no man shuteth:" therefore, to say that a medium has this power, is little short of blasphemy. As this is a somewhat startling doctrine, disquieting the dreams of ages, and upsetting the creeds of Christendom, such texts as the following will be at once flung in our teeth as irrefragible evidences that death is not a sleep, nor are the dead unconscious: viz.: "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise:" "Absent from the body, present with the Lord:" "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Lazarus in Abraham's bosom:" "Having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better;" and one or two other passages of like import. But, for the present, it must suffice to say that, after a careful study of these texts, so as to find "the mind of the Spirit amid the Babel-din of earth's many voices," we have perfectly satisfied ourselves that not one of them bears upon the question.

For example: "Absent from the body, present with the Lord." Does Paul mean death? If so, why does he say, "not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life?" When is mortality to be swallowed up of life? Certainly not at death; but at the resurrection, "when this mortal shall put on immortality.' So, then, Paul did not expect life at death, but after the resurrection.

The thief prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Jesus has not yet come in his kingdom. This is still future; hence Christ's reply could not mean that the thief would that very day—the day on which Christ died—be with him in his kingdom, as Christ did not then assume "the throne of his father David," but went into the grave.

What, then, is the change death effects? Scripture answers the question thus: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." (Eccl. 11: 7.) "If he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." (Job 34: 14, 15.)

Listen to Christ's intercessory prayer, and hear how he defines eternal life." He says, "This is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." "Life eternal," therefore, implies a knowledge of God and Christ.

"The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." If, therefore, all have eternal life, all men must have believed in Jesus. Is this the case? No! Therefore all men cannot have eternal life.

But, to establish our proposition conclusively, we ask you to hear John: "And this is the record that God has given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son, hath not life."

Life eternal being, therefore, only in Christ by the resurrection from the dead "to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away," we see at once how it is that the "second death" cannot "hurt" those who have eternal life, as nothing eternal can die. Hence it follows that the wicked who will be raised up to a "resurrection of damnation," destitute of the "resurrection of life," or eternal life, must perish in gehenna. God has declared that their end is, "to be burned up," "destroyed," "to perish," "to be cut off," "utterly cut off," "consumed," "devoured by fire," "slain," "destroyed forever," by the "second death."

Hear the following awful, but true statement: "But the fearful and unbelieving, and abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake of fire and brimstone: which is the second death." To escape this awful and fearful death, Christ is the only refuge, as he "gives unto his people eternal life, and they can never perish, neither can any pluck them out of his hand.

Eternal life being the gift of God, to entertain the idea, as nearly the whole of professing Christendom does, that a gracious God, "who willeth not the death of any," should create human beings, and endow them with the "gift of eternal life," to be tormented forever, is too awful for any thinking person to entertain for a moment. Perish forever the thought, and may you, dear friends, who may have entertained this cruel belief, without, I am willing to believe, questioning or putting it to the test of Scripture, but just taken for Gospel what you have been taught, as I did until lately,—give it your prayerful consideration. Remember the question is Life or Death. Find out, if you can, a minister in your neighborhood who preaches this gospel; attend his ministry in a prayerful spirit; shun those who "corrupt the word of God;" and you will soon experience in your soul a calm, a joy, a peace, a blessedness, and holy thankfulness in believing the truth as it is in Jesus:" and, as you journey on toward your eternal mansion, though often sick at heart, weary and faint, because of the difficulties of the way,—amid scorn, contempt, and cross-bearing for the truth, you will be able to sing along the dusty, suffering way, which, however, prophets, apostles, and martyrs have trod; the sunshine of God's love and truth, meanwhile irradiating your path, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day,"—the day of resurrection; "and not to me only but to all those who love his appearing."

THE ALBION (N. Y.) CAMPMEETING.

The first general Campmeeting of the Adventists of New York, closed June 14, with quite encouraging prospects of good results accruing, and of a healthy impetus being imparted to our cause in this State. The Grove is about two miles south of Albion village, and is one of the most beautiful for shade that can be found. A lovely place, indeed, for worship; as quiet as the woods can be, and as cheerful as any, with songful nightingales to lend additional cheer and inspiration. But unfortunately the weather was very unfavorable during the entire week. There was considerable rain, in showers, and it was very cold for the season, especially nights, when few kept themselves entirely comfortable; all of which detracted materially from the interests of the meeting, and diminished the general attendance probably, one third. And yet we had a good meeting, and were thankful for what we had. The cold did not chill all our zeal, nor did the rain dampen all our joys. It was very good to be there, despite the adverse circumstances, as many can and did testify Besides the two large mission tents, there were nine (mostly 16x24 ft. in size) representing various localities, encircling the seats and main speakers stand, and a boarding tent and cooking house in the rear. These were quite densely populated, and altogether made a very pleasant forest city. There were about a thousand in the audience Sunday morning and fifteen hundred, probably, in the afternoon, both being disturbed and more or less broken up by the rain.

maintained upon the ground,—and that without any special police force—was excellent; and the general respect shown the place and the meetings, was highly commendable on the part of all who came. Nothing was stolen, no ropes were cut or tents disturbed; there was no hooting, prowling about, or quarrelling of rowdies, nor angry discussions of religious zealots.

THE MINISTERS PRESENT from this State: C. F. Sweet Wm. A. Fenn, B. P. Stevens, M. R. Miles, J. H. Whitmore, E. Cowles, H. C. Newell, E. F. Sergisson, S. C. Gove, C. W. Low, D. Cogswell, C. P. Greenman, W. J. Hobbs, Wm. Ingmire, J. H. Lutterton, J. E. Wells, A. P. Moore, W. J. Morrell, W. Vreeland, A. A. Phelps, Jacob Blain, and Mrs. E. S. Jennings. (22.) From abroad: Mrs. L. M. Stoddard, J. W. Taylor, J. Wendell, H. L. Hastings, and J. T. Ongley. (5.)

Prayer and social meetings were held regularly at seven each day, and in some instances at other times. These were all excellent—well attended, and truly "heavenly places." One had nearly always to make several attempts before succeeding in gaining an opportunity to speak. Often three or four were up at once, and to sing was to sing some one down for a new trial. The prayers were usually short and expressive, and the testimonies mostly cheering utterances of faith. The soon coming of Christ was the most interesting theme; a proper preparation of heart, and holiness of life, the most important work; the resurrection of the dead, the undoubted time of reward; and immortality unquestionably the gift of God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

In all these important gospel truths there was a great unity of sentiment; and an almost universal desire expressed, to learn more of the Bible, and be more nearly moulded into the image of the Son of God.

THE PREACHING.

Br. C. W. Low, on very short notice responded to the call on Thursday eve and gave the first discourse. The relationship of Christ and the Father. Br. Fenn followed with remarks.

FRIDAY, J. W. Taylor: Text: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; and the greatest of these is charity." W. A. Fenn gave the annual address before the Advent Christian Conference.—"See that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Evening. M. R. Miles: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment," etc.

SATURDAY was set apart for the dedication of the "New York State Mission-tent." (Size 45x66ft.) Br. B. P. Stevens read the 25th Psalm. Song, "In Expectation Sweet," etc. Prayer by C. W. Low, and dedicatory sermon by J. H. Whitmore:—"I will come again." President Cogswell then formally presented the tent to the Conference, on the part of the Committee, and Br. Fenn made the dedicatory prayer. The whole was an impressive service—pleasing to God, we have no doubt, and encouraging to all interested in Mission tents.

P. M. service. Prayer by Mrs. E. S. Jennings. Sermon by Mrs. L. M. Stoddard. Text: "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word of my mouth and give them warning from me." Eve. J. W. Hobbs.—"For unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them: but the word did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."

SUNDAY, A. A. Phelps.—"Occupy till I come." At 12.30 p. m. in the large tent, Dr. N. H. Barbour:—The "Ten virgins." H. L. Hastings:—"We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord." Evening, Mrs. E. S. Jennings:—"Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Mrs. Stoddard followed with remarks.

MONDAY. A. C. Newell:—"Behold I send the promise of my Father upon you. But tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." H. L. Hastings:—"For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their cries, but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil." Evening C. F. Sweet:—"Say unto them as I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the sinner; but that the wicked turn from his evil way and live: turn ye turn ye from your evil ways for why will ye die, O house of Israel."

TUESDAY. A. P. Moore:—"And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." H. L. Hastings:—The Lord's prayer. Subject, the kingdom. W. A. Fenn:—"And I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

WEDNESDAY. Prayer by Jacob Blain. Sermon by J. Wendell:—"For the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand?" At 2 p. m. Dr. Barbour occupied thirty minutes on Rev. ch. 17. Then Sr. S. M. Stoddard took the regular hour. Text: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness, then shall the end come." Eve. H. L. Hastings—"I write unto thee that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God."

BAPTISM. At noon on Sunday Br. Fenn baptised four young ladies; one the daughter of Br. C. F. Sweet.

ORDINATION. Sunday evening, Brn. Wm. J. Morrell, of New London, J. E. Wells of Rochester, and S. C. Gove of Fairport were presented at the stand for ordination. Prayer by B. P. Stevens, charge by H. L. Hastings, and right hand of fellowship by W. A. Fenn; after which each made a short address to the audience.

FINANCES. The meeting was self-sustaining. $156.50 were raised in two collections, and disbursed as follows:

Use of grounds and fixtures					$64.27
Freight of tents					7.66
Twelve ministers	(expenses)	$4	each		48.00

BREAKING UP. Br. Wm. L. Himes arrived on the ground Wednesday eve. but too late to preach. And J. V. Himes came the next morning as we were striking the tents—supposing the meeting was to continue another day. Their late arrival was much regretted, as all would have been glad to hear them. But we saw their faces, took their hands, and were sad to part so soon.

"Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." Especially so, pilgrims on the way to the heavenly kingdom. Br. Himes' grey hairs led the mind back to his early labors with Br. Miller in '43, awakening reminiscences akin to those that Sr. Stoddard stirred in her touching referance to the dear old chart of that memorable date. Vividly the venerable relic rose, and like a cancelled contract, there seemed traced across it,—just as Habakkuk saw it two thousand years ago,—words that stayed five "virgin's" souls, at least, and stays them still: "The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie: though it [seem] to tarry, WAIT for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."

Another parting is past; a few more and we shall meet

"Where congregations ne'er break up."

Till then we "wait."

Obituary.

CARTER.—Fell asleep, June 12, 1871, Nora, daughter of Br. Henry and Sr. Mary E. Carter, aged 14 years and nine months.

Again has the angel of death spread his wings and taken a lovely daughter from the home of fond parents. The stars smile from the heavens, but their rays fall on a new made grave, the quiet rest of a beautiful maiden. The storms may beat, seasons may come and go, but still she slumbers on, safe under the loving eye of him who said—"Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of God."

Her sickness was of eight days duration, which quickly wasted her fair form away, until death sealed her for his own.

Nora was a faithful Sabbath-school scholar. For some time had been unusually engaged in studying the Bible and in trying to find out its great and important truths. At Sunday-school she would often ask questions, some of which were: Who are the blessed dead? Why were our first parents driven out of Eden?

The parents mourn, but not without hope. They expect "when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall she also appear with him in glory."

A large concourse of friends and acquaintances gathered around the precious dead and mingled their tears together over the common loss, and in one sad procession followed her to her last resting place, where she sleeps in Jesus. We trust we shall meet her in the resurrection morn, coming forth to immortal life.

RACHEL A. GIBSON

LEE. At Forest Bay, Mich., June 5, 1871, Br. H. Lee. Br. Lee was born in England, and emigrated to this country, or rather to Canada, where he married. His wife was afterwards the instrument of his conversion. For many years Br. Lee has been looking for the hope of the promise of God unto the fathers, and when we organized a church here he joined with us.

His death was caused by a strain while engaged in rearing a telegraph pole. He attended our last meeting and spoke with much sweetness and power. We little thought they were his last words to us. He leaves a widow and six children to mourn, in hope.

W. J. CUMINS.

WELLS. At Laporte, Ind., June 7, 1871, Br. H. C. Wells: aged 61 years.

Br. Wells united with the Advent church in 1854, and has been a member with them until his death. In his last moments his faith in God was unshaken. Although a great sufferer, yet not a word of murmuring or complaint escaped his lips. At length worn, wasted and weary he fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a widow and four children to mourn their irreparable loss. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea saith the Spirit; that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

SHURTLEFF. In Genoa, Ill., June 4, 1871, Mahala Shurtleff: aged 78 years and six months.

She sleeps in Jesus. Services by the writer.

M. MCCULLOCH.

She rose in the morning as well as usual, and died in the evening, after an illness of only about fourteen hours. My sister embraced religion several years ago, and for a time ran the Christian race with patience; but afterwards she lost her enjoyment. Last winter she was revived during our meetings, but did not fully embrace our views. Since those meetings she gave evidence of her adoption into the family of believers. We expect to meet her soon on that glorified shore where sorrow never will come.

Services by a Baptist minister. Text Rev. 14:13—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." I thought the minister placed the blessing on the wrong class. He said the body died and was laid in the grave, but the soul lived on in heaven; and then in glowing colors portrayed its blessedness.

B. J. GOODWIN.

Her hope was in Christ, and she fell asleep in full faith of an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, when he comes to earth again. Services by the writer, July 4.

D. MATHEWSON.

LAMBKIN. Fell asleep in Jesus, June 21, 1871, at Cass, Huron Co., Mich., Sr. Lydia C. Lambkin: aged 67 years, 10 months, 13 days.

Lydia was my wife. It was hard to part with her, but when I look forward to the time when Jesus will come again to give her immortality, this hope makes my heart leap for joy.

The political state of the country is anything but quiet. There is no communication between the seaports and the interior, private correspondence is violated, and the interests of the United States are said to suffer from the absence of their representative.

The International.

This is a society conceived in Europe, with the design of uniting the workingmen in an organization, and arraying them against the rest of the world. In these days of wonders, one hardly dare assert that they cannot succeed, although all must pray that they may not. The doings of the Commune of Paris is a sample of their work, and is what might be expected to result from their principles. An official circular issued in 1869, says:

"The alliance declares itself Atheist. It seeks the abolition of worship; the substitution of science for faith, of human for Divine justice; and the abolition of marriage. It demands above all, the abolition of the right of inheritance, so that, in future, each may have the full benefit of what he has himself produced, and that, in conformity with the decision arrived at by the last congress at Brussels, land, instruments of labor, and all other capital becoming the common property of society at large, shall be at the disposition only of workers; that is to say, of the agricultural and industrial associations."

It is easily seen that this society is at war with the very basal principles upon which human society and government now rest, either in a monarchy or republic. In summing up these aims and purposes, Jules Favre strongly says:

"Europe is face to face with a work of destruction, systematically directed against each of the nations which compose it, and against the very principles upon which civilization reposes. After having seen the leaders of the International in power she will have to ask herself what is the value of their pacific declarations. The foundation of their system can be nothing but the frightful despotism of a small number of chiefs, thrusting themselves upon a multitude bending under the yoke of Communism, subjected to every kind of slavery—even the most odious, that of the conscience—with neither land nor home, neither worship nor prayer, reduced to an immense workshop, governed by terror and restrained by force of law to drive from their hearts their families and their God."

The Age of Working Men.

The remark attributed to Mr. Gladstone "this is the age of the workingmen," is worthy of his sagacity, and points to a question that is looming up in the near future. It is the problem of labor in relation to capital—of the vast mass of toilers who are beginning to be conscious of brains in their heads, and of rights which the privileged few are bound to respect. Communism was symptomatic of more than the disease of Parisian society. England itself is a land of millionaires and paupers. But at length the workers are becoming restive, as they look on from their misery and see luxurious idleness squandering so much of this world's wealth which it has never earned. That was an uncomfortable but significant remark of Herr Bebel in the German Parliament the other day: "Wo to the palaces, peace to the cottages, and death to the luxurious idlers, is, and ever will be, the watch-word of the proletairiate in all parts of the world."—Independent.

Mazzini on the Commune.

Mazzini has an article in a late number of "Rome of the People" on the Commune and Assembly, in which he writes: "The orgies of fury, of vengeance, and of blood, which Paris has offered as a spectacle to the world, would fill our soul with despair, if we had merely an opinion and not a faith. A people which wallows about as if drunk, raging against itself with its teeth, and lacerating its limbs while howling triumphal cries; which dances an infernal dance before the grave it has dug with its own hands; which kills, tortures, burns, committing crimes without sense, aim, or hope; which vociferates like the fool who sets fire to his own pile before the eyes of the foreign foe, against whom it did not know how to fight—such a people puts us in mind of some of the most horrid visions of Dante's hell. The doings of both parties in France, Mazzini says, are marked by savage ferocity, by an insane blood-thirstiness more characteristic of wild beasts than of men. He condemns in the strongest terms, the acts of the Commune which, based on no principle of patriotism or humanity, shot the hostages in cold blood, when their death could not possibly serve the cause of the Commune, and threw the torch into edifices that are the ancient glory of the town. Mazzini believes that it is the duty of the Italian Republicans to separate themselves openly from both French parties, lest the moral sense of his countrymen should suffering the same degradation as in France."

Peace or War.

The announcement of an understanding having been formed between Germany, Russia and Austria, for the preservation of the peace of Europe, must, considering the authority on which it is made, be received with considerable reserve. It is conceived that these three powers might combine, as they have done before, against the hydra-headed foe of revolution which has substantial dangers for them all. But on the great territorial questions which menace the future tranquility of Europe, their interests are so little identical that any expressed stipulation of common action would prove in the last degree meaningless and inoperative. There never was a time when the prospects of enduring peace in the Old World were so thoroughly uncertain, or when dynastic combinations were so impotent in making them more secure.—N. Y. Times.

THE POLITICAL FUTURE.

A writer in the Cologne Gazette remarks: "If Germany wanted to make England a respectable military State, she would do it at once, by pretending to get up a fleet for the conquest of England, studying English maps, and making similar preparations for a few months, England would at once take the hint, and see to her army directly. But it is not from Germany that there is any reason to fear. France is the real danger. The character of a nation is not changed in a day, and not even in the fiery furnace of affliction through which France has just passed has been able to purge her of the old swaggering vanity which so often beguiled her to disaster. The more desperate and degraded France becomes, the more virulent and reckless will the passion for military glory be displayed. I should not be in the least surprised if, before another year, England found herself in collision with France about Belgium, or some othe question. The tone of the French press within the last few days has been very bitter toward England, and there is not wanting a suspicion that it is countenanced, if not stimulated, by some of the leaders, in the hope that the distraction of a foreign quarrel might help to settle things at home, and favor the advancement of their own intrigues for power. Of course, France is too crippled for immediate action of any kind; but we may depend on it, she has tried to get some little share of military powers as a set-off against the incessant and humiliating defeats of the late war."

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

An English correspondent says that many Independent Baptist ministers in the United Kingdom have ceased to preach, or to believe in, the eternal misery of the lost; and have adopted chiefly the annihilation theory, though, in some instances, the doctrine of universal restoration.

Rev. Dr. Clark, who recently joined the Methodist Episcopal church in New England, was settled two years as a Universalist preacher in Providence, R. I., and four years in Lowell, Mass. He also lectured ten years among the Spiritualists, published a Spiritualist paper for five years in Auburn, N. Y., and superintended the first camp-meeting in Malden, Mass., in the interest of Spiritualism. He says, "By the grace of God, through Jesus Christ, I am now devoted to a glorious work in a better direction.

AN UNEXPLAINED PHENOMENON: OR THE DARKNESS OVER NEW ENGLAND IN 1780.

What was the cause of this darkness? Here the wisdom of New Eng. was baffled. Newspaper men who are generally regarded as competent to explain all passing events, gave up in despair and said: "It is to be desired that curious and philosophical gentlemen would favor the public with a solution of this phenomenon." They said "there was nothing terrible in it," but nevertheless nearly everybody was terrified. It was pronounced a lusus naturæ, past the vulgar comprehension, and which it was requested that the Royal Society of England should be consulted to frame a solution. But this learned body never explained it. Dr Tenney, in 1785, wrote the Historical Society that the ability of land had endeavored to present a cause, but, said he, "you will agree with me that no satisfactory solution has yet appeared." In similar language wrote Noah Webster in 1843. The theory of some, that it was smoke and ashes from forest fires, extensively raging, is overturned by Dr. Webster, who argued that "No fires in forests could have been sufficient to spread a dense cloud over the whole of New England and even some parts of the Middle States." He might have added: "And this in so short a time, when the swiftest clouds move but ten miles an hour." The theory of Webster himself, that it was the "smoke of some volcano in the northern regions of this continent, wafted in a vast column by the wind," is equally untenable. No great density of smoke was observable, and in Boston, as elsewhere, "there was," says a Bostonian, "not the least appearance of fog, smoke or haziness."

The old poems declare that smoke from the burning of every town and forest in the land would not create so dismal a gloom. And all analogies teach they were right. The notion of some, that Venus or Mercury intercepted the sun's rays, is refuted by the fact that there was no transit of either of these planets during that year. Some said it was a solar eclipse—a conclusion rendered impossible by the moon having fulled the day before. And very aptly does the astronomer of Paxton ask: "If the darkness of the day was caused by a solar eclipse, what then darkened the night, as the moon was more than forty hours motion past her opposition?" Others said a comet interposed the baleful shadow of its nucleus between men and the sun, or flung its tail upon the earth. Dr. Tenney attributed the darkness to a subtratum cloud of vapor of great thickness and density, the sun's rays getting lost in the struggle to penetrate the dusky shield. And Stearns regarded it as caused by exhaled particles of various qualities of matter highly condensed and impervious to sunlight. It is possible these views were borrowed from Dr. Thomas Burnet, the English geologist, who more than a century earlier, (in 1667), had written that in the "Latter Days," in accordance with our Lord's prediction, "The sun and moon shall be darkened, or of a bloody hue or pale countenance, produced by an infectious and corrupt air, filled with thick vapors and fumes or turbid exhalations, atmospheric obscurities to a great extent intercepting the sun's rays, causing it thus to appear, proportionably diminishing the light of the moon." (Vide, Theory of the Earth.) To say the least, many of the views of the New Englanders coincide with those of Burnet respecting the modus operandi by which an unusual solar obscuration could take place. Far more likely is the view already hinted at, that the secondary cause was not at all in the body of the solar orb or in the earth, but of cosmical origin, and traceable to cometic or meteoric material consuming in the upper regions and falling in a great cloud into the atmosphere in the form of cosmic dust. The sooty and sulphurous smell in the air, the faint electrical flashes, and the black dust seen on the surface of water in many localities favors this view. The cause was evidently cosmic, cometic and celestial.

But while New England admitted a secondary cause, her Christian people, sharing the feeling of the devout and philosophical Stearns, imputed the flinging of this black shadow "like a funeral pall" over the land inhabited by nearly one-third of the people of the United Colonies, to the direct interposition of the God of the universe, who himself, by means unknown to mortals, darkened both the sun and the moon, both the day and the night as a token of his indignation against every prevailing iniquity, and an omen of a future day of universal destruction and wrath! It makes no difference that it was not supernatural, or that secondary causes had produced the result witnessed. The effect only was sought for. The sacred Scriptures had announced a darkening of the sun and moon, and these signs had been fulfilled before their eyes—locally, to be sure—but so were all physical and moral signs. The gravest minds reverently went behind all secondary cause and declared it was the immediate hand of God. The ministry insisted it was occasioned by a divine arrangement of nature, and in the spirit of the sacred Hebrew writers, who ascribed all remarkable and unaccountable acts of the natural world to the working out of the vast designs of the Infinite, said: "This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes!" In more modern times man would doubtless have said: Oh! it is only a temporary obscurity of the light by a cloud of exhaled vapor, or by terrestrial contact with cosmic particles, and nothing more. Few minds would see God in the mysterious cloud. Not so with our fathers. They saw in the strange sun-darkening shroud a sure celestial token of the approaching consummation, and so proclaimed it in all ways. The impression was most profound, and was not effaced during the remainder of that century. The view was reiterated seventeen years later by the orthodox Spaulding in the pulpit of the Tabernacle at Salem, and was indorsed in the first religious paper in the world, published at Portsmouth in 1808. Indeed, it was opposed by none. To-day nearly the entire body of believers comprising the sect of Advent Christians in the United States and Canada sustain the view of the New England Christians of the last century concerning the significance of the darkness of Friday, May 16, 1780. We argue nothing here pro or con, but only state facts, and should be unfaithful chroniclers of historical fact did we omit to record this abiding conviction of nearing Judgment on the old New England mind, transmited to hundreds of thousands of their posterity by the scenes of the never-to-be-forgotten Dark Day.

We may learn lessons of good from these recollections of this Black Friday. Individually the multitudes who lived in 1871 may not feel that such old time and far off events, however ominous, at all concern them. Nevertheless, there was wisdom in the words, and a certain heroic principle in the conduct of Abraham Davenport, Colonel and afterward Judge of Stamford, Conn., and State Councilor in the Legislative Chamber at Hartford—a wisdom and a moral worth remembering. The providence of God found him serving his day and generation, when the great darkness fell. Amid the deepening gloom that wrapped about the city, darkened the rooms of the State House, and set the lawgivers trembling, and many of them to exclaim: "It is the Lord's Great Day," and move to adjourn, Davenport refused to be frightened from his post, but when all eyes turned to him, boldly said: "I am against the adjournment. Either the day of judgment is at hand or it is not. If it is not, there is no cause for adjournment. If it is, I wish to be found in the line of my duty. I wish candles to be brought." Men will lose nothing while in the true line of present duty. In the words of the poet Whittier in allusion to the scene we here describe: "Simple duty hath no place for fear." The line of duty is the true path for all to walk in, come what may.—D. T. T. in Boston Journal.

"DEFECTS OF THE REFORMATION."

"This eschatology is limited in the main to the idea of a state of blessedness or misery after death: the justified, who have received the grace of God, go to God in heaven; others go to hell. Even in this it hardly goes beyond the individual stand-point. At the end of time stands the last day, to decide once more the everlasting fate of all men: though one does not see why this is necessary, as a definite judgment is passed upon all immediately after death. A new condition of the world, in which the creature in its diverse spheres attains to the existence for which it is destined, was so little thought of, that the actual destruction of the world was taught by the old theologians. 'Fulfillment,' says Quenstedt, 'does not consist in simple change or renewal of qualities, but in total destruction and annihilation of the very substance of the world itself.' In this way, not only is more made of the dualism of the blessed and the lost than Scripture warrants; for the Scriptures teach that the whole universe, heaven and earth, is to be renewed, and that a gloomy abode of death exists only without this glorious and only world of life; but one entire half of the world, viz., nature, has been overlooked, and Christ is not perceived to be, as he is—the Restorer of all things. And as their view of the end of all things is thus defective, so is their view of the development of things. In fact, proper reference to this is not to be found either in the eschatology or in the history (universal and individual) of redemption. In the doctrines concerning the final end, the defectiveness is shown in the fact that, the two middle members, which, according to the Scripture, lie between the present state and final perfect one, are thrown out: the region of death, (hades, sheol) as distinct from hell (gehenna); and the future reign of Christ and his people over all the kingdoms and lands of this world—as distinct from the final end and fulfillment of all things. The one doctrine was sacrificed to oppose the Catholic doctrine of purgatory; the other, to oppose the Anabaptist chiliasm. They had not ethical and metaphysical breadth or freedom for the first; for the second, they had not historical completeness of view. The subjective stand-point has hindered a fuller development of the Protestant church; but it has hindered still more a knowledge of the kingdom of God: as the King was little thought of, compared with the high priest, so, naturally, was the kingdom. Hope and love were neglected as compared with faith; and so was the future appearing of Christ, compared with the past, and the idea of the kingdom compared with personal salvation. Protestantism, like Christ himself, preached in all sincerity, 'Repent, and believe the gospel,' but that other part of the preaching of Christ, 'The kingdom of God is come nigh,' it kept back, just as from the apostolic view of the resurrection of Christ, and gave too exclusive heed to his death.

"This neglect of these doctrines of the new creation, and everything miraculous that is involved in them, revenged itself at a later period. The supernatural character of the divine revelation was not considered sufficiently, or rather, the supernatural in it was not studied fully and on all sides: the great universal miracles of the end, as of the beginning, were neglected. (Gen. 1: 11.) Hence the miracles of the middle period, which the Old and the New Testaments record, seemed like arbitrary interruptions of the steadfast course of things. If the Scriptural idea of a grand development of the world, through the human acts of the fall and the divine acts of the restoration, had been vividly realized, then the miracles of the Old and New Testament would have fallen naturally into their place as parts of one whole, and would not have seemed like unwarranted exceptions."—C. A. Auberlin, pp. 214–16, Trans. by A. A. Paton.

In the April number of the BANNER an invitation was thrown out by the editor to any one who can "shed light on this obscure passage," to "talk on." With this invitation, I will venture a few comments.

The passage has reference to the new heavens and earth, as is clearly manifest by comparing the 17th verse with the allusion Peter makes to it, and the vision St. John had of it. See 2. Pet. 3: 13, and Rev. 21: 1.

The prophet tells us that "there shall be no more thence, an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days." So we learn that in that state, there will be no infants. But will not infants be saved? yes; for Jesus tell us, (Luke 18: 15, 16,) that "of such is the kingdom of God." But they will not there be infants, but will be as free from all the weakness and helplessness of childhood, as though they had been of mature age.

"For the child shall die an hundred years old." We are not by this to understand that there will be death in that state. For the prophet tells us that the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying." And of them, the Savior says, "neither can they die any more;" and "there" St. John tells us, "shall be no more death."

As a reason that no infants will be there, it is said, "The child shall die an hundred years old." That is the child that dies, will there be, as though matured by a hundred years. It dies a child; but in the resurrection it is to be "equal to the angels." "Among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist, but he that is least in the kingdom of heaven, is greater than he."

"Nor an old man that hath not filled his days." An "old man that hath not filled his days" is one who fails of reaching his allotted time; his faculties break down with premature decay. But there it will not be so. Man will live on without infirmity. Length of days, even life forevermore are to be his; and he is to live on forever without decrepitude, to fill them.

"But the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." As it is not in that heavenly state that the child dies; so it is not in that, where the sinner grows old, and is accursed. While those who die in childhood will in the resurrection come forth in great perfection, where all will know as they are known; the sinner, though he may have lived and grown old, attained to honors and to wealth, shall not enter there; he "shall be accursed."

As a matter of interest, and as corroborative of this view, I will here transcribe the marginal notes on this text found in an old Geneva Bible printed in 1560. "Meaning in this wonderful restoration of the church there should be no weakness of youth, nor infirmities of age, but all should be fresh and flourishing; and this is fulfilled in the Heavenly Jerusalem, when all sin shall cease, and all tears shall be wiped away. But the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed. Whereby he showeth that the infidels and unrepentant sinners have no part in this benediction."—L. C. Collins, in Bible Banner.

WERE THE APOSTLES MURDERERS?

This may be thought a strange question, yet in view of the position taken by some on the subject of the resurrection of the dead, we deem it pertinent. Here is the idea to which we refer:

"It would seem then on the whole, from a collation of all the grounds on which an opinion is to be formed, that the judgment of reason would be, that a spiritual body is developed at death. By spiritual, in the connection, we mean refined, subtle, ethereal, sublimated." "The true resurrection takes place at the death of every individual believer, when he emerges from a material into a spiritual body."—Prof. George Bush, Anastasis, pp. 78, 190.

The germination of the grain is the bursting up of its inner living principle into a more beautiful and new form of existence; and the resurrection of the man is the rising up of his living principle, his spirit, into a new and grander existence."—Rev. H. M. Goodwin, Congregationalist minister in Rockford Ill.

It will be remembered that when Christ "sent forth" his twelve apostles to preach the kingdom of heaven at hand he empowered them to "heal the sick, clense the lepers, raise the dead, and cast out devils." (Matt. 10: 8). We have always supposed that by raising the dead he meant doing just what he did himself to the widow's son at the gates of Nain (Luke 7; 11–15), to the ruler's daughter (Mark 5: 35–42), and to Lazarus who had been dead four days (John 11); but if "the resurrection of the man is the raising up of his living principle, his spirit, into a new and grander existence,"—if it "takes place at the death of every individual believer" by the spirit emerging from the body, instead of the body itself being raised up from the power of death, corruption and the grave, then it is difficult to conceive how the apostles could "raise the dead" without murdering those they met. Therefore we put the question, Were the apostles murderers? —Advent Herald.

CHAPTER II.

In respect to the primary fact I am now about to state there may be with different individuals a difference of experience; but as for myself, I was profoundly impressed in early life with the thought that the web of, my future life would be fashioned according to the warp and woof formed by my own acts in the present. This first impression of accountability was not the result of education in the sense of scholastic theological teaching; for from the time I first learned from maternal lips to say, "Our Father who art in heaven," I felt its truthfulness in my whole being; and I think I may safely say I fully believed in God before I knew he had made a revelation of his will to man. I wish here also to record the fact that my first impression concerning his character, made as I believe by the Spirit of divinity on my plastic heart in childhood, was an ennobling one, and (so far as I was able,) worthy of him who created all things. And though it has since, in some portions of my life, by false teaching, been dimmed—yes nearly obliterated—and my aspirations to be like him overshadowed, yet I am truly thankful at this late hour to be able to say, after having spent many a year in a close and impartial investigation of the Bible, until I have passed into the autumn of life, my locks fast whitening for the grave, and unless Jesus soon comes like Abraham of old, I must be gathered to my fathers, that my first impression of my Creator's character was essentially correct in all important particulars, and is amply corroborated by his word.

It was this: that my heavenly Father (my earthly one was dead) was a God of love! In other words, I believed that principle, or ingredient in his character predominated over all others, and, as a consequence, that he loved me. How much, I could not then tell; neither, indeed, can I now. I also believed that I ought, yes did, love him. And I fearlessly assert, it never entered my head I could be mistaken in this matter, and that instead of being as I fondly supposed myself the child of his tender care and endearing love, I was in fact, through the misconduct of my first parents, a bond-slave of Satan holding kindredship with devils. Oh, no! At that early day in my life's brief span I am sure I never dreamed of such a thing; nor that I was in any way corrupted, depraved, or defiled, either by my own deeds, or the acts of others.

But the knowledge was sure to come soon enough, as the intelligent reader will readily believe, when I inform him I was born more than fifty years ago in Puritanic New England, and received my early religious education among the strictest of the Calvinistic sects. Not however from my mother in the sense in which I now speak; for though among, she was not of them; and from my best recollection (for she fell asleep long time ago), I have reason to believe, inasmuch as the goodness of God was her usual theme when engaged in religious conversation, it was that endearing element in his character that in early life led her to repentance, and I doubt not I am indebted to her more than I can realize, as the instrument under God by which that first blessed impression was formed in me.

I commenced attending school at the age of five years, and any one at all acquainted with the facts well knows that at that time the youthful student learned the elementary principles of language and Calvinistic theology from the same teacher. After I had made sufficient progress to enable me to read, one of my first lessons was—"The soul is immortal, and can never die!" and I was carefully instructed that I had such a soul somewhere inside of me, which did my thinking, and was in fact myself. I was also taught it could see, hear, and feel, independent of the body, and would leave that useless, or at least unnecessary part behind at death, and immediately enter upon an endless state of happiness or misery. This was, I confess, rather a hard dose for me to swallow. The idea of my existing within myself, and at some future time being able to exist without myself, seemed to me to be so superlatively ridiculous that I felt strongly disposed to serve my teacher as an intelligent Australian once served his when being instructed on the same topic[1].

But having it impressed upon me that to doubt was certain damnation, and learning, also, that all those to whom I looked for instruction believed it, I swallowed it at a venture. But I confess it sat rather hard on my stomach then, and ever after, until with several other doses afterwards taken of no better quality, I succeeded in throwing off the whole indigestible mass together.

I say this first dose of popular theology was uncongenial, and lay hard in my mental abdomen. For say what you will, it is after all, a difficult task to make the intelligent mind believe a theory the evidences of the truthfulness of which lie deeply imbedded amid the fossils of speculative theology, while the opposite is taught by nature, and easily learned by common observation. But the first dose of error, especially if it is rather large for your swallowing capacity, like the first step in crime, is the most difficult to take; yet if you succeed in swallowing it, and can keep it down, lesser doses afterwards taken will be more easily swallowed, and effect you but little. Hence having succeeded by great exertion (materially aided also by the soporific effect of a large election powder) in receiving this first, and as I now believe, largest draft on my credulity, I was ready for whatever else my spiritual physicians might think necessary. And I had not long to wait.

"The Assembly's Catechism" (you may have seen or heard of it) was considered in those days as important a work for study in the schools, as was the spelling book. Yea, more so; for there was less danger of punishment in neglecting to get your lesson in the latter than the former, and a reward was often bestowed by the minister on the scholar who had commited to memory during the term and could repeat most of it. Being quick to learn I mastered the whole of it in my eighth year, and for my achievement received a prize that, I think, could not have cost less than ten cents. It was not ten cents though; but a book with large pictures of his Satanic majesty, the devil, together with awful representations of poor sinners (or rather I ought to say their immortal souls) roasting in sulphurous flames, in his dread abode, hell.

I had been instructed that the primary cause of this awful fate of the ungodly was the disobedience of our first parents in Eden, which resulted in their fall from holiness to the lowest depths of moral depravity, sweeping with them in their mighty descent their unborn posterity for all time. And thus by their fatal act we were all securely bound, hand and foot, in the fetters of depravity—spiritually dead and lying under a sentence of eternal death (which meant endless torment), from which few would escape; for God's anger had been awakened and would henceforth (under the name of justice) be his ruling attribute. And thus I learned that original sin had fallen with crushing power on my defenseless head, and instead of being, as I had fondly supposed myself a child of the Most High, I was an imp of Satan, who certainly deserved, and probably would in the end receive endless damnation.

This teaching affected me more than I can tell. It nearly transformed me. It took away to a fearful extent my confidence in God and hope for the future, and in their room placed dislike, doubt, distrust, and fear. I began to feel very wickedly, and if I could avoid the all-seing-eye, could do very wicked things. I felt in fact as though I was the devil's child, as I had been taught, instead of God's, and was strongly inclined to do his work. Oh! if my feelings could then have been known to some good spiritual Samaritan, and he had poured the healing balm of a crucified and risen Savior's devoted and untiring love into my lacerated and bleeding heart, what a blessing it would have been!

But no such cordial was in use among my spiritual advisers. True I heard them occasionally speak of Jesus; but I learned to my sorrow that his mediatorial work was of such a nature that it was very doubtful whether it would reach me in a way to ameliorate [illegible] future life; for the devil had [illegible] completely overturned the arrangements, and frustrated the original plans and designs of Jehovah towards the race, that the gift of his only Son, though freely bestowed for that purpose, was inadequate to heal the festering fatal wound.

Thus was the "glad tidings of great joy to all people" reduced to the cold and comfortless statement that we were all ruined in Adam, and though Sovereign mercy had interposed, it was impossible to tell in whose behalf the pardon had been made out. Poor consolation this, indeed, to pour into a tender, youthful heart, longing for one ray of love to illuminate its dark recesses. And as I now cast a retrospective glance at this dreary period in my spiritual career, I can but feel how appropriate to such teachers as I had, would be the language of Job to his two friends: "Miserable comforters are ye all, physicians of no value. Oh! that ye would altogether hold your peace, and it should be your wisdom."[2]

As may be supposed, in process of time I became careless and lost my interest to a great extent in the future. If I was so securely bound that I could do nothing for myself, and, for aught I knew to the contrary, beyond the reach of the great Physician, then I must bide my time and accept the result. But a shadow had settled over and woven its dark pall around my young life that I could not shake off. I became taciturn and unsocial—"odd," my friends said. In fact, dear reader, I had become positively afraid of my best Friend. Yes the time had been when I could look up to heaven and say, 'My Father bless me!' and feel that I was heard, and my youthful prayer was answered. But not so now: for I dared not call on his name, much less ask his blessing.

I eventually became disgusted with religion, as it was pictured in the popular theological mirror, and in heart detested their whole system—and I might include, without departing from the truth, my spiritual guides, also. But while I could not throw off the incubus of the former, I readily relieved myself of the latter: for go to meeting I would not, when I could possibly avoid it, or to Sabbath-school either, excepting occasionally to get some books from the library. I loved best to wander alone among the hills, valleys and woods of my own, my native New England home; for the sweet solace of nature in her native purity soothed and calmed my troubled spirit. I loved her and I felt she loved me, and in her sweet whisperings of peace I could find no intimation that she was groaning under the same withering curse that bound me, together with common humanity in the shackles of fate; but on the contrary, experienced the sweet assurance that her God, like the one I used to adore, was a being of love worthy of adoration and worship; at least, much more so than the theological deity I had been taught to fear. And a sense of his presence and approaching smile when isolated from the haunts of men, was truly a healing balm to my soul, and, I verily believe, the life-boat that saved me from mental shipwreck.

Be that as it may through all these early years, though somewhat stoical, I never entirely lost my faith in him in whom I first trusted, nor my confidence that his goodness would again at some time be made manifest to me, though how and when, was an impenetrable mystery.

[1] "A friend of the explorer Lang tried long and patiently to make a very intelligent, docile Australian black understand the principle of existence without a body. But the latter could never keep his countenance, and generally made an excuse to get away. One day the teacher watched and found that his pupil slipped away to have a hearty fit of laughter at the idea of a man living and going about without arms or legs, or a mouth with which to eat."—Historical Collection.

[2] The "Clergyman" first placed in charge of the church in my native town was settled for life: and I recollect hearing people say that when he was ordained (this was before my birth), he was charged to preach "the incomprehensible mystery plainly revealed;" and that he had always preached the first, but never the last. And I can testify to the truthfulness of the last statement, not only concerning him, but others who after his removal by death occupied his place.

MATERIALISM AS TAUGHT BY SCIENCE AND REVEALED IN GOD'S WORD.

Now when immaterialists admit the brain to be the factor of thought (and to deny this is to turn the back upon the observation and experience of the world for centuries; to violate ones own common sense), when they admit the brain to be the organ of thought, they admit that thought is the result or effect of a material organization. For to prove that the brain is a material organization we have only to turn to its chemical analysis which will show it to be composed of "Water, albuminous matter, colorless fat, red fat, ozmazome, lactates and phosphates. (Lassaigne's Analysis, Gray's Anatomy, p. 60.) Nothing immaterial is found in the brain's structure.

To be sure we are told by immaterialists, that the brain is one thing and the mind another: the one is a material organ of thought the other an immaterial organ of thought; or, that the brain is the seat of the mind. How can an immaterial substance, such as thought, be produced by a material organization? they ask. Let us ask, in turn, How can electricity be produced by the action of a material acid upon a material metal? or, by the friction of two material substances? What is magnetism? Do we not find it in a material substance! What is sound? Is it matter, really? That is, is it composed of matter? Yet is it not produced by material agents? Hence if these qualities, that are immaterial, as far as analysis of their constituents will show, if they are produced by known material agents, is it necessary for us to suppose that thought cannot be, also, produced by a material organ, the brain? Must we go to the trouble to invent a "certain something, I know not what," nor how, nor why, and ascribe to it the power of thought? Does it make the mystery any the less mysterious?

Then if the brain is the mind, as it has the same office, and the mind is the soul, keeping to orthodox (in name but not in truth) definitions, then the soul is material, being the result of a material organization. Should we allow immaterialists a broader location for the soul than they claim—the whole body for instance—still would science remain as proof of its materiality. A rigid chemical analysis of the various adjuncts and essentials of human life would reveal nothing but matter; neither would it leave any deficiencies to be supplied. Life itself we have shown to be the result of matter's operating upon matter. Breath or air, food and drink, the essentials of life, are most assuredly material. Blood, the product from these essentials, as readily yields to the chemist as did its constituents before their entrance into the human laboratory. Should we consider for a moment mind and matter—as immaterialists say—in connection, we would find mind to be an outgrowth of matter, and dependent upon it for conscious existence.

Examining early life we find the nutritive organs preceding the brain in their formation. Circulation is established with the first motions of life, and the brain and spinal cord are not visible in the embryonic state for a considerable time after the heart is seen. We see the brain formed directly from the circulating fluid—the maternal blood. It continues to grow only as it continues to receive nourishment from the circulatory medium. And thus it is with the whole body: it is wholly composed from the circulating fluid.

This known anatomical fact leaves no room for anything immaterial or immortal. But still the immaterialist denies that thought is the product of a material organism, and that matter is that from which it is manufactured.

If blood has nothing to do with the evolution of thought, why does the heart send such a liberal supply of blood to the brain, when we are actively engaged in meditation? Does it not send it there for the same purpose that it is sent to other parts of the body when they are brought into exercise?

Concerning life in its early stages, one question may be asked which no one can answer from the present standpoint of physiological science, viz. What causes the first motion of life. Why is it that when matter in certain conditions is placed in contact with other matter, that life results? This is one of God's deep secrets, that man's wisdom has not yet fathomed, if it ever can. But this is no objection to materialism; for if in this natural immortality lies, then the plants and lower animals are as immortal as man: for the secret of life's origin is as great in the plant and the animal, as it is in mankind. Only in one way can immaterialists even apparently turn this to their account; that is by adopting, as well, from heathen antiquity the complement of immortal-soul-ism, the transmigration of the soul. But they do not profess to advocate this latter portion of heathen belief, although for consistency's sake in their own statements it would be better for them to do so.

Thus we see science in anatomy, physiology, chemistry and phrenology is decidedly in favor of materialism: in fact it proves nothing else. Whence then have immaterialists their boasted scientific proof of the soul's immaterial immortality? Let us turn to some of their works, which, oddly enough, when the etymology of the word is taken into consideration, they term Mental Philosophies. Why are Mental philosophers opposed, as a majority, to materialism and phrenology? Let us answer by asking, Why did the philosophers of Galileo's day oppose his demonstrable axioms, and cling to Aristotle's fallacies?

[illegible]: for what do most authors write? 'Popularity and money' sounds harsh, yet it is truth. To gain popularity and to obtain a large sale of books one must consult popular opinions and popular wishes. If it is popular to write in favor of immaterialism, one must follow blindly who would gain popularity. If people buy works written in defence of immaterialism; if teachers prefer them in their classes, one must write works of this stamp, if he wishes for money.

These charges may seem harsh; yet they are based upon a review of their arguments, in which one cannot fail to be impressed that they really believe contrary to their professed belief, and that they sold themselves with their books when they wrote in favor of immaterialism.

Let us glance at one of their strong proofs of the soul's immateriality, and consequnent immortality. Hickok's Science of the Mind, makes three assertions concreing the spiritual part of man. He calls the mind "wholly spiritual." (p. 20.) Speaks of the "inner spirit." (p. 22.) And on p. 27 he says: "Man holds within himself a combination of elements from the material, animal, and spiritual worlds." How does he prove these bare assertions—his whole argument for the immateriality of the soul? By such confessions as the following: On p. 23 he utters the equivalent of this language: That man's spirituality is not discernible through our knowledge of material and animal existence. Yet on the preceeding page he acknowledges that we know of nothing concerning man except what we know of material and animal existence, since immaterialists are forced to apply material names to immaterial substances. Then if we cannot come to a comprehension of man's immateriality through the medium of our knowledge of material and animal existence—and we have no other knowledge—can we comprehend the immateriality of man at all? Certainly not!

Then have we any reason to say that man has an immaterial nature? Most assuredly we have not.

Upon p. 27 he says, that the material element is really no part of man; yet he refutes this statement on p. 32, where he acknowledges the effects of climate, soil and food uponman's intellectual powers. He shows this effect by noticing the facial angle of the different races of mankind. Thus, for instance, the facial angle of the Caucasian race is 90 degrees: of the Mongolian it is 80 degrees: of the Nigritian 70 degrees, etc.

Again does he refute his statement "that the material element is really no part of man" by his remarks upon the connection of mind and body. On p. 44 he says: Differences of bodily organization make corresponding modifications of mental development." "The subordinate systems of the body are the nervous, muscular and the digestive organs.... They throw their influence upon mental actions so as to secure permanent traits and habits of human life." (p. 46.) "The mind grows with the body." (p. 54.) "The sound mind must have a sound body." (p. 56.)

This is the proof which Prof. Hickok adduces to prove his statement that man's soul is immaterial and therefore capable of conscious existence without the body.

Does the materialist claim more than he concedes in the last few quotations? Does he not in these concessions out argue himself, and make a fair and square argument for materialism?

Should we leave his work for one more recent—Prof. Upham's Mental Philosophy, for instance, we would find more statements, and fewer arguments—if that were possible. He lets loose his rhetoric for a considerable space in the attempt to prove the immateriality of the soul by empty statements. He in doing this places his own imaginations and fancies in opposition to man's knowledge and God's revelation.

In closing his so called arguments, he essays to quote Scripture to support his views. After asserting that the proof of the soul's immateriality and natural immortality can be found in numerous passages of the Bible, he quotes the following, as the strongest, we suppose: "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Begging pardon for differing from the sage upon the meaning of this passage, we fail to see that it militates in the least against materialism: In fact, it substantiates it. Nor do we see in this the conclusive proof of immaterialism. If the Professor had not been in such haste to close his Bible, but had read on to the end of the verse, he would have never quoted this passage at all as a proof of immaterialism. Hear it: "But rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Both soul and body are destroyed. Does this prove immaterialism, which sends the soul only to hell? "Soul" and "body" are destroyed. How can this be, Professor, if the soul is immaterial and immortal?

But destroy does not mean destroy, you say. "Into" did n't mean "into," in the sermon upon which the Dutchman lately commented so eloquently, while he rejoiced, exceedingly that "he vas dere dat night."

Thus mental science, in spite of its expounders, comes forward with testimony in favor of materialism. By its utter poverty of facts to show the immateriality of the soul and by its abundance of plain every-day truths to show the connection of mind and body, and the dependence of the former upon the latter for life and growth, it aids in sustaining the materialist's position. To those who persist in believing that mind can exist without matter, let us say that this belief lacks one very essential thing: that is, any record of such existence.

Thus we have shown Science to be part of the broad foundation of the materialist's belief. We do not claim to prove by Science, beyond a possibility of being mistaken, that materialism is true. This would be claiming infallibility for man's wisdom in the face of the old maxim, "To err is human." But we do claim to prove that the soul of man is material, so far as science proves anything.

For proof undeniable and unmistakable we must turn to God's word. This never has been known to contradict its complement, science, when rightly interpreted. Scripture is but the index to science, giving us its truths in small compass. If we would read more fully upon any subject we must turn to the detailed account, as we find it in science. Yet, whenever through the misinterpretation of the one or wrong conclusions from the other, Scripture and science seem to clash, Scripture, as God's word, infallible, must be listened to, and science the result of man's investigations, corrected and reconciled with it.

The great mistake of Christians in the past has been that of branding science as a liar—equivalent to censuring the all-wise Creator for having bestowed upon man his intellectual faculties.

The heathneish interpretation of the Scriptures placed upon it by immaterialists, causing the word of God to apparently flaunt the lie in the face of plain self-evident axioms of science and reason, has made more infidels than did ever the writings of Paine or Voltaire. Men possessing large reflective faculties can be satisfied only by that which accords with knowledge and common sense; and when science and reason say man is wholly a material being, and, accepting the immaterialist's interpretation of Scripture, the Bible says he is not, then many are led to believe science with her demonstrations, and disbelieve immaterialism, with its things supposed, guessed at or taken for granted. And, disbelieving immaterialism, and being without the true light, they are led to look upon the Bible as anything but the work of an all-wise Being.

Christians are in a measure awaking to this mistake of setting the Bible at varience with science by faulty interpretation on the one hand, and baseless conclusions on the other. And when many yield their great error and take in its stead the great truth, then will infidelity be struck a blow that will shake it to its very center, by having one of its supposed bassal truths recognized by Christians, as well as by the Bible. Then will science truly be "the hand-maid of religion." Then would the leading minds of the world be Christians, instead of real or practical infidels, or cold conservatives.

THE PRAYER-CURE.

Quite possibly our readers have never heard of the institution of which we are about to speak, though the mode of treatment is quite ancient. The water-cure has its numerous establishments in all parts of the world. The movement-cure has also become famous in many countries. There is also in Europe at least one institution where the patients take the delightful prescriptions of the grape-cure. The original prescription may be found in a small book written in Greek and published eighteen hundred years since, by an author named James, who said: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with the oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." This was practiced upon, with great success, for no one knows how many years. It gradually fell out of use, but why, the historians have never been able to tell us. Some have thought it was because the faith unneccessarily failed, and others have insisted that it was because the foundations were removed on which the faith had rested.

Be that as it may, there is now in Switzerland, on the banks of Lake Zurich, in the little village of Mannedorf, an institution for the healing of the sick on this ancient Christian plan. Like other things involving unaccustomed methods and results, it grew rather than was made. A young woman, named Dorothea Truesdel, established it, not, as it were, of set purpose, but through singular and gradual leadings of divine providence. Her mother was a pious woman of remarkable faith, and had successfully encountered all life's trials and difficulties, including sickness among the children, by resort to simple prayer. Years after the mother's death, when Dorothea was thirty-seven years of age, living a very humble life and supporting herself by making artificial flowers, several of the girls whom she employed became dangerously ill. Medical help gave no relief, and then death appearing imminent, she suddenly bethought her of the words of James, and as the doctors acknowledged that they could do no more, she determined to carry the case, as of old, to Jesus. She did so, and they all recovered. The report of the fact spread, and other sick persons came to her, or sent for her, especially during a kind of epidemic which broke out, and the results were often very striking. She was solicited to set up an institution to which the sick might resort for this treatment, but for a time declined so to do, preferring to continue in her original calling, particularly as she was of a timid, modest disposition. But so many patients thronged her doors, that she was compelled to take them in, if only from compassion, as often they were very poor and came from a distance. When her house overflowed, she bought a second, and then a third, and her days were spent in superintendence of the patients and in prayer. The patients were from Switzerland, Germany, France and even Great Britain. Over a hundred have been there at one time!

The process in use was simple and spiritual. A short Bible service was held for all, three times a day, besides exercises with individuals, it being the first aim to impress the heart, and to secure a genuine faith in Christ. Conversions were sought and gained in great numbers. Prayer was made for each, hands were laid on them, and they were anointed with oil. No means were used. No medicine was given. No stress was laid on the anointing or the laying of hands; they were used only because mentioned by James. No assurance was held out of an infallible or of an immediate cure. It was not taught that death was needless, or that all disease might be removed; but only that while God still kept us under sentence of bodily death, and had his use for illness, he was pleased very frequently to heal the diseased simply in answer to prayer, and that in this matter the spiritual condition often had much to do, for various reasons, with the fact and rapidity of the recovery.

But how do we know that the alleged facts occurred? We might refer to the investigations and reports made by physicians, clergymen and other travelers, who visited the place, including such names as Professor Thojuck and Bishop Kapff; but a still better attestation has been offered. The neighboring physicians became incensed, an dbrought Miss Trudel before the civil court for violating the law respecting the practice of medicine without a license. She was condemned to pay a fine of twenty dollars and the costs. An appeal was taken from court to court until the highest tribunal reversed the decision, in 1861, and ordered that she should not be hindered in her good work. On the trial it was proved that the poor were lodged, boarded and nursed without pay, and the rich for just enough to cover the expenses of their board; that the complaining physicians had made no investigations whatever into the facts; that she used no medicines, and professed to know nothing about diseases, but to rely wholly on the power of Christ to heal the sick, secured by earnest prayer. Testimonials from the most eminent men in Switzerland and Germany were produced in her favor. Her whole life and history were investigated, and not a shadow lay upon her character; all testified to her piety and self denying benevolence. No evil effect could be proved in the case of a single patient, while hundreds of remarkable cures were attested, including cases of consumption, cancer, lameness, epilepsy, insanity, and fearful injuries pronounced hopeless by the physicians. One of the leading physicians of Wurtemburg testified to the cure of a hopeless patient of his own, and another said he remained there six weeks, and saw all kinds of sickness healed. At the last, the lawyer for the plaintiffs admitted the truth of all that was claimed, but insisted that some restraint should be laid on the crowding of so many sick persons to one place! Miss Trudel died Sept. 6, 1862, but the institution continues under the charge of Mr. Samuel Zeller, the brother-in-law of Bishop Gobat, of Jerusalem, with similar results.

We have gathered these facts from a little book published in England, entitled "Dorothea Trudel; or, The Prayer of Faith." Very different conclusions will be drawn by different persons from these statements. Some will attribute the cures to the oil, others to the nursing, others to the mesmerism of laying on the hands, and others to the effect through the imagination on the nervous system of the patients. Not a few Christians, however, will believe that, without denying the incidental benefit of such natural causes, there has been the co-working of a higher power, which ought more frequently to be invoked. We do not regard prayer as intended, in this or any other class of cases, to supersede appropriate human science, skill and labor; but it may operate coincidently, and may secure results which otherwise would be unattainable. We draw attention to the facts recorded above as worthy of study. They do not stand alone. Others precisely parallel, and bordering on the miraculous, are attested in the German village of Motflingen, in the heart of the Black Forest, under the labors of the Lutheran Pastor Blumhardt. How fervent is the piety with which they are connected may be learned from this incident: A rationalistic clergyman asked Miss Trudel how these wonders were done, and she answered, "Nothing is done by us; all these marvels in bodies and souls are wrought by the strength of Christ's blood." "I do not believe in the blood of Jesus," was his reply. "Oh!" responded she, "it would be a poor thing for me to say only that I believe in the blood: no, it is my element, and it is only because Christ has become an offering for my sins by the sacrifice of his body and blood, that I can stand here and perform all these wonders."—Advance.

A MISTAKE CORRECTED.

Where is the evidence that the Sabbath was set apart for man at creation, or that, after it was set apart, those for whom it was set apart, were at liberty to observe it or not as they chose?

It seems to me that it is a mistake committed both by first-day and seventh-day believers, to assume, without proof, that the Sabbath was instituted at creation; and to my mind with present light, it is the pivot upon which turns the observances of the seventh-day. For if it be true, that the Sabbath was instituted and made binding upon the human family, by the expression—"God blessed the seventh-day and sanctified it" (Gen. 2: 3), it seems to me that those believing it may with propriety ask for the scripture testimony to prove that it was ever changed to the first-day. But does Gen. 2: 3 say anything about sanctifying or setting apart a sabbath for man? Not a word. God blessed, not every seventh day, but the seventh day (of creation), because that in IT he, not man, had rested from all his work.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 18, 1871.

EDITOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

There are many calls for labor, and I can supply but few of them. If I could multiply myself many fold, I should still have work for every hour. But as I can be in only one place at a time, I choose to go among those who seem the most needy, and least able to procure and sustain preachers of the word.

Those who wish my labors during the coming season will please give early notice, that I may arrange my work to the best advantage. Conferences, Quarterly, or other, who request my services, will please make appointments so as not to conflict with each other in point of time.

PRESENT APPOINTMENTS.

Girard, Kas, July 15 and 16. This meeting will be held in the grove near Br. Joseph Freed's residence, eight miles from the city of Girard. There will be teams to convey those who come by the Fort Scott Railroad, if they will write to Eld. Munson, at Girard. Let there be a general attendance.

Iola, " July 21, over the 23d.

Topeka, or Middle Creek, July 25 to 30, as Brn. Linville and Corey may arrange.

After this I shall still have a few days to spare for labor in that region. Friends desiring my services may write at once to Columbus, Iola, or Topeka, Kas., or to Buchanan, Mich.

August and September appointments will be duly announced. J. V. H.

Mr. Spurgeon has no more mercy on those who sprinkle their talk with Latin and Greek than they have on their listeners:

> As a general rule, it may be observed that those who know the least Greek are sure to air their rags of learning in the pulpit; they miss no chance of saying, "The Greek is so and so." It makes a man an inch and a half taller by foot-meter if he everlastingly lets fall bits of Greek and Hebrew, and even tells the tense of the verb, and the case of the noun, as I have known some to do. The whole process of interpretation is to be carried on in your study; you are not to show your congregation the process, but to give them the result, like a good cook, who would never think of bringing up dishes, and pans, and rolling pin, and spice box into the dining hall, but without ostentation, sends up the feast.

WE have to announce another convert to a theory of the future punishment we mentioned some time ago, advocated by the Christian Proclamation. This time it is used by a Mormon Elder. He says:

> The punishment of the wicked shall be the destruction of their bodies by the brightness of his glory, and their spirits be put away from the presence of God.

—It is as if one should put an oyster in the fire, that should burn off its shell, but leave the oyster himself, tormented, but otherwise unharmed. We wonder if the Mormon Bible reads—The body that sinneth, it shall die! Most Bibles read—The soul that sinneth, it shall die.

> In all ages man has by a sort of lofty instinct asserted his essential superiority over the brute creation. He has felt the separation to be wide, the difference to be radical; he has cherished the hope of immortality. Christianity confirms and intensifies this primrary belief, and teaches that the possession of an immortal soul is man's proud distinction from the beasts that perish.

—So writes a correspondent of the Christian Union. He is very safe in saying that Christianity teaches the immortality of the soul: the Bible does not. Instead of this, it says that the impious, or all that reject God are like the beasts, mortal and perishable. "Man being in honor abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish." "Man that is honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." If the people read the Scriptures more, and more closely, they would have clearer ideas in matters of doctrine than they now possess.

R. T. CONANT says in the Interior, that "judging from the present state of things," he would "say without question, that within half a century the whole world will be Christian or atheist. The Christian Secretary allows that in some respects atheism has "the 'vantage ground for the coming conflict," and admits that "a crisis is coming;" but appears to be utterly in the dark as to what that crisis is. This world will never be wholly infidel or Christian. God will always have a people, even though they be but few in numbers. The crisis that is approaching is the culmination of probation. The advent of Jesus will usher in the judgment, and then, when the wicked are destroyed, and the last trace of sin wiped off the universe, then we shall see a world wholly Christian. For "the inhabitants shall be all righteous." AMEN. May the glorious era come quickly.

NOWHERE is immaterialism more inconsistent than in its poetry. Now 'Death is the Prince of Peace', and 'the gate to endless joy;' and anon he is 'a grim monster,' with 'icy grasp,' hurrying his victims to 'the cold grave,' Now there is no real death, but only seeming; it is only

The wrench that sets us free
From dungeon chains, to breathe the air
Of boundless liberty.

But soon we are led sobbing to the grave's mouth as if it contained all our interest in the dead. The Bible betrays no such inconsistency in speaking of death. From Genesis to Revelation it is a calamity, an enemy—save to that small class who being without hope of any further good in this world, naturally desire its unconscious condition.

We wish that our immaterialist friends might decide this question one way or the other: and if death is a friend, let it be so understood, and always thus represented. And on the other hand, if Paul was right, and death is an enemy, let not even 'poetic license' be allowed to transform the fell foe into a loving usher to the city of God. Truth is better than fiction, whether in poetry or prose.

WITH no little 'righteous indignation,' the Independent says:

> The Banner of Light has the first poem received as yet from the spirit of Alice Cary. Less poetic than of yore, she maunders as follows:
> I will weave for you a crown of flowers,
> Fresh gathered from Heaven's Eden bowers,
> And lead you forth in Nature's realm,
> To learn of God the great I Am.
> I have come again, but not to say
> To your doubts, 'Forever pass away,' etc., etc.

—These lines bear no more resemblance to Miss Cary's delicately finished style, than does the ring of a pewter-platter to that of a silver bell. If Spiritism is wise, it will cease publishing communications from eminent persons. If the spirits in such cases are what they profess to be, the consequences of their translation to the spheres, as revealed in its effect upon the intellect, is decidedly discouraging to those who hope for progress in the immaterial state. All their performances fall decidedly below their efforts while still in the flesh.

MR. TOWNE is an infidel and publishes an occasional magazine. In the July number he says:

> We know no reason for assuming that Jesus was a great man. On the contrary, we are firmly of the opinion, on grounds both of scholarship and of faith, that Jesus was strictly and merely a common man, that the Christian religion no more depends on him than on any other of its historical accidents. His person was that of a peasant of a simple race; his character was youthful and feminine, with one dark Galilean vein; his religious education was hardly good, and other education he was destitute of; his life was that of an itinerant worker and teacher of a common enough sort; his leading gift was the still unexplained but not uncommon power of acting on certain minds, and sometimes on physical conditions which existing knowledge of clairvoyance but partly enables us to understand.

—We think there is every reason in the world for believing that, not only was Jesus a great man, but he was, also, what he asserted himself to be—the Son of God. Our reason for this faith is, his personal work and the results that have flown from it. We think our readers will be convinced as they peruse Mr. Towne's remarks, that there is no credulity like the credulity of infidelity.

THE RESURRECTION.

The attacks of Tilton and Frothingham, and (reported) looseness of Beecher's views, are drawing unusual attention to this subject, and the immaterialist press are awaking to the defense of the dogma they have so greatly ignored. We can imagine some of their readers saying, after perusing a vigorous vindication of the doctrine—"That sounds very well; but if we go to the presence of God, with vastly enhanced powers, to enter upon "fullness of joy," immediately at death, I can't see that the resurrection is of very much moment any way. Indeed, why should I, after enjoying untold ages of spirit bliss, come back here to be shut up in a body again? Really there is something mysterious about this matter. I don't understand it!" And we leave the puzzled immaterialist there, because we have no means of getting at him, to show him the simple truth—so clear and plain that he has overlooked it in his Bible on account of its very simplicity.

> This evidence of the fall of the soul when it leaves Christian truth, should make every one beware how he abandons what seems a jot or tittle of that truth. There is no jot or tittle. Every particle is of infinite value. The resurrection of our body denied, down goes the resurrection of the body of Christ, down goes the conscious, independent life of the spirit, down goes all real immortality. Nor is it true that chemistry disproves the resurrection of the body. So far from it, it proves the possibility of that resurrection as it never was seen before. The fact of it God reserves for his own annunciation in his Word, a fact that no honest reader of the Bible can deny, if he turns his eyes from the apparent state of the body after death, and fastens them on the letter of the Bible alone.
> But Chemistry shows that, however subtle, diffused, incomprehensible, seemingly, is any body desolved by its process, that body can be easily and instantly regathered, by a slight, and, to the uninitiated, invisible act. Drop silver into aqua fortis, and it disappears. Put a bit of salt into the liquid, and back comes the silver. Dilute that acid after the silver is absorbed, so that it becomes almost imperceptible as an acid, and transform it into invisible gas, still the silver is there, and refined chemical tests can bring it back.
> The laboratory proves the two great facts essential to the resurrection, the indestructibility of matter, and the possibility of recovering a dissolved, and dissipated, and invisible form of matter, despite all the processes of nature through which it has passed. What matters it to the chemist if the substance he is operating upon does run through every sort of impalpable essence, he chases it in all its Protean disguises, and never loses sight of it, how much soever it disguises itself. Like Longfellow's Popokeewis, it becomes bird or beast, fish or shrub, all in vain. Hiawatha detects him under his mask, and drives him out of every disguise, and ultimately compels him to assume his own shape. So can God call together his own elect from the four winds of heaven. He is the Chemist and Creator. He knows where every particle hides itself. He has himself sent every particle into that hiding place. He knows what is necessary to the resurrection-body, and where it is. If he choose to send it before that time on other errands through sea or air, through flower or beast, it no more unfits it for its primal and ultimate place, than travel unfits a man for his work at home. We go through millions of things without affecting them, or being affected by them. So may our body apart from its soul. So may the soul apart from the body.
> We have referred to this sermon because it is printed in the ablest, and most popular secular paper (so-called) in New England, and because it well represents the outcome of anti-orthodox thought when it denies the resurrection of the human body. No resurrection, no conscious immortality. As he truly says:—
> "There is a profound skepticism on this subject in our modern society. Of scientific men, some openly avow unbelief in the future life; some decline to say anything about it, as not coming within their province, and some accept without question the dogma of the Church which claims a revelation from God, and the miraculous energy of the Holy Ghost to quicken its own dead. Worldly men, whether of business or pleasure, are thinking of other things, and give the matter little attention. Their faculty of apprehension acts feebly on these sublimated themes, and the great anticipation fades away from their minds. A few hardy philosophers deny immortality to the common herd, who can never deserve it nor use it, having appreciated this life, may advance a respectable title to another."
> The only cure for this skepticism is the word of God. Happy those scientific men, and all other men and women who "accept without question the dogma of the church, which claims a revelation from God, and the miraculous energy of the Holy Ghost to quicken its own dead." That Wisdom shall be justified of its children. They will yet show all the Emersonian clique who guarantee immortality to the few, and the Frothingham sort, who refuse to affirm it of any, that their calm confidence in the promise of God is as scientific as it is Scriptural, as philosophical as it is theological. Their bodies, reanimated from the dust, shall be again, as in their birth made one with the soul. The future mystery is no greater than the former—the birth from the grave than the birth from the womb. Nay, not so great, for it is far less mysterious to refashion a dislocated machine than to first fashion it, to re create than to create.
> Let no Christian tremble for the Christian doctrine of the resurrection. Despite doubters and deniers, despite some timid ministers, who, half captured by the enemy because of their fears, hear the Word of Christ for your comfort and your strength, "Thy brother shall rise again." As you stand over the couch where they sleep, remember that your care and affection are not a folly of credulity. "The Lord hath risen from the dead, and is become the first fruits of them that slept."
> "He only with returning footsteps breaks
> The eternal calm with which the grave is bound;
> Among the sleeping dead alone he wakes,
> Blessing with outstretched hands the host around."
> With that benediction is the promise. Since he arose, "even so those that sleep in Jesus bring with him," be not doubtful or dismayed. Your Lord whom you seek shall suddenly come to his temple. They that are awake shall not prevent them that are asleep. But all who love his appearing shall come forth unto life, and be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so be ever with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words.

—As we read we are tempted to comment upon some of the inconsistencies in the above extract—the faults in the main vein of pure silver. How can a naturally immaterial spirit, a distinct entity, depend for existence upon its temporary house? If it can live without it five millenniums why not indefinitely? How can our dead sleep in the grave, and yet be conscious in heaven at the same time? But we leave our readers to select the good and cast the bad away. An immaterialist who believes in the resurrection cannot have a consistent faith.

ETERNAL DEATH.

"That eternal death which God threatens, is not annihilation, but an abiding sensible punishment, in misery. . . . . And this misery is without end."

Death, according to this Calvinistic theologian, is life! And eternal death is eternal life in torment!

This definition of the word death is the ground on which the advocates of eternal torment base their dogma. They can hardly say—"How firm a foundation," is laid for their faith. A theory that reverses the ordinary sense of language should certainly be regarded with suspicion.

BRAIN AND INTELLECT.

In speaking of the fact that we find large brains among the most barbarous of savage nations, Mr. Alfred Russell Wallace remarks:

These facts might make us doubt whether the size of the brain is in any direct way an index of mental power, had we not the most conclusive evidence that it is so, in the fact that, whenever an adult European has a skull less than nineteen inches in circumference, or has less than sixty-five cubic inches oft brain, he is invariably idiotic. When we join with this the equally undisputed fact, that great men—those who combine acute perception with great reflective power, strong passions, and general energy of character, such as Napoleon, Cuvier and O'Connell, have always heads far above the average size, we must feel satisfied that volume of brain is one, and perhaps the most important measure of intellect.

But if the brain is the organ of intellect, why are the savages with great brains still unintellectual? In the words of Mr. Wallace—"The idea is suggested of a surplusage of power; an instrument beyond the needs of its possessor." And he adds—"We may fairly infer that the savage possesses a brain capable, if cultivated and developed, of performing work of a kind and degree far beyond what he ever requires it to do." He is like one in possession of a certain amount of capital, but who never employs nearly all of it to carry on his business.

The facts of physiology are all favorable to materialism. Size and quality of brain are, together, the measure of intellectual power; and to this rule there are no exceptions.

DR. CUMMING.

An American in England thus writes to Zion's Herald concerning this great teacher and preacher:

> We found his dingy little church a perfect contrast with the one we had just left [Spurgeon's], being old and dark, and situated on a narrow lane. The audience-room was about fifty feet deep, and twice or three times as wide. This brought the speaker to about an equal distance from the three sides of the building; while a broad gallery, a half octagon, covered nearly the whole house. There was no organ or other instrument of music, a few persons in front of the desk leading the singing, in which, as is the case everywhere here, the whole congregation joined. We were a little late, and he was reading the third chapter of Genesis when we entered. At the end of the chapter he commenced an exposition of the lesson which was so elaborate and able that we judged from some remarks that he was giving a series of discourses on the chapters of Genesis, and had reached the third. After discussing the fall of man for half an hour we supposed he was about to conclude the service. A hymn was sung, prayer was offered, and instead of the benediction he deliberately took up a small Bible, announced a text, and proceeded to deliver a set sermon on the evidences of Christianity, which seemed one of a series to fortify business men to meet the infidelity of the day, and especially to defend the inspiration of the Scriptures. To us the exposition was by far the most attractive and impressive. As nearly all English and Scotch preachers do, he spoke entirely without notes. From his letter to the Œcumenical Council, and his repeated thrusts at Popery, as well as from his well known views in reference to the Millennium, we expected to see a strong, earnest Boanerges, ready to fight for the truth to the bitter end. But we found him the opposite of all we have pictured him. A man of slight form, with most gentle manners and a most devout spirit, and a voice soft and melodious. We were constantly reminded of our lamented Bp. Thomson. I have never heard any man so much resembling either, as these two men resembled each other. I have heard no man in England to be compared with Dr Cumming. The English pulpit is usually formal and unimpressive, and it is surprising what common places are doled out from Sabbath to Sabbath in large churches and to congregations of intelligence and influence. One is often reminded of the Quaker meeting w[illegible] all sat in silence for a long tim[illegible]ally a stout, plethoric old lady arose and solemnly said, "O, my leanness! my leanness!" and resumed her seat. If the majority of preachers here do not utter the same words, there are but few Americans who fail to think how applicable they are, in reference to English preaching.

SUPERIORITY OF AMERICAN EDITION OF SMITH'S UNABRIDGED.—Valuable as is the English work, its value is to us greatly enhanced in the American edition. To get some idea of the extent of the improvements introduced, I have examined the first number, containing 112 pages (one thirteenth of the whole work), and find in it thirteen new articles, forty-two editorial editions to former articles, and forty-one foot-notes, not to mention a great number of etymological, philological, and critical additions and corrections, consisting of a few words each, which are found in almost every article. So great an advance has thus been made upon the accuracy and practical usefulness of the work, that this edition must eventually supercede the other for both countries: and so thoroughly is the revision being performed that it seems hardly possible that any repetition of it will be called for in this generation. As it is, to one whose library is scanty this work will furnish, in the best and latest form, all that is practically serviceable in every work designed to aid in the interpretation of the Work, together with a complete Bible Dictionary, and interpretation of proper names of Scripture.—E. C. M., in the Christian Times and Witness, Chicago.

TRUTH IN SMALL DOSES.

John Wesley in speaking of men says—"Such is man with regard to his corporeal part as he came out of the hands of his Maker. But since he sinned he is not only dust, but mortal corruptible dust. And by sad experience we find that this corruptible body presses down the soul. It very frequently hinders the soul in its operations and at best serves it very imperfectly; yet the soul cannot dispense with its service, imperfect as it is; for a disembodied spirit cannot form one thought but by the mediation of its bodily organs. For thinking is not as many suppose the act of a pure spirit: but the act of a spirit connected with a body and playing upon a set of material keys. It cannot possibly therefore make any better music than the nature and state of its instruments allow it. Hence every disorder of the body especially of the parts more immediately subservient to thinking, lay an almost insuperable bar in the way of its thinking justly." (Wesley's Sermons, Vol. 2, p. 34.)

Had Wesley uttered no sentiments averse to these, he might well have been called a "soul-sleeper." If this "mortal corruptible dust presses down the "soul," and hinders its operations and cannot dispense with its service," because "it cannot form one thought but by the mediation of its bodily organs," then it would, at the death of the body, be dead, or at least asleep and entirely inactive. It acts or plays upon the body as the man plays upon the instrument. If the instrument is good the music will be good, if the instrument is poor the music will be poor: and if the instrument is utterly disorganized there can be no music at all—no thinking, no action, no music and no life!

A wonderful thing truly, is such a soul, such an entity, such a man! But such a man must be immortal because when organized it can think and act although "imperfectly!" Such is the logic of immaterialism. Everything is made to bend to that one idea—the immortal soul.

In his sermon on Ps. 8: 4—"What is man that thou art mindful of him," he says: "It is natural to make the same reflection and to entertain the same fear. How may we prevent this uneasy reflection—cure this fear. First by considering what David does not appear to have taken into his account, namely that the body is not the man. The man is not only a house of clay but an immortal spirit, a spirit made in the image of God, an incorruptible picture of the God of glory, a spirit of infinitely more value than the whole earth."

It is true David did not "take into account" an immortal spirit in man, for no such spirit exists. And why is it that Christian men and ministers who are seeking for truth and light cannot get a little nearer the truth than many of them do? John Wesley, good a man as he was, and as much truth as he preached, yet failed in one point, and a very important one too, that is, harmonizing the scriptures. He, like nearly all to-day who believe in the soul's immortality, hardly preached two discourses that harmonize the one with the other. One Elder I heard, in trying to prove man immortal crossed his own track three times in one sermon. But these valiant sustainers of Plato, "would stand in defense of John Wesley's character." Well they may; but would it not be wise for them first to harmonize themselves with John Wesley, and then John Wesley with himself?

If the character of a man is of more value than the character of God, of the Bible, then defend him. Well may we say "what is man that thou art mindful of him." It is better to listen to God. "Put not your trust in princes nor in the son of man in whom there is no hope. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." John Wesley was a man, and he is dead. We quote him as a man, as a good man, but imperfect. We quote the Bible as the word of God "who only hath immortality," whose "word is yea and amen to his glory;" whose "testimony is sure, is perfect," "is right" "is pure," "is true and righteous altogether." "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." "By patient continuence in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality." "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Every one that who seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." "All that are are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth." "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God and they that hear shall live." "Thy dead men shall live." "My flesh also shall rest in hope." "Like sleep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them." "But God shall redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ps. 146: 4; 1 Tim. 6: 16; Ps. 19: 7, 9; Prov. 30: 5; Rom. 2: 7; John 3: 16; John 6: 40; John 5: 25, 28; Ps. 96: 19; 16: 19; 49: 14, 15; Ezk. 18: 4) S. K. NO FAMILY ALTAR.

Were it possible for the great Apostle to the Gentiles to now traverse our borders, that he might do good to the children of men, he would find in his journeyings amongst us in the families of many professed Christians, not only one, as he did in the Athenian midst, but the inscription written upon many hearth-stones, No Family Altar! And it is presumed his wonder and astonishment at such a strange anomaly in the history of such a family, would be much greater than when he stood and gazed at their heathen inscription—"To the unknown God!" And as he beheld them, although they "ignorantly worshiped," he called their services "devotion," and was doubtlessly impressed with their spirit of consistency, their zeal and fidelity to the only religion that had hitherto opened to their benighted understanding. And in his love and tender regard for precious souls, he attempted to guide their minds to the only true and proper source of religious worship.

And now may not an humble suggestion be made that will meet with some serious attention, as the eyes of some delinquent brother or sister may trace these lines of affection, written for the purpose and with the fond hope of elevating higher our standard of family piety, of thinking about a greater degree of appropriate zeal and devotion in the home circle of Christians. Who does not know that to be deficient in our family religion will render all other services more or less ineffectual, as being without life or corresponding piety. The deleterious influence of such a mistaken course, not only upon such families themselves, but upon the surrounding community in which they live, is beyond the power of computation, and will be found among the unfinished business of time and sense when Jesus comes to reckon with his servants "to know how much every man has gained by trading."

Can we while living in the neglect of any known duty, appear what we profess to be, as beings living in expectation of the glory soon to be revealed, and bearing visibly to every eye the stamp of immortality upon our character? Do we look like the competitors for a crown of glory, or warriors fighting for victory and eternal life? Does our religion enable us to make daily sacrifices, to deny ourselves, to take up every cross, that we may thus prove ourselves the disciples of meek and lowly Jesus? Can we be in earnest, if these questions must be answered in the negative? Oh! we need more high-toned spirituality, more heavenly aspiration, a greater yearning after a higher and holier state of existence, a constant and living faith that takes hold upon the word of God, and makes it the only man of our counsel, our undeviating rule for our practice in life. How shall we prove to the careless world around us that we have choosen the Christian heritage, if we be not able first to prove it to our families? For we must surely know that there, and there alone, will shine forth the richest and most luxurious growth of our spiritual profession. Then let none persuade themselves, however honest and well meaning in their intentions they may be, that they can neglect with impunity to cultivate an habitual and consistent course of family devotion. What sight more lovely upon earth, than to behold a family thus united around the loved hearth-stone of their own home, sending forth their incense of morning and evening prayers and praise to their Benefactor and Preserver. Oh! we have felt, in witnessing such a scene, that it was all brightness, all glory; a Goshen in the midst of Egyptian darkness, a verdant oasis in the moral gloom of our native earth. We would not pretend to say that such a course of holy living is attainable without much labor, much fixedness of purpose, and inflexible decision of character! yea, more; be assured that it will take the habitual and continued watchful care of a life-time, without any release or mitigation from its plain and arduous duties, to come up to full stature in the requirements of the gospel.

A few hasty expressions, or a few broken thoughts, poured out without solemnity or force; or perhaps a short prayer, learned by heart and repeated night and morning, will not be sufficient to constitute a life of holiness, or bring about a vigorous growth of the fruits of the Spirit, but just the opposite will be the result of such a cold half-hearted and unwarrantable course. Let Christians, then, arise and shine, especially those who are looking for their coming Lord to set up his glorious kingdom here upon the "new earth." Let them hold out the torch-light of "pure and undefiled religion;" wear the diadem of devotion and practical piety in their families, that the sojourner with them or the passer-by, in beholding the joy and steadfastness of their faith, may say of a truth, how beautifully impressive, how gloriously attractive, the religion of the blessed Savior, as exhibited in a well regulated and habitually Christian family. Oh! then, shall not we as Advent Christians be particularly careful in the performance of all these pleasant and required duties, that when our Lord shall come and find us so doing, he may say, "blessed are those servants." MARY A. TIBBETS.

A CONVERSATION.

This conversation occurred between a minister of a popular sect, and a man of the world, whom we will designate by "O."

Eld. T. Have you got religion?

O. I have not, and do not expect to receive it by the spirit that is manifested by your party.

T. What are your reasons for thinking thus?

O. I do not think it a Christian spirit to use the personalities that have been used by your party, and that, to, in the dark. (The Elder had denounced me as unchristian, attacking my character, calling us all manner of names such as are familiar to all that suffer the same persecution.) I should be a little cautious how I judged others, for fear God would judge me in the same manner.

T. Did not Paul have the power of judging?

O. He did, but through the inspiration of God.

T. Has not man got the power of judging at the present time?

O. He has not in regard to judging as you do those people; for they, or Mr. D., has done more good in the short time he has been here than your people have for the years they have been with us. And he will continue to, as long as the present spirit is manifested by your party.

ANOTHER MINISTER. I believe them to be followers of the Adventists—not of God.

O. Who sent you to judge for the Almighty? He is able to judge for himself. (Second Elder left.) I want you to understand I am not a Mormon or a Spiritist, nor an Adventist. [Eld. T. had likened us to one of these unclean frog like spirits spoken of in the Apocalypse.] I am an Episcopalian in opinion and I believe you are actuated by prejudice and envy and not by a Christian spirit in your feelings toward these Adventists. And if you wish to do good, or to help men become religious, you must manifest a different spirit toward your fellow Christians. R. H. D.

HERE AND THERE.

Being in need of rest, friends determined that I should have the privilege of enjoying a respite from labors for a season, and so May 31st, bidding adieu to the loved ones at home I wended my way to Earl, Ill., where the Association and Illinois Conference were in session. Here I greeted many old friends. Their hearty welcome cheered my heart, and I thought, if the communion of saints 'mid the trials of earth be so sweet, what must it be when we all get home to dwell with God in the realms of the blest? The meeting was one of interest, and closed in triumph. Four put on the Lord Jesus in the holy ordinance of baptism. If brethren and sisters all could realize the importance as well as the blessedness of the gatherings where business is to be done for God, how few would be hired to stay away.

And right here let me say; I hope the friends of God and his cause in Iowa are making every preparation to attend the annual feast of tabernacles. Brethren let no small excuse keep you away. Ministers will be in from abroad to add to the interest of the meeting, and the Lord by his Holy Spirit will be with us to own and bless. Praise his name.

At Aurora I had the privilege of greeting and breaking the word of life to the faithful few, who are holding on to the truth, and trying to let their light shine. This is right. God's blessing will always attend the faithfulness of his children, be they few or many. I enjoyed my visit here much and pray that it may be renewed in the kingdom of God.

June 18th, I greeted for the first time the waiting ones in Chicago. Had a free time in dispensing the word of life. Their testimonies did me good. May the Lord's blessing rest upon the faithful labors of Br. Burr. My visit among them was a precious season to me, and I trust not without profit to them.

The church in Muskegon are in want of a shepherd. Where are the pastors to watch over the lambs of the flock? Surely the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

I want to visit before returning, (If it be agreeable to the friends) my old field of labor in Michigan, going as far East as Salem and as far south as Hilisdale. Let me hear from you. Direct to Muskegon, Mich., Box 581.

Memories sacred and hallowed cluster around some of these churches. Here Mr. Sober toiled in by gone days, till, like a faithful sentinel, he fell at his post. Here, too, for the first time I tried to expound the word of God. How little I then knew of what God had for me to do in his vineyard. But his grace has been sufficient, and I am looking forward with bright anticipations to the future.

TENT MEETING AT WORTH, MICH.

All things considered this meeting has been a blessed success: part of the time the nights were so cold we could not hold meetings in the tent; and during our meeting the Christian Church dedicated their chapel, and retained their best talent after the dedication to hold meetings, if possible to draw off from our interest. In fact the pastor and part of his church have opposed us most bitterly from the first. He stated publicly, he had pledged himself to put us down; if it could not be done in one way it would be in another. This reminds us of a certain father's advice to his son about to engage in business for himself. "John, said he; make money; honestly if you can, but make it."

In addition to this he sent us direct word they intended to challenge us for debate. We stated in reply if he did we should certainly meet him in the name of the Lord at a proper time. We received no challenge, and so went on with the meetings with fair and attentive audiences. Quite a number arose for prayers; some were blessed and others were aroused from a lukewarm state. We baptised two, and organized a church of thirteen members. About 400 were present at our last meeting. Nearly fifty gathered around the table of the Lord. Our communion was blessed with the Spirit of the Master, and all felt it was good to be there.

Brn. Mackie and Hicks were with me a part of the time to preach the word, and our brethren and sisters from Lexington societies helped us much by their warm testimonies. We go next to Port Sanilac. GEO. WRIGHT, JR.

DR. CUMMING ON RECENT EVENTS.

Alluding to recent events connected with the Church of Rome, Dr. Cumming stated that for several years previous to 1870, the Pope frequently assured those about him that a great catastrophe was drawing near that would change the political aspect and moral condition of the world. It would be a great international conflict in Europe, which would result in a Romish revival of incomparable splendor. It would be a thunderstorm poured down on the head of the wicked. It would be a war against German heretics by France. Heretic Germany would be crushed, and the Pope, armed with infallibility, would be ready to vindicate his claim to regulate and direct Europe. It was in this expectation that the priests in Paris impelled the Emperor, by the action of many influences, to hurry on the war—assured as they were of the success predicted by the Pope. It was unnecessary to state that the Pope's prophecies had been disappointed. But it might be asked, how could the Pope anticipate the war that actually took place? The answer was found in the confessional. There it was known and whispered and looked for with delight, and, inspired by what they learned there, the voices of the priests were loud and frequent on the streets of Paris, "a Berlin." The speaker showed that the Œcumenical Council, inaugurated to deify the Pope, had resulted in his destruction, and that a succession of catastrophes, amid material storms and portents, had descended on the Papacy, which it was not credulity but sound interpretation of events to allege were divine judgments on the Apostacy. Spain, Italy, Austria, and Batavia, were in succession rent from the Tiara. Great Protestant powers had come to the front, and the nations that now led the world were England, Germany, America, and Russia—powers at least hostile to Rome.—London Watchman.

MINISTERIAL MODESTY.

Baron Stow, of Boston, has made the point so sharp as to be readily felt.

Where is the religious paper that has not trumpeted just such a notice of a so-called revival of religion? Is not that text often practically interpreted thus? "So then he that planteth is everything." How striking and complete is the metaphor contained in these words: "Be ye clothed with humility."

Lovely garment! How becoming a Christian minister! Let us all "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" the following timely counsel as given in the Churchman.

At an ordination in New Hampshire, the Rev. Baron Stow, D. D., of Boston, preached the sermon from Acts 20: 19.

After stating some six or seven reasons for the cultivation of ministerial humility, his eighth was a seasonable admonition to some who make themselves injudiciously prominent, and boast, almost without knowing it, of how much they have accomplished in their fields of labor. He said, a humble spirit would not lead a minister to to report a revival thus: "I came to this place, and found things in a bad state; but I rallied the church, and established prayer-meetings, re-organized the Sunday-school; the congregation has greatly increased, the church is enlarged and become efficient; my labors have been very successful; I have baptised fifty, among whom are some of the most prominent citizens."

The language of humility would be something like this: I was permitted to enter this field, as successor of a pious minister, and gather in some of the fruits of his labors. The Lord has been pleased to revive his work; the prayers of his people have been answered. I have baptised fifty, many of whom spoke of impressions received from the faithful counsels of my predecessor. To God be all praise!"—Western Recorder.

The Advance says: "In the judgment of an increasing number, the Congregational and Presbyterian churches need a short, permanent service, which shall introduce the people into the exercises, by a part in the reading, in the prayers, and in the recitation of the Apostles' Creed, and shall make the united worship of the congregation as prominent as the preaching of the minister.

Last year the English churches of all denominations subscribed $3,296,896 to foreign missions, and about $4,000,000 to other societies represented in the May meetings. A grand sum, and it might seem as if the world were about to be converted immediately. But, on the other hand, Great Britain spends as much in two days on liquor as she does in a year on foreign missions; and the zeal seems somewhat less considerable with the contrast.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

MONDAY July 3. To-day Victor Emmanuel, king of Italy, with his ministers, and the representatives of foreign nations entered the City of Rome as the future political Capital of Italy. The Popes had held the "eternal city, for long ages. But the judgment has set and their dominion is taken away. The Pope is now a simple bishop in Rome, and Victor Emmanuel, the heretic, is King. The Pope has protested and all nations have been appealed to for help. But he comes to the end of his temporal power, and there is none to help him. And so the Scripture is fulfilled before our eyes. "But the judgment shall sit and they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy unto the end." (Dan. 7: 26.)

With all the evidence of the rise, triumphs and fall of the Papacy, the man of sin of 2 Thes. 2: 1-8 and little horn of Dan. 7: 21-26, we have expositors in Europe and America who teach that the fourth kingdom of Daniel's prophecy, and the "man of sin," are yet to rise.

While the Lord delays his coming there are many things coming up that greatly try the faith, as well as the patience of the waiting ones. For if we have not had the "great tribulation," in the long reign and triumph of the Papal power; if the prophecies of Daniel and John, as applied by Protestants for ages, are not fulfilled, then it would appear to men of sense who wait and watch for Christ on the ground of their fulfillment, that the whole matter becomes a mystery, an unsolved enigma. Darkness and doubt clothe the whole subject, where all was light and hope before.

If the futurist expositors are the true exegetes, then the whole Church has been in darkness up to this time. If, as the futurists say, the four great monarchies of Daniel 2 and 7 have not yet risen, and, consequently, the little horn of the fourth kingdom has not yet come up, or "made war with the saints" (Dan. 7: 21, 22); or if the book of Revelation is yet to be fulfilled; if the "two-horned beast," has not risen (Rev. ch. 13); if the "two witnesses," (Rev. 11: 2-14,) have not yet risen, been slain or raised; if six of the seven trumpets of Rev. 8 to 11 have not been fulfilled; if the "second wo is not past" (Rev. 11: 14), then, we as a people are without light! We have nothing to stand on, and, worst of all, our preaching for the past thirty] years has been without foundation. We have simply been teaching falsehood in the name of the Lord! A sad conclusion indeed, but nevertheless a true one, if the futurist theory is correct. Beloved brethren of the Advent faith, is it really worth our while in this "hour of temptation" and "trial of our faith," to seriously inquire whether, indeed, the Adventists with the great Reformers and the Protestant world have all been deceived, and that Mr. Maitland the futurist leader of England, and Dr. Seiss of America, are the only men who have light on the prophetic word? Can we after our study of the prophetic word, and tracing its fulfillment in the history of the nations and the church, give up all the evidence we have and the convictions it has enforced? In other words, shall we scuttle the old ship, and sink all the hopes we have so fondly cherished, and pervert the cause that has borne not only the seal of our toil, cares and tears, but of the blessing of God himself? I trust not.

I do not object to the futurist views because they are new, but because they are absurd and not true. Many new things are true. But in this case the new things are fanciful and without proof. Many of these futurist views were connected with Louis Napoleon's career, as the supposed Anti-christ. But this man of destiny, has had quite a different destiny from what was anticipated. And when after this failure we are asked to believe that we are yet to see two men literally vomiting fire on their adversaries; literal locusts, horse-shaped, with crowned heads, women's hair, men's faces, lion's teeth, and scorpion's tails armed with literal stings, to torment men (they would be more like to kill them with fright); literal horses with lion's heads, spitting fire and brimstone; that a literal flaming mass will be thrown into the Mediterranean, turning it to blood; that a third of the literal water of earth will become wormwood tea; that a third part of the day and a third part of each night will be literally dispensed with—but we forbear. In this case we are reminded of our Savior's words: "No man after he has drank old wine, straightway desireth new: for he saith, The old is better!" So it will prove with most of the old Adventists. They will decide that the old wine is the best.

TUESDAY, July 4. To-day begins the ninety-sixth year of American Independence. It finds a great nation, of forty millions of people, gathered from all the nationalities of earth. We have become wealthy and powerful. While old kingdoms and empires are wasting, we are rising in youthful vigor We are fulfilling a mision for the world; but not its renovation, or conversion to Christianity. Things will go on as they are till the stone smites the prophetic image, when the kingdoms and nations of the earth will pass away, and the kingdom of God come. That will be our jubilee.

WEDNESDAY, July 5. Spent in the office. We are being kindly remembered of the Lord, and by his people in the aid given to carry on the good work of publishing. And yet how few as yet, are interested in the work. It is the few that do most of the work, as also the most of the giving. If all would give and do, it would make a vast difference.

From L S Conner, Forest Bay, Mich:

I have taken THE TIMES for two months, and I am well pleased with it, for I love to read of the revivals and prosperity of God's people. I have always belonged to the class called the world's people until the past two or three months. I have volunteered in the army of the Lord, and I have found much pleasure in the service of the Lord. I often praise his blessed name, for bringing me to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, and I look for him to come back to earth again. (Jno. 14: 3.) "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." Bless the Lord! What a precious promise.

Why am I an Adventist? It is just this. Adventism sets up this claim. Is it a revealed truth, or is it an error? Is the coming of Christ to be a literal or spiritual event? What say the Scriptures about it? Paul thus speaks to his Thessalonian brethren: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus. (1 Thes. 1: 9, 10.) Who were they waiting for? God's Son. Where from? From heaven. "While they looked stedfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, ye men of Galilee, Why stand ye gazing into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. (Acts 1: 10, 11.) This agrees with our Savior's own testimony to the Seer of Patmos, after his ascension: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore." (Rev. 1: 18.) This is the very personage of whom the heavenly messengers declare—"This same Jesus which was taken up from you into heaven shall come again from heaven [not spiritually, but] in like manner as the disciples saw him ascend.

If Christ literally went away, he will literally come again. "Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." (Rev. 1: 7.) This event cannot be counterfeited, for we shall all see the Savior come in the clouds of heaven. "The powers of heaven shall be shaken, and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads: for your redemption draweth nigh." (Lk. 21: 26-28.) "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory; and then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect." (Mk. 13: 26-27.) It will be no spiritual affair, "for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise." (1 Thes. 4: 16.) This makes the coming of Christ occur in connection with the sounding of the trump of God, which arouses the slumbering dead from their tombs. Moreover the apostle adds; "Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them [the resurrected saints] in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." This cannot be spiritualized away. Christ will return literally, and the resurrected, together with the living saints, will rise up to meet him in the air.

With this fact well might Paul affirm—Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." (Heb. 9: 28.) We meet with many who endorse the doctrine of the future personal coming of Christ, but can see no necessity for this event. They have a theory which makes Christ's coming a needless event. But when we learn for what purpose Christ is to come, we shall not only recognize this event as a needful item in the divine truth, but, also that we must be ready for the event in order to have an entrance into the kingdom of God. But why so? Because Christ has been ordained of God to be the judge of the quick and dead. (Acts 10: 42.) And Paul affirms that he "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing." (2 Tim. 4: 1.) Hence it follows, if neither the living nor the dead are to be judged till Christ's second coming, none can receive their reward until then. Another question is, For what purpose is Christ coming? He is coming to set up his kingdom on earth. Christ's own testimony is: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." (Mat. 25: 31-34.) This is when Christ is escorted from heaven to earth, by all the holy angels. He shall then sit upon the throne of his glory.

When is that invitation to be given to the saints? the Savior's answer is, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." Thus the kingdom referred to is one that the saints do not inherit till Christ shall return from heaven in his kingly position. But what kingdom is alluded to here? Not a kingdom that preceded the formation of our globe, but, simply, the kingdom prepared for the faithful ones from the foundation of the world. Glory to God! Oh! what a precious thought it is to me, when I read the word of truth, He will come. Let us all be ready to meet him in peace, when he comes. Praise God and the Lord Jesus Christ for evermore.

From D Q Kent, Hawleyville Iowa, June 15.

When I look back a few years to the time when I did not know one in all this Western country of like faith, I can but say, What hath God wrought? Now there are several churches. Some are withouta shepherd; yet they contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and make head against all opposition. Oh! that God would send laborers to answer to the many calls, and gather in the whitened harvest. If there are laborers who wish to work in the vineyard of the Lord, where the field is large, the work abundant, the laborers few, and are willing to wait until the harvest is gathered and the day of reckoning comes, let them come forth. Now, Br. Himes, I must go forward, not to-day only, nor to-morrow, but for life. And oh! may the dear Savior lead and guide me and show me my place of labor, if there is one for me, and give me grace that I may keep in my place, and at his work until he comes. For I must be faithful, or he can never say, "Well done, good and faithful servant!"

From T G Van Meter, Holton, June 26:

Perhaps it may interest some to know how our little band is getting along, in this corner of the Lord's vineyard. We have through tribulation and many sore trials built up a church of twenty-six members in a little less than a year. We have been greatly blessed in the last six [illegible]ths in the way of good preac[illegible] We have had Brn. Field, Green [illegible] add and Audrus, and we are i[illegible]d to them, under God, that we [illegible] hat we are to-day. Opposition i[illegible]ng way, and persecution has in a measure ceased. People are begining to read for themselves, and to inquire if these things be true; and with the blessing of God we hope to get a goodly number prepared for the soon coming of the Bridegroom and the marriage supper of the Lamb.

What glorious promises there are to the faithful followers of meek and lowly Jesus. Then let us be up and doing while it is called to-day. What we all need is more charity; and all the way we can get it is to get nearer to Jesus, and get more of the love of God in our hearts. Then we shall have more love for our fellow beings. We should always remember that if we "have not the spirit of Christ, we are none of his." We should ever live humbly, walk uprightly before God and man, and "by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor," that we may receive the gift of "eternal life," and have a home in the "kingdom that shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High."

From A H Cooperider, Vernon Ind.

During the last six months, I have been mid patrons of the ADVENT TIMES. Consequently, I have been pleased to peruse its contents, beside many good and interesting tracts. I highly esteem THE TIMES for its teachings are founded upon Bible doctrine; and from that, and that alone do we learn that Jesus died that we might live. The truth is gaining throughout the country, through much opposition. We shall be delighted on or about the 27th of July to hear Br. Field preach at Hopewell, Jefferson Co. I shall with interest and anxiety commend to my associates, THE TIMES, as an advocate of the glorious truths of Jesus' soon coming, who will then bestow life and immortality upon all who are in sympathy with him. And may we all feel that our "sufficiency is of God;" and labor with an humble reliance upon his grace. We are not of the night, nor of darkness, therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep, sleep in the night, and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night. My poor heart exults in the thought that though we are a scattered people, the time is soon coming when we shall be gathered from the east, west, north, and south, out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, from the living and from the dead.

From D O Williams, Mt Clemens Mich June 29:

It is a long time since I have been able to collect my thoughts enough to venture to write a line of encouragement to you. Jan. 28 I was stricken down with scarlet fever of very malignant form. Although very sick my meditations were sweet, and my hope firm in Christ and the resurrection and God's word. Through the goodness of our Heavenly Father, and the watching of a kind husband, niece, and our most excellent physician, I have been mostly restored, so that I can once more attend the prayer and conference meeting. I had hoped to have attended the Campmeeting at Jackson; but it was otherwise ordered. Yet I received a blessing at home, for in talking with my sister-in-law (she being a devoted Christian), I asked her if she would not like to hear my religious experience. She replied that she would. I then related it to her, covering the time since I was seven years old to the present. She also related hers. She had had a similar experience, and truly our hearts ran together like two drops of water, and I received a bountiful blessing.

I see a few that are in the enjoyment of full salvation, and it encourages me to have society that can understand me. I have been thinking of these lines this morning—

> "Why live so niggardly and poor?
> Your bank contains a plenty.
> Why come and take a one pound note
> When you might have a twenty?
> Yes, twenty thousand, ten times told,
> Is but a trifling sum,
> To what your Father has laid up
> Secure in Christ his Son."

We have such a willing Savior, we often receive more than we ask for or expect. Pray for me, that I may live more faithfully, and do more for one that has done so much for me. I want to be one that will be found ready when he who is our life shall appear, that I may appear with him in glory. We have had some interesting seasons here since I saw you. Eld Preston, Seymour and wife, and Eld. Snook have visited us, and gave good cheer. Then we have THE TIMES and our most excellent Quarterly to encourage us: and I often exclaim—

> "My soul is happy when I hear
> The Savior is so nigh;
> I long to see his sign appear
> Upon the opening sky."

NEVER!

"I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee."

Let every believer grasp these words, and store them up in his heart. Keep them ready, and have them fresh in your memory. You will want them some day. The Philistines will be upon you; the hand of sickness will lay you low; the king of terrors will draw near; the valley of the shadow of death will open before your eyes. Then comes that hour when you will find nothing so cheering as a realizing sense of God's companionship. Stick to the word "Never." It is worth its weight in gold. Cling to it as a drowning man clings to a rope. Grasp it firmly, as a soldier attacked on all sides, grasps his sword. God has said, and will stand to it, "I will never forsake thee."

"Never!" Though your heart be often faint, and you are sick of self and your many failures and infirmities, even the promise will not fail. "Never!" Though the devil whispers "I shall have you at last, yet a little while, and your faith will fail, and you will be mine," even then the word of God will stand. "Never!" When the cold chill of death is creeping over you, and friends can do no more...., even then Christ will not forsake you. "Never!" When the day of judgment comes, and the books are opened, and the dead are rising from their graves, and eternity is beginning, even then the promise will bear your weight. Christ will not release his hold on your soul. O believing reader! trust in the Lord forever; for he says, "I will never leave you." Lean all your weight upon him. Do not be afraid. Glory in his promise. Rejoice in the strength of your consolation. You may then say boldly—"The Lord is my helper; I will not fear."—Sel. by G. E. M.

NOTES OF A DISCUSSION.

THIRD SESSION.—FENN'S FIRST SPEECH.

Burgess gave you some novel criticisms of my proof texts found in Ps. 146, and Eccl. 9: 5. He says David meant that all past thought perishes at death. I grant his claim: but that happens to be all the thought, a man has. And when all the thought man has is perished I should say he must be unconscious. Again he says that Solomon meant, when he said "the dead know not anything," that they know not anything about what is going on here in the world. If this is their condition, they are poorly qualified to be guardian angels, to say the least. And thus a very consoling theory is turned upside down, which claims the dead become the guardian angels of the living, which cannot be true if they know nothing about the living in this world.

He delights in calling man in death according to my view a nonentity. Now I will examine his view of man in death, and see how much better it is. His view is that an immaterial, indivisible, intangible, uncompounded something, without form or parts, interior or exterior, is going to shout glory hallelujah, when the body is dead. Now let us compare notes. Nonentity means nothing. And I should like to know how much short of nothing the spirit of man is, as defined by the theology of the day.

A query may arise in your minds: why this definition is adopted. The reason is obvious. If there had been anything of their theoretical spirit, some one would have seen, heard, felt, tasted, or smelt it, before this time. No man can conceive of a better definition of nothing, than the theological definition of the spirit of man. All the difference there is between us is, I get at nonentity with one step, and Br. Burgess takes several, to come to nothing. He imagines something, in nothing, and I deny it. Such a claim for the condition of the spirit between death and the resurrection is very far from proving the negative of the question we are discussing, which asserts a real being to be the nature of the spirit. No proof for such a being existing between death and the resurrection has been furnished by my opponent; hence I claim the affirmative of the question is undisturbed.

Let us examine a little closer the popular idea of spirit. It is claimed that thought is the essential quality of spirit. If this claim is sound, then wherever we find thought, we find spirit. Dalton, a noted physiologist, claims that animals reason, on precisely the same principle that man does. "The degree is less, but the nature is the same." (p. 428.) Have animals immortal souls or spirits?

My opponent has claimed that, God never breathed the breath of life into the animals: but did into man. How, then, came the animals in possession of life, if God did not give it to them? The term nephesh chaiyah (rendered living soul in Gen. 2: 7), is applied to animals four times in Gen. ch. 1. In Gen. 7: 21, 22 we read: "Add all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast; and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died." I say, God did breathe into the animals the breath of life, and I have proved it.

Again "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth; wherein there is life" margin, a living soul. (Gen. 1: 30.) How did these animals get this life, if God did not give it to them? Again. "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other: yea they have all one breath." (Eccl. 3: 19.) If they have all one breath, and the breath of man is an immortal spirit, then the breath of the beast is the same. The term rendered breath here is "ruach." The same term is rendered spirit in the second verse below, and also in ch. 12: 7. It is the word generally employed in the Hebrew to express spirit, and could be rendered spirit in this text, and do no violence to the scriptures, making it read, "they have all one spirit."

This being true the animals are destined to an eternal state of conscious existence, or else man is not. If the argument is worth anything—claiming uninterrupted eternal existence, by virtue of possessing a spirit—both man and beast have an endless existence.

BURGESS' FIRST SPEECH.

I will attempt to refute the position that the brain is the organ of thought. Destroy the human lungs and thought ceases. Destroy the liver and we can't think. Hence the liver is an organ of thought. Paralysis unnerves the whole body, including the brain; yet the mind may remain vigorous. Is there not mind back of phosphate of lime, and other matter that composes the brain? [He reads his manuscript the rest of the time, quoting the transfiguration, Christ's appearance to his disciples, the adorning not corruptible of 1 Pet. 3: 4. The above are all repetitions. Nothing new in this speech in the way of rebutting arguments from scripture.]

FENN'S SECOND SPEECH.

Our brother has given us some strange reasoning in his last speech. He concludes the lungs and liver, are as much the organs of thought as the brain. His argument amounts to this: that men cannot live without, therefore they cannot think without lungs. I grant his claim, and give him all the consolation he can derive from it. Judging from the character of some men's mental productions, we might conclude the liver to be the organ of thought, and in a morbid state at that. But enough of this. Let us go to the wise man once more for wisdom on this question. In Eccl. 9: 10, we read: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." The word rendered grave here is sheol, and corresponds exactly with the Greek term hades. My opponent represents the faith which claims hades to be the receptacle of departed souls or spirits. If hades is the place of departed souls, sheol is, also; for the one in Greek means precisely what the other does in Hebrew.

What are the facts gathered from this passage? They are substantially these: that the place of departed souls is one dispossessed of work, device, knowledge or wisdom. This comes very near proving the soul unconscious in death. My opponent refers us to the transfiguration of Christ, and the appearance of Moses and Elijah. (Mat. 17: 1–9.) This passage says nothing about spirits embodied or disembodied, and therefore has nothing whatever to do with the question we are discussing. Elijah never died, and I don't know but Moses was resurrected; for the Devil and God's angel had a sharp dispute about his body; and I don't know how it came about unless an angel was after Moses' body, and the Devil disputed his claim to it.

This matter is called a vision by our Savior, and as such it did not necessarily embrace the literal presence of any thing brought to view in it. Was the seven-headed, and ten-horned monster that John saw in vision literally present? Was the innumerable company he saw, many of whom were not then born, literally present in the vision he had of them? No intelligent person will contend that they were. Then the vision that the disciples had of Moses and Elijah, might all have passed before them without the literal presence of any seen in it.

We are informed by Peter (2 Pet. 1: 16–18) what was the object of this vision: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount." We now understand that the object of this vision was to give a view of Christ's coming in power, rather than the existence of disembodied, immaterial spirits, that cannot be seen.

Our attention has also been directed to the appearance of Christ (Lk. 24: 36) in the upper room where the apostles were gathered the door being shut. He concludes Christ must have come as a disembodied spirit because he was first seen in the room, and they had shut the door to keep the Jews out. There is not the slightest evidence bearing on immaterial spirit entities in this passage. Christ upsets all hope in this direction when he says, "Handle me and see: for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. Furthermore there is not a particle of proof to show that he did not open the door and come in unseen and unheard, as Peter and the angel went out of prison. (Acts 12: 8.) Was Peter a disembodied spirit, because he went out, the prison doors being bolted; and his irons fell off when the angel smote him? I trust my opponent will not thus contend.

The condition of man in death, is as though he had not been. (Ob. 1: 16.) Each element of his being having returned to its original state, he may well be said to be as though he had not been, Paul seems to have this idea of the righteous dead, even. "For if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins: then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. (1 Cor. 15: 16.) The reasoning of the apostle is this: that without a resurrection the saints who are dead are perished.

BURGESS' SECOND SPEECH.

Br. Fenn thinks he has annihilated my proof texts, but I will show you that they are as strong as ever. He says Moses was resurrected, I deny it: for the Bible says Jesus Christ was the first raised from the dead. So Moses was not raised from the dead. Why don't he take up the rest of my proof texts, and show you that man is a nonentity in death? My faith is founded on the Bible, and I have brought overwhelming proof in favor of my position, and not one of these passages has been touched.

He thinks he has made a wonderful argument from physiology. If his argument is good for anything, then indentation is worse than to have a tamping rod go straight through the head. Then when an indentation occurs, you do not need to send for a Doctor, but get a tamping rod and put a charge of powder behind it, and put the end on the indentation and touch it off, and let it go clean through the head, and consciousness will be restored. (Laughter.) Such is the gentleman's reasoning. The brain has been entirely removed without destroying thought. Morgagni and Haller say: Clark claims to have ascertained by a wide induction of facts, that every part of the brain has been found to be destroyed or disorganized in one instance or another, while yet the individuals have not been deprived of mind, or even effected in their intellectual powers. (Man all Immortal, pp. 63, 64.) Where is the gentleman's physiology now? It is often the case that persons who are reduced to skeletons, physically, are in full possession of their mental powers; and persons who are dying often retain to the last, even when it has been ascertained that the brain was very much diseased. These facts sweep the gentleman's theory into nonentity.

I have proved to you that the Savior believed in the conscious existence of the spirit after death. He told the thief that he would be with him in Paradise the day he died. He has taught us in the case of the rich man and Lazarus, most emphatically, that the condition of man in death is that of happiness or misery. He has warned us not to fear them that can kill the body, etc. I have cited you to Paul's desire to be with Christ, and to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord. I have cited you to John's Gospel, where he that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life, etc., and the Savior's promise to John, to be faithful unto death, and he would give him a crown of life. I don't wonder the gentleman dreads to approach these searching truths.

FENN'S THIRD SPEECH.

Br. Burgess is evidently anxious to get off from physiology, and get into the Bible. I think he will get all the Scripture he will know what to do with before the debate closes. The quotation from "Morgagni and Haller" is a little mixed in connection with the assertion of Br. B. The idea he conveyed to your minds was, that all of the brain had been removed from the same individual without destroying consciousness. This is not the case; but the author would be understood, that in different individuals on different occasions, the brain had been destroyed in part. For instance; the lower lobe of the right hemisphere in one person is destroyed, and the upper lobe of the left hemisphere, in another person is destroyed, and so on. In no case the brain entire, in one individual had been destroyed without destroying thought and life. The corresponding organs of the right and left side, admit of disturbance without destroying the function of the other. I loose an eye, but I still see with the other remaining.

We will now look into the Scriptures a little more. Paul tells us something about immortality in 1 Cor. 15: 53, 54. In this passage he informs us that death is swallowed up in victory when this mortal has put on immortality. And he tells us in v. 52, that this change occurs when the last trump sounds and the dead are raised. Burgess would have you think that the crown of life is gained at death. But Paul teaches us, that it is given at the resurrection.

God made a mistake in pronouncing the penalty of death on man; for instead of it being death, really, it was a crown of life. According to such reasoning the devil was the true friend to man, in that he got him to sin: for in sinning he dies and gets his crown of life. We are not disposed to believe that God would reward transgression with that greatest of blessings—the crown of life.

Physiology proves a man dead when he dies. The devil tried to pervert the truth of God and make man believe he would not die, if he did transgress. In this effort he was successful, and since then he has been trying to make man believe that he will not be dead after he dies; and he has succeeded much better with the second lie than he did with the first: for he only got two converts to the first, and has got millions to believe the second.

Why is man turned out of Eden after transgressing? Was it not that he might die? Br. B. says this was moral death. Was man shut out of Eden lest he put forth his hand and eat of the tree of life and live forever morally? That is strange logic. Was it not man's privilege to live in paradise (or Eden) forever, had he remained obedient to God's law? Oh yes! says every one. But what reason is there for believing that God will give him something much better for transgressing his law? The opposing argument amounts to this; God creates a man in his own image, and puts him into the most beautiful place in the world, and places a tree before him, and tells him to let it alone; but if he eats it, he shall die and go to glory. To me such reasoning as that is not consistent.

We read on p. 66, of Mattison on the soul: "Come to the veranda of a Braminic temple. In the last spasms of Asiatic cholera, Gordon Hall cries—Glory, glory, glory! and he passed through glory's morning gate, and walked into paradise." And again: "Death gives us more than was in Eden lost. This king of terrors is the Prince of Peace."

Now if this be true, man can look back to the expulsion from Eden as the most fortunate event in the history of the race. While he says to the fair bowers of Eden, "farewell," he only turns his back upon the gross and earthly to start for fairer fields on high. If this theology is correct, the Devil came down here for a purpose, and that to let man out of prison. But this theology is not true. Death is a penalty, and God has plainly told us the result of dying in Gen. 3: 19—"Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." This is the decree of heaven's ruler, and all the painting of fancy, or imagination, cannot revoke it. The Psalmist tells us (Ps. 104: 29): "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." I wonder what the condition of man is in death. Is he praising the Lord? Let David answer (Ps. 115: 17): "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." I wonder if the dead are admiring God and thinking of him? Let David answer this also (Ps. 6: 5): "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

But what did you mean David when you said—"Thou shalt guide me with thy council, and afterward receive me to glory?" (Ps. 73: 24.) I meant that when the saints are glorified, I should be glorified with them. "As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." (Ps. 17; 15.) Says Paul: "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God; when he who is our life shall appear, then shall ye appear with him in glory." (Col. 3: 3–4.) Paul and David are not opposed to each other, as to the time men are received into glory: and I agree with them in my theology perfectly.

BURGESS' THIRD SPEECH.

I am glad Fenn has referred to Christ in the room, "the door being shut." He has given me an argument that completely annihilates his theory. Now in that a spirit has not flesh and bones, it follows that a spirit has every thing else that Christ had, but flesh and bones. Here goes the gentleman's argument without a shred left. Do you not see that when Christ said "a spirit hath not flesh and bones as you see me have," that he meant to convey the idea, that a spirit had every thing that he had but flesh and bones? The gentleman has gone down on a cake of ice, and we shall see no more of him. [A recapitulation of previous arguments, and reference to his negative Scripture proof concluded the third session.

The Times.

AT HOME.

It was a subject of general remark yesterday among those who witnessed the riot on the Eighth-ave., that the most violent of the mob were nearly all women. It is said to have been a woman who fired the first shot near the Grand Opera House. A woman was the first victim of the first charge of the police at Twenty-eighth st. On the side walks, at the shop doors, at the windows, women were heard shrieking curses against the bloody Orangemen, and stimulating the courage of their husbands and brothers. When Mayor Hall's friends get the ascendency are we to have all the horrors of Paris over again? N. Y. Tribune.

The past week witnessed scenes in the metropolis of the country, that at first glance might have led one to suppose the horrors of the Commune were to be transferred to this land. As it is, much blood has been shed, and many persons more or less seriously wounded, and many more maimed for life.

July 12 is the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, which established Protestant civil rule in Ireland. As such it has been celebrated by the so-called Orangemen, for many years, both in Ireland, and wherever the Irish have gathered in large numbers in other parts of the world. As the day drew near last week, threats of violence against the Orangemen were freely uttered by their Romanist foes. The priests preached against this feeling; but, as the result showed, in vain.

Fearing violence and riot, the city authorities ordered the Orange men not to form their procession: but this order was subsequently reversed, and the military called out to aid the police in enforcing peace.

After numerous provocations, the military finally fired upon the mob. Over sixty were slain or mortally wounded, and perhaps 150 received minor hurts. Greatly exagerated statements of the number killed were at first telegraphed over the country, and the excitement everywhere was intense. In any case the affray was bad enough. It illustrates the danger of the republic from the foreign ignorant Romanist population. True the Priests preached against the rioters; but it is to the ignorant degraded condition in which Romanism has kept the Irish masses, that has ripened them for such things.

We have not room this week for the sad details of this sad conflict. The story is harrowing to tender hearts, and the events help fill up the cup of latter-day sins and sufferings. May we soon be beyond such things.

American Lakes have heretofore been free from the phenomena which have disturbed large bodies of water in regions subject to earthquakes. But Lake Superior has had a tidal wave which greatly frightened the new "emporium" of Duluth, the other day. The flowing in and out of the lake was so sudden and violent as to cause much damage.

RELIGIOUS ITEMS.

Father Hyacinthe a few days ago sought an interview with the Pope, and met with no better success than did Lammenais on a similar occasion. Pio Nono peremptorily declined to see him under any circumstances whatever, declaring him to be one of the worst enemies the Church has ever had. This is Father Hyacinthe's reply to the Pope: "Formerly the good shepherd ran after the strayed sheep and brought it back, tenderly placed upon his shoulders. To-day the strayed sheep (since you reject me as such) seeks the shepherd and he rejects it. What a difference between the Gospel and the Vatican!"

The Presbyterian says that the churches of that denomination are generally acting upon the principle that no assent to a creed is to be exacted of private members when entering into the membership of the church. Such assent is required only of those who are ordained to office in the church. The Assembly of 1839 made this explicit declaration: "We have ever admitted to our communion all those who in the judgment of charity were the sincere disciples of Jesus."

—From this we conclude that all the Adventists expelled and excommunicated from this body were excluded for hypocrisy and not for their 'sincere' belief of their professed doctrine.

A Port Huron (Mich.) journal mentions the latest Church scheme for furnishing amusement to the world to replenish the treasury of the sanctuary:

"The 'sheet and pillow-case' social, at the residence of Mrs. F. L. Wells, on Wednesday evening, April 19, was a very enjoyable affair, affording entertainment and amusement to all present. Some twenty or thirty persons were arrayed in ghostly habiliment with masks, and about one hundred persons were present altogether. There was great curiosity among the lookers-on to learn the identity of the maskers, but only a few of them were recognized. The party broke up shortly after ten o'clock. The receipts of the social, for the benefit of the Episcopal church were something over $22."

Another grief has befallen the Sovereign Pontiff. It has been discovered that he had covered up by pardon and, as he had hoped, the destruction of the papers in the case, a process in the court of the vicar-general in 1868 and '69 of some of the inferior clergy, who were engaged in the manufacture of relics out of the bones of animals and in forging the papers necessary to authenticate them. Unfortunately for him and the peace of Holy Church, the papers were not destroyed, and have been published by the permission of the excommunicated Victor Emanuel. His Holiness was greatly agitated on finding that this little speculation had received a scandalous publicity, which would go far to discredit all the other relics in the whole world. He expressed his great regret that he had pardoned the guilty parties, and wished he had let the law take its course. We fear, however, that his sorrow was not of a godly sort, and rather partook of that of Prior's thief at the Grave:

> "My repentance will scarce save my bacon;
> It was not that I murdered, but that I was taken!"

A recent parish election in England resulted in the choice of Rev. Charles Lee to the pastoral office, by a vote of 2,095 to 786. The polling occupied two days, and the scenes of the election are fully reported in the English papers. The following is a specimen:

"Mr. J. Lambert, in supporting the nomination of the Rev. Charles Lee, said he took it that they wanted a full-grown man; they did not want any babyism. ['Hear, hear!' and groans.] They wanted no mediocrity. ['Hear, hear!' and groans.] The stipend of St. Leonard's ought to command such a man. It ought to command the best brains in the country. £700 a year was no fool of a thing. He maintained that they wanted a thoroughly evangelical man."

The events of the day are thus summed up by the Spectator:

"Supporters of Mr. Lee were taken from their carriages and 'drubbed'—probably an unpleasant process; a drunken woman in the favorite colors was driven about the town; and gangs of Irish girls, wearing Mr. Ward's colors, set upon respectable people, wearing Mr. Lee's; and but for the interference of the police would have 'lynched' them in earnest. Voters found it necessary to get extremely drunk with gin as well as enthusiasm, and the day ended in a charge made by the police upon a riotous crowd of 2,000 people."

At Free Masons Hall a fortnight ago there was one of the most heterogeneous gatherings of the season. Extremes met. Atheists of the Bradlaugh School shook hands with the Spiritualists who believe in Mr. Home. The reason being that they both believe in Robert Owen. What Robert Owen believed in is another matter. At this celebration of the centenary of his birth however, each of these two parties—wide as the poles asunder—claimed him for their own. "The Freethought party," we are told, "mustered in large numbers to honor the man who did not hesitate, at the moment of his greatest popularity, to declare that 'all the religions of the world are founded in error.'" On the other hand, "It is well known that Mr. Owen, in the last years of his life, fell under the influence of the Spiritualist belief; but it was said that he would never have lent a willing ear to the language of table-legs, had not the raps of the so called 'spirits' assured him that his principles were true, and would ultimately universally prevail! It was not therefore surprising to see so many Spiritualists present on the occasion, including, we are informed, Mr. D. D. Home, and several other eminent 'mediums.' But there was one presence there which we did not see, but we are assured by the Medium and Daybreak (a Spiritualist paper) was distinctly visible to clairvoyant vision—it was no less a person or shadow, or whatever it may be termed, than Robert Owen himself! He appeared in the form of a luminous light, and was hovering near and influencing certain of the speakers."—Rock.

THE PROPHETIC TIMES

It is reported that the Rabbins, pressed by the Christians with the seventy weeks of Daniel, and despairing of being able to silence their antagonists, uttered ex cathedra the malediction 'Cursed be he that computeth the times!" No believing student of prophecy will be so rash as this; yet many of the soberest look askance at the subject, fear to touch it themselves, and feel a strong dislike to see it touched by any one else. So much has been written upon it; facts have been so dishonestly warped, and dates have been "cooked" to fit a foregone conclusion; so many curious coincidences have been found, which have proved worthless; so many bold guesses, so many confident annunciations have been made, which events have refuted, that we are inclined to take refuge in a quiet ignoring of chronology altogether, attempting to read the prophetic symbols without the prophetic dates.

But is not this a resource of desperation? It is like deliberately putting an extinguisher over one of the constituent wicks of the lamp which God has placed in our hands to be "a light in a dark place." (2 Pet. 1: 19). It is as if a mariner, who finds it difficult to square his inferences from latitude and longitude, and from the figured forms of headlands, with those deduced from soundings, should resolve to paste paper over those paragraphs of his "Sailing Directions," which speak of the latter. For are not all the prophetic times expressly given as landmarks in our sailing directions? The same unerring wisdom that portrays the features of the terrible little horn of the fourth beast, limits his prevalence to "a time and times, and the dividing of time." That he should endure for this determinate period, is as essential a point in the identification of him, as that he should wear out the saints. We cannot neglect the date without "reproaching the Lord." Can we imagine that the divine wisdom would, in revelations given "to show unto his servants things which must shortly be done," insert, here and there, sentences expressed in some unknown "tongue of angels," or written in cryptographic cyphers to which no key is afforded. There are the dates: on the pages with the gracious delineations of the future they stand out conspicuous. In some cases (Dan 8: 13, 14; 12, 9, 7) they are replies to special inquiries of superhuman intelligences (1 Pet. 1: 11, 12); and, in more than one instance (Dan. 12: 7; Rev. 10: 6), they are subjects of the solemn oaths of one who bears the impress of the Son of God himself, sworn "by him that liveth for ever and ever."

All the arguments used by students of prophecy against its neglectors, equally apply to the study of these grand notes of time. And whatever of difficulty or failure has hitherto been felt in their solution, should only throw us, with a deeper renunciation of self, upon the faithfulness of our covenant with God, upon the sympathy of our Lord Jesus, and upon the illumination of the indwelling Spirit; while we use a greater diligence in examining these divinely-chosen marks, and a wiser caution in eliminating sources of error.

May "the inspiration of the Almighty give understanding" to the writer of this article, and to every one of the readers!

SEVEN TIMES.

The first prophetic period that demands our scrutiny is one that includes all the rest, the duration of the times of the Gentiles. This has been considered by all our great interpreters, from Mede downward, as the fundamental datum, "the sacred calendar and great almanac of prophecy." It was distinctly defined in Nebuchadnezzar's vision of the great tree (Dan. 4); in which it was announced that seven times should pass over him in his bestial condition.[1] Supreme power on earth, which had for a while been exercised in the theocracy (of which the Davidic kingdom was a phase), had been already removed from Israel, and allowed to pass to Gentiles: from divine it had become, and was to continue, bestial. All the successive kingdoms, mainly at that time future, represented by so many wild beasts, were to find their place within that bestial period; until at length royal dominion should return to the Lord and his saints of the heavenlies (Dan. 7: 14, 18), and on earth to the Daughter of Jerusalem (Mic. 4: 8; Lk. 21: 24).[2] Thus this great period of seven times is not only a term of compact perfectness as a week of symbolic days, but is an era well defined in human history, by two of the most august events, the withdrawal and the restoration of theocratic power on earth.

The first point to be ascertained is the terminus a quo—this long period of 2520 years (360x7) is to be counted. Faber, in his elaborate and learned work,[3] somewhat curtly assumes that this must be the birth of Nebuchadnezzar, which he sets at cir. B. C. 658–646 But it seems manifest that, if this monarch did begin the period, it would be not at his birth, but at his displacing the Davidic monarchy of Judah. Considerably before this, however, the throne of David had been subverted. In the time of Ahaz and Hezekiah, the power of Assyria had been felt and acknowledged (2 Ki. 16: 7; 18: 14): but as yet Jerusalem was protected by Jehovah, "for his own sake, and for his servant David's sake" (19: 34.) But in Manasseh's reign the judgment could no longer be averted. "The line of Samaria" was now to be stretched over Jerusalem (21: 13–15): and the house of David was carried captive to Babylon. (2 Chron. 33: 11.) It is true that, after a while, the guilty but penitent king was restored to his vacant throne. But this seems to have been through the somewhat contemptuous compassion of the Assyrian despot; and the few years of precarious royalty that were yet vouchsafed to the Davidic house were but the shadow, not the reality, of independence. For Ezra and the Levites, pleading the calamities of the Jews after the restoration (Neh. 9: 32), and trace them back not to Nebuchadnezzar's invasion, but to "the time of the kings of Assyria." And the very invasion of Nebuchadnezzar the Holy Ghost refers to the sins of Manasseh, as its procuring cause, not those of Jehoiakim or Zedekiah, in whose actual reigns the doom fell. (2 Kings 24: 3.) It was Manasseh's crimes, "which the Lord would not pardon."

If, then, we could determine the date of the captivity of Manasseh, we might, with considerable presumption of probability, fix the terminus a quo of the times of the Gentiles;—the "breaking of the pride of (Judah's) power" (Lev. 26: 19), in connection with the threatened "seven times' punishment."

But Israel had shared with Judah in the honors of Theocracy; in the long continued apostacy; in the solemn threatening; and in the punishment. We must search for the "breaking of the pride of her power" also. Interpreters of name[4] have dated the seven times from the captivity of Ephraim. And here, as this consummation was effected in several successive stages, spread over an era of some duration, it is well to have our fallible judgment rectified by the divine verdict of the Spirit himself. God, by the prophet Hosea, glancing across the long period which we are investigating (Hos. 1: 5, 9, 10), marks it out by its two termini,—the utterance of Israel of Lo-ammi, "Ye are not my people," and the yet future confession, "Ye are the sons of the living God."

For the former of these we have a distinct inspired datum; for, at the coalition of Rezin of Syria and Pekah of Samaria against Judah, the Lord God said to the quailing house of David (Isa. 7: 8), "Within three score and five years shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people."

Now, Pekah, and Ahaz were contemporary only for three years, viz., B. C. 742–739, according to Usher. Thus the Lo-ammi doom would fall between 677 and 674; and so the times of the Gentiles ought to have ended a quarter of a century ago;—as many expected they would.

But, since that time, nay, within a dozen years past, ancient chronology has received a flood of light from several sources. Demetrius, a chronologer of about a century B. C., had assigned to the events of history dates lower by twenty-three years than those assigned by Ptolemy, whose canon was accepted by the moderns. But Demetrius' accuracy has recently been confirmed from unexpected quarters.

For a good while it has been known that there exist in the Crimea some very ancient Israelite tombs, with inscriptions on them. These have been recently examined by Russian archæologists, and a hundred and fifty epitaphs have been critically read: Very many of these are as early as the Christian era; and they date from "Our Captivity," that is Shalmaneser's captivity of Samaria, which they set in B. C. 696; as shown by the Metarch ion (or modern Jewish) computation being given in some cases. This, then, agrees nearly with Demetrius; our marginal date (2 Kings 17) being B. C. 721, or twenty-five years earlier.

The very valuable cuneiform document from Nineveh recently deciphered by Sir Henry Rawlinson, called by him the Assyrian Canon, has fixed the Assyrian reigns by the aid of solar eclipses: which, whenever they can be availed of, are the most indubitable of all chronological criteria. The eclipse of June 15, 763 B. C., verified by the astronomer-royal, fixes the first year of Tiglath pileser as 745. He records the taking of tribute from Menahem and Uzziah, whose reigns agree with this date.

The sign of the going back of the shadow on the steps (dial) of Ahaz has been shown to have been the result of a solar eclipse. This was in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah. Now there was an eclipse, which accurately meets the conditions, on the 11th of January 689; and this agrees with Demetrius' account of Sennacharib.

An eclipse recorded by Herodotus as occurring just before the fall of Nineveh, in 585, fixes the first year of Nebuchadnezzar in 582; and this is confirmed by Abydenus.[5]

Thus we may, without the least hesitation, consider the datum given by Jehovah himself for the final breaking of Ephraim, as indubitably falling within a range twenty-five years later than that set in the margin of our Bible; therefore, between B. C. 652 and 649. This would be about the middle of Manasseh's reign; and probably it was in the same campaign that finally swept Samaria, that "the captains of the host of the King of Assyria took Manasseh… and carried him to Babylon." It is true, the sacred history has not distinctly recorded this final ruin of Israel,[6] but the Spirit of prophecy has actually fixed its date. Thus the times of the Gentiles would have an appropriate commencing date, equally applicable to both Ephraim and Judah.

If this was indeed so; if the datum (Is. 7: 8) of the Lo-ammi state of Israel, was, indeed, in the mind of God, the terminus a quo of the seven times; the end, when Jerusalem shall no more be trodden down, and when the kingdom, even the first dominion, shall come to her, ought to fall between the year 1868 and 1871. Whether it will, we wait to see. We affirm nothing; but here is food for hope.

It has been suggested (by Habershon and others) that these far-reaching times were intended to bear a two-fold computation: that they should have a double commencement, and therefore a double termination: the one such as may be called incipient or inchoate, the other absolute and final. Thus the seventy years' captivity has been reckoned, 1st, from the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, when he took Jerusalem, and made Jehoiakim subject,—to the first year of Cyrus; 2d, from the nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar, when he destroyed the city, to the second year of Darius; each of these periods comprising seventy years, but the one beginning and ending eighteen years earlier than the other.

So with respect to the great period under consideration,—while the main commencement of the 2520 years seems to be correctly assigned to B. C. 652–649, an incipient commencement may be assigned to a date about seventy-five years earlier. For the beginning of the removing of Israel out of their land was that recorded in 2 Kings 15: 29, when, "in the days of Pekah….came Tiglath pileser, king of Assyria, and took…. Gilead, and Galilee, etc.….and carried them captive to Assyria." We have, indeed, no nearer clue to the exact date of this captivity, than that it was "in the days of Pekah," who reigned from 734 to 715. It was, however, probably distinct from, and anterior to, that of the campaign against Damascus, mentioned afterwards (16: 9), which was near the end of Pekah's reign: since no allusion is then made to Israel. If we place it, conjecturally, about the middle of Pekah's reign, or B. C. 727–724: it will be just seventy-five years earlier than the final breaking of Ephraim.

[1] These seven times were, of course, seven ordinary solar years, in their literal accomplishment on the king personally. He, however, is looked upon as a typical person, representing the whole course of Gentile monarchy: and the seven years then became symbolic. The divine use of symbolic time in symbolic prophecy, on the principle given in Ezk. 4: 1-6, is not the subject of argument in this paper. It is assumed as a postulate.

[2] Many interpreters consider that the same period had been announced long before by Moses (Lev. 26: 18, 21, 24, 28): Jehovah, with a fourfold reiteration, threatening Israel, in case of disobedience, that he will punish them seven times. The passage is indeed remarkable, and its coincidence with Dan. 4, is, in the original, even more exact than appears in our version; yet we do not press it, because we are not quite satisfied that it has a chronological force.

[3] Sac. Cal. of Proph. 1: 63. This eminent author arrives at results similar to our own; but his premises appear so untenable, that the concurrence is of no value.

He adduces other authorities from Egyptian and American archives, all confirmatory of the same important facts. See also this Journal for April 1870.

LABORS IN MINNESOTA.

I arrived in Minnesota just in time to enjoy the camp-meeting at Kasota. We landed at that point from our long journey, and met three of our brothers—Elds. M. Wellcome, S. C. Wellcome, and Dr. J. W. B. Wellcome, who came from Maine many years ago. We also met Elds. O. R. Fassett, G. W. Miller, and E. T. Himes, with whom we had been associated in the East in former years; and Eld. L. C. Collins, Sr. Rowell, and others of whom we had read, with other dear Brethren and Sisters whom God has raised up to spread the glorious news of Jesus' speedy coming.

We enjoyed the meeting very much and did what we could to proclaim the gospel of the Kingdom of God at hand. At the close of the meeting we felt that we had become acquainted with another circle of the dear Brethren and Sisters who are very dear to us, and with whom we hope to dwell in the new earth. We received many invitations to preach in various parts of the State, some of which we hope to be able to comply with, but others we cannot.

July 4, I attended a Sunday School association of Swedes, in a beautiful oak grove in Lincoln, and was introduced to Eld. Peters, the Swede Baptist preacher, who is doing much for his countrymen. He has a church of forty members, and a good Sunday School. He and some of his people look for the Lord to come soon. There I met two Baptist ministers of Garden City, and was invited by Eld. Rockwood, to supply his desk the next Sunday. I was ready to accept, and when the day arrived—Sunday July 9—preached to a full and attentive congregation, morning and evening, three Baptist ministers being present. I spoke from Rom. 8: 18–23—The groaning creation and restitution; and from Lk. 12: 3—The nature, location, and perpetuity of the Kingdom of God, and the importance of seeking it. After this visited Shelbyville in company with my brothers, and spoke to the people one evening, from 1 Thes. 1: 8, 10. Next visited Manyaska, in Martin Co., and preached one evening from Ps. 119: 105. This is in the western part of the State—sixty miles west from Mankato, and is the most beautiful prairie land we have yet seen. But few settlers yet, but it will soon be covered with emigrants.

Sunday July 16, held a meeting in a beautiful grove on the bank of Blue Earth River, in Shelbyville, among the stately cottonwood, elm, black walnut and maple trees. There are some faithful believers in this place who have just seen the great truths of the gospel, under the labors of Elds. M. and S. C. Wel'come. Our grove meeting was said to be the largest gathering ever held in the place. The people came from many miles around, and listened attentively while we preached the kingdom of God, and the signs of the times to them; after which Eld. M. Wellcome baptised three happy believers. It was a good day in the Lord.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

In the morning I went over to Brooklyn to hear Henry Ward Beecher. Plymouth church is but a short distance from Fulton Ferry, and the stranger on a Sunday, need only to follow the crowd to find it. The building itself is plain and unpretentious, and quite in contrast with its splendid neighbors. The chapel or main audience room is large but severely plain. Spacious galleries surround this room, and afford about as many sittings as are found on the floor. As early as ten o'clock the crowd began to pour in. There are eight entrances to the seats, four below, and four above. At 10 1-2 vacant seats were few and far between. It is one of the most compactly seated halls to be found. Chairs and extra seats are used in all available spaces. The opening services were very impressive and the congregation led by a trained choir seemed to sing with the spirit and the understanding. Mr. Beecher took his text in John 12: 43, "For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." The discourse was an essay on the love of praise, spoken and illustrated in Mr. Beecher's peculiar and inimitable manner. David Garrick himself was never more apparently in earnest, than the pastor of Plymouth church. His illustrations were happy, pertinent and effective. He speaks from an open platform with only a small reading stand in front. He never could succeed if boxed up in a fashionable pulpit. He revels in the perfect freedom of the platform, and is undoubtedly one of the most effective speakers and consummate actors of modern times. He overflows with vitality and good humor. He is as far removed from the cynic as it is possible for a man to be. Misanthropy he never wooed, and melancholy claims him not for her own. His peerless championship of popular rights, spontaneous sympathy for the peoples, genuine good humor, and ready tact, have endeared him to the masses, and given him a hold upon their affections second to that of no other man in the country. There are, however, two classes with whom he is in great disfavor, namely, theologians and politicians. A sad thing it would be to have a docter of divinity praise Henry Ward Beecher. He actually is not a theologian according to the orthodox pattern. He has little veneration and no love for Augustinian edicts and Calvinistic schemes. He is not apt to praise or defend the Westminster Catechism. He vitalizes and magnifies the issues of the present, but rarely disturbs the musty theories of the past. In his interpretations of of Scripture he is never or rarely dogmatic. His kind treatment of other denominations has exposed him to the harsh criticism of the bigoted, the sectarian and the intolerant. He has been accused of favoring almost every denomination in Christendom. And this greatly to his honor, since he disdains to misrepresent any sect or party, but delights in giving all a fair chance. He is a poor partisan but a faithful friend. He delights to talk about music, flowers, trees, birds, angels and little children. His ideality is large and his combativeness small He appears to be a man of few faults and many virtues. J. H. WHITMORE.

"HADES AND SHEOL."

I wish to notice Eld. L. C. Collins' late pamphlet on Hades and Sheol; and the Rich Man and Lazarus. This is an invaluable acquisition to Advent literature. It should be circulated broadcast over the country. Every preacher should not only have it for personal information and a book of reference, but circulate it in his region. The main fortress of orthodoxy, defending the doctrine of a state of conscious rewards immediately after death, is demolished, and the Pharisaic doctrine of all ages exposed; against which Jesus has forewarned his church—"Beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees."

This little work, together with Whitmore's Doctrine of Immortality, which orthodoxy is challenged to answer, should be sent every where. I can bear testimony that the second reading of these two works is even better than the first, and one is likely to understand the merits of the arguments of the writers to better advantage by such review.

O. R. FASSETT.

—We are arranging for new editions of both these works, and shall soon commence work upon them. At present we have not a copy of the first edition of Eld. Collins' work; and only the cloth-bound edition of Whitmore. We shall soon be able to fill orders for the former. The latter may not be ready before September.

We are also endeavoring to get Br. Sheldon's new work ready by August 19. tf

LINES.

Cheer up the heart, desponding pilgrim;
  Speak of the joys when Christ shall reign,
Preach the good news of coming glory,
  Sound his praise with loud acclaim.

CHORUS.

Fling to the winds your needless sorrow;
  Fix on Christ your wand'ring heart;
Speak of the joys of that fair morrow,
  When you and I shall never part.

We have walked in tears and sadness,
  While along the earth's highway;
And have prayed and hoped in gladness
  For the light of that fair day.

Forget your sorrows, cling to the promise;
  Hold to the banner in the breeze;
He will come on that fair morn,
  As foretold in the jubilees.

On David's throne in the Mt. Zion,
  With Christ, we will reign forevermore;
And we'll shout our trials over,
  As we stand on that fair shore.

A SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

BEING

A RELIGIOUS AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

BY GREY QUILL.

CHAPTER III.

When I was about twelve years of age the church in my native town conceived the idea that an increase of membership would be beneficial. Not that they believed in revivals, in the common acceptation of that term; for they repudiated the idea that any one could do any thing towards turning themselves: but they thought it right and proper to effect an arrangement by which they might learn whom God was disposed to turn, or convert, by his own sovereign will.

To lead this movement they procured the services of a middle aged man who certainly was not overstocked with brains. But if he was somewhat deficient in that respect, it was more than compensated, in their estimation, by a collegiate education and an unflinching adherence to Calvinistic theology. He was long, lank and lean, and on his vinegar face, so far as my knowledge extends, no smile ever rested. I am sure none ever did on Sunday. I thoroughly hated him from the first sight, which might be partly owing to the fact that I was well aware what kind of spiritual medicine was contained in his theological Materia Medica. But this feeling was doubtless augmented by a resemblance, I fancied he bore, to a picture I possessed of the devil.

However that might be, I gave him a wide berth, and no persuasion or entreaty could induce me to come into his presence, much less attend his meetings. They were held at the house of one of the prominent members of the church, and were, not inappropriately, called "Whispering Meetings;" for (as I was informed) the exercises mainly consisted in his passing around the room and whispering in the ear of each young person present. I was informed, also, that he usually propounded these two questions to them: first, if they loved God; and, second, if they thought it would be just and right if he sent them to hell there to exist in torment forever. If he obtained an affirmative reply to both, he thought it probable that they belonged to the elect; otherwise their case was considered hopeless.

Now I well knew if I was put on trial in that court, I should be obliged (for I dare not lie) to give a negative reply to both queries; so I did not think it best to put in an appearance, but let my case go by default. For I could not truly say I loved such a God as he professed to believe in, and I knew full well if the devil was my father, I did not yet love him well enough to be willing to take up my final abode in his sulphureous realm.

So the revival passed by and I was not among the happy (?) converts. There were, however, about a dozen that dated their new birth from that period in their earthly career. But, as I afterward heard an old member quaintly remark, "they were mostly still born."

This was literally true; for, though my associations with them for many years after were of an intimtae nature, I never, to the best of my recollection, with but two or three exceptions, heard them speak of religious matters (except in a financial point of view), or pray. Their "experiences" I did not have the privilege to hear; for such matters were attended to in private church meetings. But I understood it was in each case mostly written out by the converts, and read by the minister. So the only real evidence I could obtain of their change of heart was, that whereas before their conversion they used to sit by with me and see the church commune, and now they took part in the ceremony: with one exception, however: their introduction into the church, which was performed by having them stand in a row before the minister, and those who had not been sprinkled in baby-hood, were consecrated by that ordinance; after which all, by bowing, assented to each article in the church creed.

Some of my readers who are unacquainted with the condition of society at that early day may consider some of my statements strange, bordering even on fiction, for they cannot realize how it could be that I did not observe more of a change in these converts, inasmuch as I associated with them for years. For the information of such I reply first, they were all at the time of their conversion moral persons. The immorality and vice which now stalk at noon day throughout the land had not then showed its hydra-head, at least in that vicinity. Children were then brought up to honor and obey their parents, be deferential and mannerly to strangers,[1] and abstain from the very appearance of evil. And so rigidly were these rules enforced that they had almost universally, the desired effect. So when the young people joined the church, no outward change in that respect was observable, or indeed needed. Second, it was not customary in those days, in that church, for females to take any public part whatever in social meetings, nor any male members, even, but the ministers and deacons, except occasionally when some of the oldest of the members were called on to pray. These are the reasons why so little change was observable.

I am not aware that this revival affected me at all, except to revive in my mind the thought, nearly forgotten, that even, according to their belief, God would finally save a few; and I felt a little anxiety to know whether there was a possibility of my being among that number. This partially aroused me from my stupor, and I resolved again to attend church and listen to the preaching. I did so, regularly, but could obtain no light. And now, at this point in this true history, as my readers are doubtless most of them to a great extent unacquainted with the habits and form of worship of the people with whom my lot was cast, I think it may be both interesting and instructive to throw some light on that subject.

I will then give a brief, but true account of what in substance usually transpired in connection with public worship on Sabbath morning in my native town. And in doing this I shall give a correct outline of what transpired fifty-one other Sabbath mornings (and afternoons also) in the year, except in the coldest of weather, when the first item should be omitted.

[1] "Young America" was then in the womb of the future, and disobedience was, on any important point, a rare exception so far as my knowledge extends. Reverence for the aged was also deeply impressed on the mind of the young, and was generally life-lasting. Children were universally taught to "make their manners" when they entered, or left the school room, also to all adult persons whom they met in going to, or coming from school; and a disregard of this command would be sure to result in condign punishment (in most cases), both from parents and teacher. Their "manners" were "made" by the boys in making a low bow, by the girls in making a courtesy.

NOTES OF A DISCUSSION.

FOURTH SESSION.—FENN'S FIRST SPEECH.

The audience will remember that Br. Burgess was very exultant over something he thought he saw in my review of one of his proof-texts with reference to Christ having flesh and bones. I failed to see what made him so happy, and I could not see how he could imagine me going down on a cake of ice, from any such premises as he reasoned from. Well, I am ashore again at all events, and after him with a sharp stick to-night

The audience will remember that my opponent laughed me to scorn because I spoke of a right and left brain. I refer you to Gray's Anatomy for authority in sustaining my position. "He speaks of a right and left brain divided by the great longitudinal fissure. [He read extract, which fully sustained the claim of right and left brain.] I presume Br. B. will conclude to leave this item of physiology alone after this.

He says God's saints have not lost rationality, because they have died and gone to glory. Let us compare this assertion with Paul's reasoning, as recorded in 1 Cor. 15: 32. "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Ah! we see that Paul and my opponent are at direct antipodes with each other. Br. B. claims that the saints go to glory at death, and plainly contradicts Paul, who says they are perished if the dead rise not, and that his perils for Christ's sake are no advantage if the dead rise not. One of two things is certain: either Paul or my opponent is wrong. I shall leave my audience to decide which it is.

Allow me to notice a few examples of my opponent's reasoning on certain passages, and I think you will be able to see the fallaciousness of his position. "Godliness is profitable unto all things having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." (1 Tim. 4: 8.) He says the life that now is, is one of rationality and consciousness. The life promised as the result of godliness immediately follows the one that now is. It is not a little strange that Br. B. did not see that the language of the apostle forbids such a conclusion—"having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. Br. B.'s position is, that there is no life to come, but an uninterrupted flow of the life that now is, as a rational entity. You see that he proves his position by his own assertions. They may be quite satisfactory to him; but they are far from being authority with me.

Again he quotes Heb. 6: 18, 19, 20. "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth to that within the vail, whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus made an high priest, forever after the order of Melchisedec." Now that is a strange passage of Scripture to bring forward to prove that the spirits of dead men are "real beings." It is a very small part of Paul's letter to the Hebrews. They understood about the Aaronic priesthood; and Paul's argument to them is, that this was a type of the priesthood of Christ. And as the high priest went into the holy of holies once a year, Christ had gone into heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us, as our high priest. "And as it is appointed unto men once to die....so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." If Br. Burgess had read carefully the whole of Paul's letter, he would never have made such a blunder as to conclude a hope in Christ was a real being. It happened to be the hope that was an anchor, which entereth to that within the vail, instead of a real being that exerciseth the hope.

This will suffice to show you that when I say his passages are irrelevant to the question, I mean just what I say, and can prove it to be truth.

BURGESS' FIRST SPEECH.

The gentleman says he is after Br. Burgess with a sharp stick, and refers you to Gray's Anatomy for proof. Well, I do not deny the double function of the brain. I have been a physician, and knew all about that. I supposed the gentleman was talking about the cerebrum, and cerebellum when he spoke of a right and left. But enough of that. The gentleman has referred us to Paul's argument in 1 Cor. ch. 15. Paul says nothing about the spirit putting on immortality. The Bible no where speaks of the immortality of the spirit or soul. It makes no provision for the immortality of the soul: that is already immortal. Paul is talking about the body of man. Fenn misrepresents me. I did not speak of spirits having gone to glory. I said they were with Christ. [He said the victors in the Grecian races received their crowns as soon as the race was won or finished, and that it was so with the Christian.] I have never claimed that men received their reward at death. I claim that the saints are living in Paradise with Christ. I will show you that Fenn's doctrine originated in the pagan world. Epicurus and other Grecian philosophers taught this doctrine. Paine, Hume and Voltaire, with Dr. Priestly, an out and out infidel, taught these same sentiments. My fifty passages proving my faith are unnoticed. I have over eighty on my manuscript, and with this overwhelming amount of Scripture I have buried the gentleman completely out of sight. He refers to the passage in Obadiah, and says it matters not to whom it refers, whether Edomites or some one else: the facts are that they become as though they had not been. I think it makes quite a difference, whether he is speaking of their annihilation as a nation or as individuals.

FENN'S SECOND SPEECH.

I am surprised at the remarks of my opponent, relative to my citation from Gray's Anatomy. Saturday eve he laughed me to scorn for speaking of a right and left brain. Now he says he knew it all the time. From such statements we are only left to choose between honesty and ignorance.

He claims exemption for the spirit in passages where corruption is said to put on incorruption, and mortality to put on immortality. I think I can show you that it is the whole man that puts on immortality.

In 1 Cor. 15: 51, Paul says—"We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." Unless the spirit or soul is taken out of those who do not sleep, when they put on immortality the whole man will put it on. Hence the assertion that the spirit never put on immortality is disproved. But Br. B. attempts to evade this dilemma by saying that corruption and death are never predicated of spirit. Let us see if this assertion holds true. We read of "men of corrupt minds." (2 Tim. 3: 8.) He says that "spirit is the mind or reason of man." Hence the spirit is said to be corrupt. If spirit is mind, and mind is corrupt, then spirit is corrupt. Again he says death is never predicated of spirit. Has he not quoted several passages where the term soul occurs and argued from them that the condition of the dead is that of consciousness? Why has he done this? Because the question we are discussing implies that what is true of soul is true of spirit. So he has produced indiscriminately passages where these terms occur, and applied them to his position. Now if I can prove that death is predicated of 'soul,' I shall disprove his assertion that death is never predicated of spirit: or else he must yield the claim that soul and spirit are the same. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezk. 18: 4, 20.) Again; "He which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins." (Jas. 5: 20.)

He has repeatedly quoted 1 Pet. 3: 3, 4, and told us when he did it, that he was going to prove the immortality of the soul, by a positive declaration of Scripture. "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair....but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." What is it that is ornamented here? It is a meek and quiet spirit. What kind of an ornament does it put on, an incorruptible or immortal adornment. But this pertains to the ornament of the spirit, and does not determine the nature of the spirit itself. Hence it puts on incorruption, contrary to Br. Burgess' claim, "that the spirit never puts on immortality."

Spirit is applied to animals. Are they immortal spirits, and destined to live forever as rational beings? He says the spirit of man goes up, while the spirit of the beast goes down to the earth. The direction these spirits take when they leave has nothing to do with their nature. God's word says they all have the same ruach—breath, and I believe it. If they have the same spirit, what is true of one must be true of the other, so far as its nature is concerned.

BURGESS' SECOND SPEECH.

I do repeat again and again, and my opponent don't like these haunting arguments. [He then repeated his former argument on body being sown in corruption, and body puts on immortality.] I meet every one of his texts, and he gives mine the go by. Why don't he meet my argument on Lk. ch. 24? If Christ said a spirit had not flesh and bones as he had, is it not manifest that they have everything else he had? and he had rationality, hence a spirit has rationality, and every thing he had except flesh and bones.

If body and spirit are two things, they can be separated and one can go back to dust, and the other to God. [He then introduced his twentieth argument from his manuscript, since published with the title, Light.]

FENN'S THIRD SPEECH.

The wonderful display of rhetoric made by my opponent upon the appearance of Christ (the door being shut), perhaps should be noticed. His argument sums up thus: A spirit has not flesh and bones: they therefore have everything else that Christ had. And he had rationality; therefore a spirit has rationality. The grand trouble with this argument is, It is Br. Burgess that says a spirit has every thing else that Christ had, not Christ. But the argument of the Savior is quite the reverse of that. He might as well have told them that a spirit had nothing, as to have told them that they had no flesh and bones.

It is a little singular that the apostles should be so frightened at a spirit, if they believed in human spirits roaming around after the body was dead. They believed in ghosts, as many unenlightened persons of the present day do: but there is not an intimation that they believed these ghosts were the spirits of the dead. The ghosts they believed in were merely phantoms—appearances—and nothing in reality. Why should not people see spirits when they leave the body as well as to see them after they have been out a time. They have watched carefully for such a vision, but no one has yet seen the spirit depart. Hence they are unseen, and the ghosts seen are not human spirits, and cannot be referred to as evidence for the existence of the spirit of man between death and the resurrection.

Why should it be necessary in this enlightened age to use argument to convince you that men die, and are dead after they die. Job (ch. 14) informs us that "man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost and where is he. [Not where is the ghost.] As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. Oh! that thou wouldest hide me in the grave; that thou wouldest keep me secret until thy wrath be past; that thou wouldest appoint me a set time and remember me. If a man die shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer."

Why, Job, thou art beside thyself, or else Br. Burgess is wrong. This is strong talk for one who believes in going to glory at death. But when did Job expect his hope to be consummated? Let him tell. (ch. 19: 25, 26): "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and at the latter day he shall stand upon the earth; and....in my flesh shall I see God." Job had his eye on the resurrection as the time of reward, and I have the same faith.

Paul says (1 Thes. 4:17): "The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Paul expected to be with the Lord by way of a change or resurrection. Br. Burgess thinks he will be with the Lord by dying. It is a novel way to give a man a crown of life—"to kill him."

BURGESS' THIRD SPEECH.

If the spirit is not immortal now, then the gospel makes no provision for it becoming so in the future. The hidden man is to put on incorruptibility here in this life. I cannot see the physiological argument Br. Fenn does. [He here repeated his eighth argument, dwelling especially upon 2 Cor. 12:2-4. No new matter introduced.

MINNESOTA CAMP-MEETING.

Our third annual feast of tabernacles is in the past; and while a brief report will doubtless be of interest to the friends scattered abroad, it will also call to mind on the part of those who were present one of the happiest seasons ever spent in the tented grove, and, I may add, one of much profit.

The removal of the camp from Ottawa to Kasota, though attended with some disadvantages, resulted favorably for the interest of the meeting. Twelve tents were put up, and well filled with occupants, while the old Bethel tent gave shelter to quite a number not otherwise provided for. Twelve preachers were present from this State, and Br. I. C. Wellcome and his wife from Maine. All had a mind to work for the salvation of souls, and a revival interest began as the meeting commenced, continuing till its close, when a most solemn spirit rested on the congregation. Several new parties resolved they would start for the kingdom. These were baptised, and others would doubtless have availed themselves of the opportunity had they been prepared. I did not learn the number that found peace with God: but judging from the testimonies given in the social meetings there was quite a company.

On Sunday July 2, an extra train on the Sioux City Railroad brought an addition to our congregation of from three to four hundred people from Mankato, St. Peter and Ottawa. While some came to spend the day and pass away the time, others came seeking light and truth and testified to the reasonableness and consistency of our position, supplying themselves with tracts and books for further investigation. Good order was maintained and no one manifested any disposition to disturb the meeting during the entire week, day or night.

As the camp broke up we all felt to thank God and take courage while giving the parting hand. Sermons, exhortations, hymns, greetings and farewells are in the past; but let none forget the good resolutions made and their promises to be faithful as they returned to their homes. Let that neglected prayer-meeting be started immediately, and that family altar erected at once; and let the closet no longer be forsaken. Oh! that this may be a year when we as a people will not only grow in numbers but in grace, also; and show to the world by a godly conversation that there is power in the truth and that our hope is a sanctifying one.

At the close of the week as the Committe found the funds which had been raised to defray expenses were not sufficient they decided not to tax the brethren, but to sell the lumber which they had intended to preserve until another year. This paid up all the bills and left a balance to begin with at our next meeting, as will be seen by the

A NEW TENT.

As the Bethel has become much worn by service and so badly damaged the past year as to render it unreliable for future use in wet weather; it was decided to secure a new tent, and the proposition met with general approbation on the part of those on the ground, as will be seen by the following pledges, some of which were paid: Ruth M. Rowell $10; G. W. Miller 10; E. Nettleton 10; A. P. Butters 10; A. A. Gilbert 10; A. G. Lombard 10; G. G. Emery 10; W. H. Ketzeback 10; E. Bacon 10; D. Patten 10; L. C. Collins 10; W. Johnson 5; S. B. Smith 2; Sr. Scott 1; Sr. Lombard 1; Sr. Tilloton 1; Br. Brown 50c; J. Couch 1; Geo. Forsyth 2.50; E. T. Himes 5; Addie Himes 5; R. Winnegar 5; W. Winnegar 5; making a total of $188.50; being more than half of what will be needed to purchase the new tent. We trust that the friends through the State will subscribe the balance immediately. The brethren and sisters are all appointed to act as special committee in soliciting aid in this matter, by calling on yourself first, and then on others. Send in your pledges or payments to E. T. HIMES, Box 724, Winona, Minn.

P. S. It is desired that all pledges be paid at or before the sitting of the Annual Conference in January, 1872.

Darien, June 18th, 1871.

The report was accepted.

Reports were then listened to from the following preachers: Brn. Newell, Gove, Taylor, Whitmore, Miles, Fenn, Wendell, Low, Sergisson. Adjourned.

Friday 2 o'clock p. m. At this hour Br. Wm. A. Fenn gave the annual address before a large and attentive audience. To Adventists especially it was both interesting and encouraging. We are increasing rapidly in numbers and influence, and therfore we need much grace to keep us humble. This must be our aim; and "O Lord, give us heavenly wisdom," must be our oft and earnest prayer. From five ordained ministers and five exhorters at organization, five years ago, we have now thirty-three ordained ministers, one exhorter, one lecturer, and one colporteur. Nineteen of these were ordained either by conference, or at the camp-meeting; the rest were received from other States and churches—some acting with conference, a few independently. Six houses of worship have been built, three are building, and rising of thirty halls and churches have been bought or rented for regular meetings. One minister has been lost by death, and one house by fire. Five hundred are known to have been baptised by the ministers of conference, and probably the number is even greater. Two mission tents have been worn out in this time, and two new ones are in operation. One monthly paper is being published in New York City, and a large number of books and tracts have been published and circulated.

Saturday, 8 o'clock a. m., President in the chair. Session opened by prayer and singing. Election of officers the special order. After the balloting, the following officers were declared elected; D. Cogswell, President; B. P. Stevens, Vice President; Wm. E. Brown, Secretary, and R. C. Brown, Treasurer. The Board of Trustees were re-elected in body, with one exception, and are as follows: D. Cogswell, Dansville; Aaron Riggs, Lockport; John F. Westcott, So. Butler; John S. Beeman, Honeoye; N. T. Withington, Springwater; B. C. Simonds, Darien; and N. McCullock, Rochester.

The chairman of committee on new constitution submitted a draft which was accepted, taken up by article, discussed, amended and adopted. Adjourned.

Four o'clock p. m. Tent matters made the special order. Br. B. P. Stevens placed "The Lord's Tent" under the supervision of the conference, the same being accepted by vote. Also, by vote, Brn. B. P. Stevens and A. A. Phelps were invited to labor with the tents, one with each, each to secure a suitable co-laborer. Time was asked for a consideration. Br. C. Booth, of Fremont, and Wm. E. Brown, were requested to go with the tents as directors, or tent-masters. The positions were accepted.

Voted, That the directors be required to keep an accurate account of all receipts and expenses, and report the same at each quarterly session of the conference. Br. J. T. Ongley, presented certificates from churches in Blooming Valley and Rootville, Pa., and was received to membership; also J. H. Lutenton. Adjourned.

Monday, 8 o'clock a. m. Called to order by the President, and after prayer and singing, the resolution proposing the division of conference territory for quarterly meetings was taken up, and after much discussion left on the table. Br. A. A. Phelps accepted the invitation to labor with one of the mission tents. Br. Stevens declined, and afterward asked the release of "The Lord's Tent" for his own private use, which was granted by vote. Four resolutions were then passed, and filed with the secretary, "Whitmore's Nos. 1 and 2." "Low's No. 1," and Brown's No. 1." Adjourned.

Tuesday 8 o'clock a. m. Vice President in the chair. Meeting opened with prayer as usual. A letter was read from Br. E. A. Bowe, containing his report as colporteur. Accepted. Some other amendments to the constitution proposed, when it was unanimously adopted as a whole. By vote, the executive board were constituted a standing committee. The remaining time was spent in listening to the following preachers' reports: Brn. Ongley, Morrell, Wells, Blain, Hobbs, and Mrs. Jennings. A. C. West, delegate from So. Butler, also reported, when the time expired. Adjourned to private session.

Tuesday, four o'clock p. m. In private session—Vice President in the chair, the case of Br. J. Wendell, as charged by the Associated Press, was investigated, himself being present. Br. W. was unanimously exonerated from the specific charge, and received the following certificate, properly endorsed:

"To whom it may concern: The Advent Christian Conference of New York State, after examining the sworn evidence produced on the charge published by the Associated Press against Eld. Jonas Wendell, are happy to announce that the said charge utterly fails to be sustained. And, further, upon the confession of Br. W. of a possible, though unintentional impropriety, or 'appearance of evil,' that we most freely forgive him, and trust that God forgives him.

Wednesday, 8 o'clock a. m. Vice President in the chair. Applications were made by Springwater, Fremont and South Butler, for the next quarterly meeting. It was voted to answer the call of South Butler. W. J. Hobbs accepted the invitation to make the opening address; W. A. Fenn his alternate.

On motion, Mrs. L. M. Stoddard was unanimously invited to labor in this State. She was also received into membership, and received a preacher's certificate. W. A. Fenn and J. H. Whitmore were elected delegates to the National Ministerial Convention. Alternates: M. R. Miles and J. W. Taylor.

Voted, to supply the mission tent with boat, lamps, lantern, and oil can.

Voted, to allow A. A. Phelps to draw from the conference fund twenty dollars, with which to start the mission tent; after which it is expected the tent will be self-sustaining. Also voted ten dollars for tracts.

The ministers attending this conference have already been mentioned in the report of the Albion campmeeting.

AT CAMP-MEETING.

THE PREACHERS.

A camp-meeting is a poor place for an ambitious sermon. It may possibly secure a Church for an aspiring minister, but it will be likely to be a millstone to sink with its depressing force the higher interests of the occasion. Apologies for Christianity, defenses of the Gospel against modern theories, novel and doubtful interpretations of difficult Scriptures, "spread-eagle" sermons, high-sounding and finely delivered orations, all this class of productions, if they can be rendered useful in home pulpits, should be sedulously kept there. We advise our young brethren particularly to permit no temptation to induce them to bring this kind of material with them to the camp-ground. Simple scriptural discourses on the rudimental truths of the Gospel; rich but plain expositions of the broad provisions of grace to meet the whole wants of a sinful heart and a disciplinary life, and earnest exhortations to immediate penitence or to an unreserved consecration of the whole being: these are the pertinent topics for such an interesting and hopeful occasion as our feast of tabernacles offers.

The character of the sermon should not be left to the convenience or taste or ambition of the accidental preacher but the gift best adapted to any condition of the meeting, and the subject indicated by its moral state, should be selected with careful consideration in the combined wisdom of those having charge of the services. It is exhilerating to hear intellectual and eloquent discourses, but those that gather under the trembling ceilings of the forest temple need not so much inspiration as heart-searching. It not frequently happens that souls are pressed forward to grasp the full volume of the promises of the Gospel who have not even a clear persuasion of their discipleship, and have not heretofore brought forth the earliest fruits of the Spirit. The standard of attainment should, indeed, be raised high, but we must not create spiritual indigestion by feeding with meat when milk only can be appropriated. Too many modern religious super-structures are crowned with gilded domes while lacking evidently solid and symmetrical foundations. They are built upon piles, and are very liable, under the blasts of temptation, to topple over.

THE PEOPLE.

To profit spiritually by these occasions those that attend them should arrange their affairs so as to pass the whole week without interruption upon the grounds. Coming and going will most effectually quench all spiritual ardor. Provision for religious reading should be made, and the Bible should become a constant companion. Abundant opportunities are presented for personal service in the Master's work, and in doing the will of God the evidences of discipleship will be renewed, the baptism of the Holy Spirit secured, and the life of faith powerfully quickened. An era in the work of our redemption may thus be reached and entered upon, which will not only bring enduring peace to the soul, but greatly enhance our power to bless all that come within the circle of our influence.—Chr. Advocate.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 25, 1871.

EDITOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

There are many calls for labor, and I can supply but few of them. If I could multiply myself many fold, I should still have work for every hour. But as I can be in only one place at a time, I choose to go among those who seem the most needy, and least able to procure and sustain preachers of the word.

Those who wish my labors during the coming season will please give early notice, that I may arrange my work to the best advantage. Conferences, Quarterly, or other, who request my services, will please make appointments so as not to conflict with each other in point of time.

PRESENT APPOINTMENTS.

Topeka, or Middle Creek, July 25 to 30, as Brn. Linville and Corey may arrange.

After this I shall still have a few days to spare for labor in that region. Friends desiring my services may write at once to Columbus, Iola, or Topeka, Kas., or to Buchanan, Mich.

August and September appointments wil be duly announced. J. V. H.

The Buffalo Advocate has a timely editorial on "The Paralysis of the Public Conscience." It says:

> "All history demonstrates that average human nature cannot be confronted for any great length of time with the most doubtful transactions, if ultimating successfully in the coveted position and fortune, without becoming fearfully weakened and shaky. And this has been the result of the influence exerted by the example of the managers of our great business and monetary institutions. As we said at the outset, there seems to be a suspension of the functions of the public conscience in the presence of this gigantic evil. Now if this showing is a truthful one, it is not evident that the Christian public has a most solemn duty to perform? Can the Church of God—the acknowledged conservator of the public morals—neglect the work which the existence of these facts imposes upon it? It is imperatively required of it that it should proceed, by every means in its power, to arouse the conscience of the people on this subject. From the pulpit and press, and Christian men everywhere, let one loud and continued protest be offered against these contaminating examples; this prostitution of places of business trust to the corruption of universal business morals. Less than this the Church cannot do."

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

TUESDAY, July, 6. Came to Urbana, Ill., with my son Arthur, who is to occupy a position here in connection with the Railway. I could but observe the continued success and prosperity of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western Railway, under the direction of C. R. Griggs. Beside this, with Gov. Dennison of Ohio, he, with a few other enterprising men have projected another Road, from Decatur to Keokuk, two hundred miles, which is likely to be a success. There is no end to the material wealth and enterprise of this western country. Would that the spiritual interest and power was equal to the material. But this has never been in this world, nor ever will be, till Jesus comes, and then the "whole earth will be filled with his glory."

SATURDAY, July 8. Came to Loda, about thirty miles north, to preach the kingdom of God. I was welcomed by Dr. Foster, of the Disciple church here. He is an Adventist, and wants the truth proclaimed in this town. Br. Burr held meetings here once, 'mid opposition; and now they oppose my preaching, because I teach that the dead "know not anything," and that the wicked will die the second death and not suffer eternal life in torment; and, worst of all, that I pray, "Thy kingdom come," when I ought to know that it was set up the on day of Pentecost. They do not wish to be mixed up with such heresies, as they call them; and as far as they have the power, we are silenced. Dr. Foster owns the hall, and lets it to them for a small rent, and helps them to pay even this; yet when he wants a minister to teach his views of truth, they will not accommodate him in the least. Generous souls, these!

This evening they had a meeting, which was unusual; and the Doctor could but think it was to keep us out. I went to hear however. They had twenty-five out old and young. The discourse was dry and common place.

SABBATH, July 9. I was introduced to the Disciple preacher, to-day, who took no notice of me as a minister. Had Alexander Campbell been alive and present, or D. P. Henderson, I should have had a cordial invitation to worship and preach with them. But some of the young Disciples are like the Indian's tree: it was so straight that it leaned over a little on the other side. There being three other churches in town, I first went to the Congregationalist; but they had all gone to the Methodist chapel, to hear the Bible Agent's report. I followed them. Among other things, he said, that he sold a Bible to a Papist. The first thing he looked for, was the mass; but he could not find it. Then he looked for the confessional, and he could not find that. So he had to give up the mass, and the confessional, or, else the Bible. He held on to the Bible. I thought to myself, that the Agent and others might find themselves in the same predicament as the Papist, should they try to find immortal soul, and never dying spirit, in the Bible. There were about twenty-five persons present, with some interest in the Bible cause. Thank God for this.

At three p. m. I got the hall for a meeting. I put in one three sermons in a little over one hour and a half, on the signs of the times. I took a pulpit sweat in the intense heat. But my hearers appeared to forgot the heat, and gave me profound attention. I put some nails in sure places, and did a good day's work in one session, showing that the Lord is soon to come.

I found five or six old believers, from the East, who still hold fast to the faith and want more preaching, which we hope to give them at some future time.

TUESDAY July, 11. After a day at home, I took the cars with Sr. W. E. Wilkinson and child, for Kansas. Br. Wilkinson, our former foreman in the office of THE TIMES, lately paid us a pleasant visit; but he could only remain a few days, while Sr. W. made a longer stay. He now publishes a secular paper in Seneca, Kas., and is prospering. We stopped in Chicago, and enjoyed the hospitality of Br. Burr and family.

WEDNESDAY, July 12. Rose betimes, and attended to special duties, in connection with which, I had to call upon several business firms. (1) Messrs. J. W. Butler & Co, our paper-makers. The firm of Laflin and Butler having dissolved, Mr. Laflin and his brother have returned to their old stand on State St. where they keep an excellent assortment of paper. Our acquaintance with Mr. Laflin has been a very pleasant one, and our dealings have always been of the most satisfactory charater. We wish him and his partners great success.

But as I remarked I called upon Mr. Butler, at his new place of business, on Monroe St, where they now occupy three stories of the large store, Nos. 144 and 146; all of which is filled with every variety and style of paper, and all at reasonable rates. We continue our trade with Mr. Butler, and invite our friends to call and see his new establishment.

Many also will remember Messrs. Nowlin and McElwain, Jewelers and Watchmakers, on Clark St. they have dissolved partnership, and Mr. McElwain is agent of a wholesale and retail watch and silver-ware establishment at 103 State St. Those who deal with him will find him all right. I speak of him as an old friend, whom I can commend as a business man.

About noon I took leave of Br. Burr, and others, and entered the beautiful and comfortable cars of the Chicago Burlington and Quincy Railway, to connect with the Hannibal, St. Joseph and Fort Scott Roads, for Kansas. This is the popular route West, and is deservedly so. At the Cameron Junction, in Missouri, I took leave of Sr. W., who had met with kind friends who would accompany her the rest of the way home. I arrived at Girard just thirty hours from Chicago. Some parts of the way we made thirty-eight miles an hour. Here I was welcomed by Br. Munson, and others, and prepared for our meeting.

FRIDAY, July 14. Spent the day recruiting for the days of work before me. I am well worked down, and must take more rest soon, or I may break down. But duties press on all sides, and I do not know how to stop. I have to-day had a good day of rest on the prairie: a chance to breathe. No obstruction within a mile—of house, tree or shrub, and a fresh cooling breeze. I can see many miles over the beautiful prairie in all directions. In the evening we saw the light of the locomotive, like a star in the distance, fully a half hour before it passed us, near Girard. Level land this.

Just before I left Chicago, on Wednesday last, I called upon Mr. W. G. Holmes, No. 146 Lake St., an excellent Christian gentleman, and bookseller, who does a large business, in the best and most useful historical and theological works. Business done, as I was leaving he handed me a book and said "I think you will find it interesting to read on your journey." When I got seated in the car, I opened it and read the title page: Fresh Leaves in the Book and its History. By L. N. R. Author of "the Book and its Story;" "Life Work," etc. The object of the work is to give the story of the sacred writers, showing the connection of the different inspired books of the Bible, and their harmony. In reading I became much interested with the author's style, and in the theme. I had never seen some things in so clear a light, and the whole subject was invested with a new interest. It is a charming work; and gives a better understanding of the precious Bible, than any work of the kind I have ever seen. I could not endorse all the author says; but I approved more of it than of any work of the class I have seen for a long time. I may notice it again and give some extracts from its pages. The price is $2 by mail. Its history, and sacred geography, the story of fulfillment of the promises and prophecy, with illustrations of the habits and manners of ancient nations, give a fresh and living view of Bible scenes and characters.

SATURDAY July 15. Rode to Br. Freed's in Sheridan, ten miles for meeting. I found the grove all prepared, and spoke at 3 p. m. Had a good tender time: many spoke and confessed their backslidings. This is a country of backsliding. But few enjoy the life and power of the Spirit. But the waters moved some to-day and healing followed.

I spoke again at the eventide, when it was made "light with us in the Lord." And so closed the labors of the week.

SABBATH, July 16. A beautiful clear day, with a high but warm wind on the prairie, but in the grove we have but little air, with intense heat. Yet the people turned out well. I spoke three times, and administered the Lord's supper, assisted by Eld. Munson. I think the cause has received a new impetus in this region. And by the continued labors of Br. Munson, it will prosper. The brethren are scattered, and poor, but cling to the faith and hope of the gospel.

MONDAY, July 17. Rode thirty miles over the prairie. The weather is clear, but the heat intense. The cornfields look well, and the yield will be greater than ever before in Kansas. Wheat and other grains will also be abundant. Kansas will raise its own bread this year, for the first time.

Came to Columbus, and put up with Br. A. Sanford. The Advent Church here does not maintain regular meetings, but there are some living members. The churches who do hold meetings are very slimly attended, and religion is at a very low ebb. I was to have preached to-night, but there was some neglect about the appointment. I visited several families and spoke to them on things of the kingdom. We may well ask—"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?

A NEW PRESS.

For a considerable time in the past, as has been evident to our readers, and still more evident to ourselves, who have the work to do, a new press has been needed in our office. A few weeks since, while we were pondering how the desirable change could be brought about, we received a call from Mr. Thomas H. Senior, General Agent for the celebrated Campbell press, who made us such a liberal proposition, that we could but feel that there was a providence in it; and we at once accepted his terms for putting in a new press, sufficiently heavy to do our increasing work, and, also, warranted, with proper care on our part, to do the work well.

He took our old press, at liberal figures, leaving about $1,500 in cash for us to raise to make the change. Just where this was coming from we did not know; but we have already received $1,000 of the sum, presented to the office for this special purpose, and have no doubt that the remainder will be forthcoming in good time.

Our old press has done us excellent service; but was not large or heavy enough for our increasing business. It is, perhaps, our fault, that we did not when we first purchased a power press, have faith enough to purchase one like that we have just put up, sufficient for any probable exigency in our work. We had some faith, at that time; but confess that our progress since has far exceeded our fondest anticipations. At all events, we have now secured a press that can be run daily, if need be, with proper care and attention, for many years, and do good work, and as heavy work as we are likely to require of it. And in behalf of the cause we tender grateful thanks to the generous brethren and sisters whose liberal gifts have enabled the association to procure this beautiful piece of machinery.

And now, we inquire, shall their liberality be seconded. A few liberal souls have provided this untiring servant for the cause; will the many by a general response, each according to their means, furnish the material to keep it steadily at work? We intend that all shall have an opportunity to aid in the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom—those who can give ten cents, as well as those who can give a thousand dollars.

Oh! for a new consecration! Oh! for new zeal, new sacrifices, and the blessings of increase and spiritual growth that will surely follow!

HOW "THE QUARTERLY" MAY BE SUSTAINED!

A PROPOSITION.

A friend seeing our remarks in last week's TIMES in regard to the suspension of the Quarterly, writes us as follows:

> It were a thousand pities that the Quarterly should fail for want of pecuniary support. You say you will continue the Quarterly, provided five hundred subscribers at one dollar each are pledged for its support. I cannot believe that the Adventists of the United States will allow the highest representative of their periodical literature to fail for want of the small sum necessary for its support. It is worth far more than this to the ministry alone. I have my eight numbers bound in one volume, for which I would not take ten dollars if I could not get another much cheaper. If each of our ministers East and West would interest himself in the support of the Quarterly by getting subscribers for it, it might easily gain a circulation of 2500 copies. This would be a power in the land for good. For one I feel enough interest in the support of the Quarterly to pledge twenty-five dollars, or twenty-five subscribers for the ensuing year. Are there not one hundred, or fifty, or at least twenty-five others willing to make the same or larger pledges?

—We feel somewhat encouraged in regard to the Quarterly. We understand the Bible Banner for July has a good word for it, for which we are grateful. A few earnest workers can make the enterprise a success. Shall we hear from them?

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

SOUL-SLEEPERS AND SOUL-TORMENTORS.

The Christian Union of June, 28 under the head of Home Notes has the following paragraph:

> "A sect called Soul-sleepers is said to be making considerable progress in South-western Virginia. Their creed is that of the annihilation of the wicked, and the sleep of the righteous until the resurrection. The Christian Standard, of Cincinnati, publishes a private letter from a minister of the Disciples of Christ, in which the assertion is made that the same doctrine is making considerable headway among churches of his own denomination, particularly in Southern Indiana."

This statement is narrow in scope and vague in meaning. One might reasonably suppose, judging from the above authority alone, that the sect spoken of had its rise within the last few months, and was as yet confined in its operations to Western Virginia and Southern Indiana. So far from the truth, however, would such a supposition be that the above paragraph in The Christian Union might with equal truth have stated that the sect designated as "Soul-sleepers" was making considerable headway among all churches, and classes of people, not only in our own country, but also in Great Britain, and to some extent on the continent of Europe.

More than three hundred years ago John Calvin was so troubled about the views of "a sect called Soul-sleepers," that he wrote a fierce book against them, in which he gave their supporters the classic name of Psychopannuchists, which, in the vernacular of the Christian Union, is "Soul-sleepers." But if we would learn the origin of this sect we must go far back of Calvin's time. The author of the oldest book in the world was a "Soul-sleeper." He was neither afraid nor ashamed to confess his faith. Would you see the evidence of this, turn to Job 14: 12, and read these words: "Man lieth down and riseth not: till the heaven be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Moreover, we have the highest authority for saying that David, Isaiah, and Daniel were zealous supporters and believers in the views of this "sect." This authority is their confession of faith on this subject uttered in these words: "I shall be satisfied when I AWAKE with thy likeness"—David in Ps. 17: 15: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead"—Isaiah in ch. 26: 19: Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt"—Daniel in ch. 12: 2.

Coming down to New Testament times we find that Jesus and his apostles distinctly taught the doctrine of the sleep of the dead. Our Lord said to the weeping friends of the deceased daughter of Jairus: "Weep not; she is not dead but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead." So also in the case of Lazarus, he said: "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth, but I go that I may wake him out of his sleep." When he saw that the disciples misapprehended his meaning, "then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." (Luke 8: 52, 53; John 11: 11, 14.)

Matthew records the fact that when Jesus expired on the cross, "the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." (Mat. 27: 52, 53.) Luke describes the death of Stephen the proto-martyr in these words: "And when he had said this he fell asleep." (Acts 7: 60.) Paul speaks of the righteous dead "as those who are fallen asleep in Christ"—"them also which sleep in Jesus." (1 Cor. 15: 18; 1 Thes. 4: 14.)

It may thus be seen that the "sect called Soul-sleepers" have some very respectable names on their list. It certainly is not best for any Christian to be ashamed to confess a belief in a doctrine plainly taught by his Lord and Master. For my part, I rejoice in the faith of Job and of David, of Isaiah and of Daniel, of Matthew, Luke and Paul. I believe that souls sleep. If this belief entitles me to the appellation of "Soul-sleeper" I shall not deny the name. I choose however to be understood. I believe the inspired writers use the word sleep to denote the repose of the dead—or of human beings—or of human souls—between death and resurrection. The opprobrum, which in orthodox circles attaches to the term "Soul-sleeper," has, with him who understands the Bible doctrine of life and death, no power to terrify or dissuade. For, after all,

> "What's in a name? that which we call a rose,
> By any other name would smell as sweet."

Principles and not names, are alone worth contending for. Is it, however, just the right thing for orthodox speakers and writers to attempt to to stigmatize Christians who differ from them, by calling them Annihilationists, Materialists and Soul-sleepers? To single out some single tenet of belief most odious to the speaker or writer, and then to characterize a denomination as a sect of—naming the believers in the said odious fragment of doctrine—for the purpose of bringing that denomination into derision and contempt—to do this is neither ingenuous or commendable. I by no means object to the use of distinct denominational names. These seem to be necessary and are all right. What I do object to, is the wrong use of terms when applied to sects or denominations. This is not apt to occur where the terms used have among all denominations a uniform and settled meaning. For instance the term "orthodox" is generally understood as descriptive, in part at least, of the faith of those Protestant Christians, who hold to the doctrines of the Trinity, the natural immortality of the soul, and the endless misery of the wicked. What is peculiar about this term is, that we never apply it as descriptive of any particular sect. It has a class signification only. Again, in general use its etymological sense (orthos, right and doxa opinion) is entirely ignored. When we say the "orthodox"—meaning a class of theologians irrespective of denomination—hold to the dogma of endless misery, we never mean that they who are "sound in faith" hold this doctrine. We may mean quite the contrary to this, although we use a word which literally means sound in doctrine. For this reason it is unnecessary to adopt the precaution of some careful writers, who qualify the term by saying "the so-called orthodox." If now some one should say "If you are not 'orthodox' you must be heterodox or heretical in your opinions, and consequently your doctrine is not mis-named when we call it 'heresy,'" I should reply in the language of Paul, "I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets."

So also if we take the illustrative name, 'materialism' we shall find that it designates the belief of a class irrespective of denominational lines. As in the former illustration all who are not 'orthodox' are 'heterodox,' so also in this, all who are not 'materialists' are 'immaterialists.' In these general divisions there can be but two classes. There is this difference, however. In the former case the etymological sense of the words is ignored, in the latter it is retained. Theologically, materialism may be opposed to spiritualism, yet etymologically the words have no distinct opposition of meaning. No man can prove that the essence of matter differs from the essence of spirit, or that a spiritualist in the correct sense of the term may not also be a materialist.

Theologically, all who believe in the conscious existence of the human soul as an immaterial entity, between death and resurrection, may be generally classed as immaterialists. To be more specific for the sake of illustration, one might say that all Roman Catholics and 'orthodox' Protestants, no less than Spiritists, Swedenborgians, Mormons and Mohammedans are immaterialists. It by no means follows, however, that there is no essential difference in the belief of Mormons and Methodists, of Catholics and Congregationalists. So also to call a man a materialist does not indicate his specific theological status. He may be an Atheist or he may be a Christian. So the French infidel who believes that death is an eternal sleep for all the human race may as correctly be named a Soul-sleeper as the English Christian who believes that the righteous dead will sleep only until the resurrection. Without qualification, therefore, such terms are apt to mislead. Suppose for instance, I should write, and THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES should print a parody on The Christian Union's paragraph, something like this: "A sect called Soul-tormentors is said to be making some progress on Manhattan Island. Their creed is that of the endless torment of the wicked, and the conscious existence of the righteous as immaterial souls until the resurrection. From a private source we learn that the same doctrine is making some headway in other places, particularly in Southern New Jersey."

The question is, would such a paragraph be quite fair or ingenuous? Would it not be calculated to mislead the unwary reader? "Soul-tormentors!" one might exclaim, "why that must be a queer sect." "What a horrid name!" says another. "It doesn't seem possible that any sect should choose such a name as 'Soul-tormentors,' though I must allow it be very expressive." I once asked a venerable "doctor of divinity" to give me the names of some of the best writers among 'immaterialists.' His surprise at the word was great. "Immaterialists," said he, "why we are all immaterialists"—"all Christians are" he added. So each one in the charmed circle of orthodoxy may say, "Soul-tormentors! why we are all soul-tormentors," for surely all orthodox Christians believe in the eternal torment of of all wicked souls. So to balance the scales, and to show "what's in a name," let us write over against the name 'Soul-sleepers,' the equally vague, but far more expressive title of 'Soul-tormentors.'

MATERIALISM.

THINGS MADE NEW.

The fiat of the Almighty is, "Behold, I make all things new." (Rev. 21: 5.) He is able and will perform his sovereign decree, for he has declared, "Write: for these words are true and faithful." (v. 5.) "God is not a man, that he should lie, neither the Son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" (Num. 23: 19.) The object and purpose for which Jehovah is to "make all things new" is, to fit up a dwelling place, and create a suitable inheritance for his people. Aside from the banishment of all evil and the curse, and the restoration of the universe to the sinlessness, purity, order and harmony which existed before evil and rebellion had an existence, this is the main object, for he adds the promise: "He that overcometh shall inherit all these things [margin]; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." (Rev. 21: 7.)

Observe the declaration: "Behold, I make all things new." God does not promise to make all new things; but "all things new." There is a wide difference between making "all things new," and all new things.

This can be done, for it is done every day in the arts, and by human skill. New coin from the mint is made, often, from old coin; and it is as valuable as that made from new material fresh from the mines. New virgin white paper, upon which we write and send messages of the purest love and affection, may have been manufactured from old things: old paper, or old "paper rags," and is as beautful and good as that made from new and raw material. Who knows the difference? Who cares, if the execution is perfect? And cannot God transform old things into new things, and make them most beautiful and good? Who doubts it? Those only who disbelieve God, and "despise the inheritance."

God says: "Behold, I make all things new," by which is implied, yea taught most irrefutably, that old things are to be made new. And what old things will he make new, unless it be those which have "waxed old?" And what new things have "waxed old," which he has affirmed shall be made new? We read in Gen. 1: 1, 31—"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Here are material things made out of new material, God having created the material first, out of nothing, by his almighty word, and then made them into a new "heaven and earth." "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." (Heb. 11: 3.) And God can make material things so perfect and resplendent that his architectural skill can discover no fault, and his finished work he pronounces "good."

The "curse" has succeeded to this primitive state of creation in consequence of sin. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake," says God to rebellious Adam. (Gen. 3: 17.) "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate." (Is. 24: 5, 6.) "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now" (Rom. 8: 22), affirms Paul; and so it is to this day. And God, by the mouth of David, declared many hundreds of years ago respecting the earth with its "foundation," and "the heavens," that they "all of them shall wax old like a garment." (Ps. 102: 25, 26.) And by his prophet Isaiah, that the heavens "shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment." (ch. 51: 6.) And by his apostle he says: "The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also; and all these things shall be dissolved." (2 Pet. ch. 3.)

However, "all these things" which have been and still are waxing old and hastening on to dissolution, are to be made new, for a "restitution of all things," has "God spoken by all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3: 21.) Hence Daniel wrote: "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure: yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed." (Ps. 102: 25, 26.) Which is confirmed by Paul. (Heb. ch. 12.)

And Peter declares, thoug[illegible] "the heavens being on fire shall [illegible]solved, and the elements sh[illegible] with fervent heat, the earth also, [illegible] "the day of the Lord," "neve[illegible]ss, we, according to his promise, lo[illegible] new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." [illegible] 3.) What is this, but dissolv[illegible]ngs in the crucible fires of "the [illegible]y," and refashioning them [illegible]hen there shall be no mo[illegible] Rev. 22: 3.)

The earth, with its [illegible]g atmosphere and heaven (fo[illegible] called the firmament heaven [illegible] 1: 8), are by no means to be anni[illegible]ated, but renewed, and made the blest abode of the righteous, in which they shall dwell in Eden and Paradise forever. "The Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord." (Is. 51: 3.)

The old things out of which the new things are to be made, are real and material things; and things are substance. Of course, then, the new things must be real and material. Certainly, the new things made of the old things, must be substance as well, for it cannot be possible in the transformation that they vanish into immateriality, and become merely imaginary and ideal! Does gold and silver coin, when taken to the mint to be recast, come out of the transforming process mere phantom, ghost coin? or worthless "shin-plasters?"

There are the wildest, and most vague and extravagant notions conceivable respecting the future state, held popularly among the people, and even by professed Christians! And so far as the Scriptures go to reveal the future state, they might as well not have been written for the perusal or study of a large class of mankind; for every man seems to follow his own imaginings and fancies, respecting that state, independent of God's revelation. Heaven, in the popular conception, is a mere state, without locality, and consisting of no tangible materiality! It is a vapory—immaterial no-thing, "in concave sky," or "above the sun," and even, in the conception of many, "beyond the starry sky." Others make it still more distant, if possible—"Beyond the bounds of time and space," which certainly comports with the above idea of heaven being no-thing: for such an imaginary place—excuse me, "state," mu be outside of the universe itself, which is illimitable, and, consequently, no-where!

The saints, too, in the future state, are to be, according to these notions,

"Strange phantoms rising in mists of air."

And

"Etherial things on unseen wings,"

Constituted of

"Spirits white, and spirits gray," through "ether space," or o'er "ether plains" always wandering.

So, virtually, "Mr. No-body, goes no-where, in no-time!"

These absurd, nonsensical ideas are believed in by the men of the nineteenth century! by professed Christians with the Bible in their hands! Preached by the learned ministry who have studied, more or less, astronomy, to say nothing of theology! Ought we not to be ashamed of these things? Is it not time to burst the swaddling bands of the ignorance of the Dark Ages, and come to the light and knowledge of our times, if not of the Bible?

We would, if possible, disabuse the minds of men and Christians of these vague conceptions and ideas of the future heaven of the just; and how better can it be done than by continually setting before them the Scriptural doctrine of "the restitution?"

"Behold, I make all things new." (Rev. 21: 5.)

"That I may cause those that love me to inherit substance." (Prov. 8: 21.)

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." (Mat. 5: 5.)

"RAINBOW" NOTES.

We find the following notes to correspondents in the Rainbow.

Activity in the cause of error is nothing new. We wish the friends of truth were equally zealous.

"Whom the Lord chasteneth." It is for chastisement that ye are enduring. The chief work of the Church is not now, but in resurrection life and activity; and the followers of the Lord are being trained for that noble work. Discipline would be considered by us the greatest blessing if we thought that the Lord is thus preparing his kings and priests for the future age: but the very fact of preparation through discipline should prompt us to bear brave testimony now to our Lord and his truth. We are ourselves being made ready whilst we are beseeching men to be reconciled to God.

The character of God is the rock,—the foundation,—the cause of all that is blessed, hopeful, good, and glorious. It is the ultimate argument which covers and crowns all others. Even if lexicons and criticisms upheld the orthodox horrors, which they do not, we should throw them all aside in the presence of our Father's character, and say, No! eternal evil, eternal sin, eternal suffering, are absolute impossibilities in his universe.

Evil is temporary, and is under the control of God for beneficent purposes. The creation was made subject to vanity not willingly—not of his own will—but by reason of him who made it subject, in hope, When God has made that use of temporary evil which he intended, the creature—creature itself—shall be set free from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. The sons of God, however, must be manifested in this glory before creation gets free of vanity and bonds! The eighth of Romans is the Magna Charta of the universe. Read it, and then lift up your voice to God in a song of joy!

FROM A WELSH BROTHER

I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart for my brethren, kinsmen according to flesh—the Welsh nation. The gospel is hidden from them. [illegible] believe the language of the [illegible] in the garden—"Ye shall not surely die." They believe they are immortal by nature; and then they can't see for it through Christ. (The true [illegible] is, Jesus Christ 'brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.' 2 Tim. 1: 10.) And they believe when the dust returns to the earth as it was, the real man soars immediately to heaven, and is there in as good state as the angels are: and thus they lose sight of the second coming of Christ. The true gospel is, unless Christ comes the second time we shall all perish. But praise the Lord, every thing portends the day of God at hand. God presignified the world's destiny by the great image in Dan. ch. [illegible] gold, Babylon; the silver, Medo-Persia; the brass, Grecia; the iron, Pagan Rome; the iron and clay of the feet, mingling themselves with the seed of men and not cleaving one to the other, Papal and Republican Rome of the present day. The exhausted condition of this symbol presents itself to the eye and mind of every candid observer; and God is about to rise up, and smite and shake terribly the earth, and destroy all human governments.

The answer to the question of Mat. 24: 3—"What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" embraces several reasons, why I believe we are nearing the end of this world. (1.) False Christs were to arise. Not less than twenty-five have risen. (2.) Wars and rumors were to convulse the world. They have in almost an uninterrupted stream of bloodshed and carnage, whelmed nations in ruin, wrapped cities in fire, laid kingdoms and empires desolate, and glutted earth with purple gore, and caused a universe to weep, groan, and travail in pain. (3.) The Papal abomination has stood out its 1260 years in its pretended holy place and made desolate the saints during its domination.

The sun hath been darkened and the moon hath withheld its light.

The stars have fallen from heaven.

There have been signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars.

The next event in consecutive order, is "the shaking of the powers of the heaven," which doubtless is the fulfillment of what God declared in Heb. 12: 26-29; Is. 2: 19-21. It is when God "riseth to shake terribly the earth." Oh! solemn thought, yet true. The day of judgment is appointed (see Acts 22: 31, 22), and the Scriptures declare God's obedient children will see it approaching. (Heb. 10: 15.) Yea, more: the children of God are of the light, and it is declared that it will not overtake them "as a thief."

The Lord will come to judge the world, when faithful men are proclaiming it, and evil servants are saying in their hearts, "My Lord delayeth his coming." This fits the prophetic mould this very day. (Mat. 24: 45, 51.)

Amidst all the signs in mercy given as the precursors of the day of God, there will be those that scoff, and say, "where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Pet. 3: 3, 4.) The political, religious, moral and natural elements; consecutive, discursive, symbolic and chronological prophecies, all point to these days. Every thing seems to be in a transition state. Creation's doom is nigh. Earth's sun is setting amid darkness, sorrow, lamentation, mourning and wo.

Who will proclaim the alarm amongst the Welsh? Who?

Who will warn them to prepare to meet their God; to escape speedily. Soon the door of mercy will be eternally closed, and the unprepared will be lost, lost! Oh the value of the golden moments. Do not let them run to waste? Make them wise unto salvation.

Who will be instruments of sounding the midnight cry to my people?

What is the next sign we should look for or expect of the Lord's coming?

JOHN POWELL.

West Blue Mound, Wis.

From John Bower, Hinton Mich. July 4.

I arrived home safe from camp-meeting, and found the family well. Praise the Lord for protection. It is good to meet with the loved ones in our yearly camp. I don't know how we could do without it in this time of religious slumber. I know we are very near midnight—the virgins are so sleepy. The midnight cry will soon be heard—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh." The vision will then 'speak and not lie.' I think we must and will have a definite time yet, and it will be true. It will arouse all the virgins: but the foolish virgins will not see the [illegible], but will inquire for it when [illegible] too late. Those ready will [illegible] and the door will be shut. The Lord help us to watch and be ready.

From A F Dugger, Fairview, Mo

Since last writing, myself and Br. McClure have visited and preached in the following places: five miles S. W. of Stewartsville in the Chamberlain. S. H.—two discourses to good effect. Met father Stephen Chamberlain and family, who have been long in the Advent faith, and are in the full enjoyment of the blessed hope of the speedy appearing of our Savior to judge the living and the dead, and to set up his everlasting kingdom.

Came next to Ailanthus, on Grand River. Here we preached two days to good acceptance. Large and attentive congregations. At the close organized a church made up of a good, reliable element. Br. Blufford and L. Combs was appointed elders. The people of the town of Ailanthus, like the noble Bereans, are searching the Scriptures daily to see if these things are so, and many are coming out on the side of truth.

From thence to Albany, the seat of Gentry Co. Here the Christian brotherhood very kindly opened their house of worship, which we occupied two days, and enjoyed great liberty in presenting "present truths." As this was my first visit to Albany, I confined myself to practical matter and prophecy. On the Sabbath at 11 a. m., I spoke to a full house from Dan. ch. 2, showing that the kingdom which was to be set up "in the days of these kings," was yet future, and would be set up at the second coming of Christ. In the evening, I spoke on the prophecies relating to the Second Advent of Christ. We had a general turn out of the Methodist and Christian brethren, and I think a good impression was made in favor of the truth. I am invited to visit this place again, and am told that I can have either the Methodist or Christian house. It is [illegible] encouraging to see prejudice giving [illegible] and the light of truth spreading

Next to the town of Fairview, where I now write. Wm. T. Shocky, an age-to-come teacher, of the exclusive kind, was here last winter, and gave a series of lectures in the Christian church, on their peculiar tenets. The result is I find a strong current of prejudice which it will be quite difficult to overcome. Yet it seems to be giving way slowly. We have been here four days. Congregation small. There are about fifteen that ought to be organized into a church, and will be shortly. We occupy the Christian house, and those who came out on the first evening continue to attend, and the interest seems to increase. When the people find out once that we do not believe in abusing those who may differ with us, we expect a large turn out. Let us exercise the spirit of meekness, and live for the kingdom.

From G W Sprague, Prentiss, Me July 9.

Perhaps a few lines from the pen of a friend of the cause of our blessed Master might not be entirely worthless to the readers of THE TIMES. We are taught that it is a Christian duty to help and encourage our fellow-men, both far and near. And though we may not behold each other face to face, yet we may drop from our pens words of cheer to some fainting soul that may take courage and trust in God, and press on to the haven of eternal and promised rest.

There has been the past winter, spring and summer, up to the present time, an interesting revival of religion in this part of the country. Many have been converted and given their hearts to God, and a goodly number have been buried with Christ in baptism. There seems to be much interest manifested in the meetings, and more are making the inquiry, what must I do to be saved. May God bless and continue the good work which he has so gloriously begun. Many are living faithful, and looking forward with great joy to the glorious advent of our blessed day that is soon to be ushered in upon the world, and bring sweet relief to those who have long and patiently waited for their blessed Master. It is my prayer that the unconverted may be so wise as to accept of the great salvation that is so freely offered through the atoning blood of Christ, and gain, at last that haven of everlasting rest, and escape that awful day of fire and perdition of ungodly men.

It cheers my heart to hear from the good brothers and sisters that are scattered abroad over the land, and I hope and pray that they may stand steadfast and unmovable in the faith, and do all that is possible for the salvation of perishing souls. When I look around upon the world and view the great mass that are rushing, careless and unconcerned, down to eternal night, it reminds me of the great importance of professed Christians living faithful, and working earnestly from day to day, that they may be instruments in the hands of God in turning many from darkness to the glorious light of the Gospel of the Son of God.

If any who read these lines, feel discouraged or down-hearted, let me say to you, Take new courage; press onward in good cheer. The kingdom is ahead! We shall never gain it by loitering on the way. But let us take Christ at his word, when he says, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee!" and, "Lo! I am with you always, even to the end of the world." Oh! blessed thought! Oh! cheering words! If we lean wholly on those blessed promises which we find in God's Holy Word, and not trust in our own strength, we shall at last come off conquerors, and more than conquerors through him that loved and gave himself for us.

From Robert D Foster Loda, Ill June. 28.

The town bearing the above name has been the place of my residence for nearly the last sixteen years. It is upon the line of the Illinois Central Railroad, ninety-nine miles south of Chicago. Mine was one of the first families, and now the incorporate limits contain upwards of one thousand souls. The country around is filling up. We have quite a number of church edifices in town, and many church-going people, and have good right to claim as large a share of superstition as any town of this size in or out of the State. This town boasts a Baptist, Congregational, Methodist, Catholic, United Presbyterian, and Disciple organization, with three large chapels as the property of the several organizations, with ministers and services every Lord's day, except the Disciple church: they have no regular preaching.

There are quite a number of other sects that hold doctrines differing from each other, as they are, also, foreign to the doctrine of the New Testament, each one striving to make converts to their particular dogma, or to ostracism them from society or their sect if they do not subscribe fully to their views. They each and all desire expansion of and contractions of truth; also, to receive full fellowship in any of their several organizations.

About one year ago a young and talented minister of the Christion persuasion come from Lafayette, Ind. to this place, and delivered a very fine course of lectures in the Baptist house. Some were fully convinced of the truth, and united themselves with the church by confession of Jesus and being buried in baptism. It was a very rich intellectual feast, and the hearts of many were made glad. So soon as this began to develop itself, the leaders in some of the more popular churches began to fight against it, and did not in their opposition at all times keep truth on their side; and they manifested anything but a Christian spirit. The candidates for immersion were denied the use of the baptistry, and the house was closed against them. Some few months after this, the same minister came again and preached to crowded houses, but not in a chapel. But being so well pleased with the man, and the truth he presented, I gave to friends the use of my hall for him to preach in as long as he could make it convenient to stay. He came. Again the town was alive, and after preaching a few times I inquired of him if they had any creed or discipline. He replied they had none, but the word of God, as found in Holy Writ.

With these assurances and feeling the necessity of God's saving grace, through Jesus Christ my Redeemer, I with my wife and daughter made public confession of our belief in and hope through Jesus Christ, were baptised, all in one day, and became members as we supposed of the church of Jesus Christ, and expected that the Bible, the word of God, was to be our chart, without any further encumbrance, either to cramp, enfeeble, or stultify the beauty of the plan of salvation, or my right to an inheritance eternal, immortal and pure, in or on the earth, when he comes whose right it is to reign on the throne of his father David forever.

In view of this and many bright prospects in the future, I was at once made very happy in anticipation of the coming and kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I thought not of any unchristian doctrine coming in my way to mar my peace, especially from my brethren. But in this I was disappointed. A Br. Burr, upon the invitation of a good Christian brother by the name of Hodgdon, made us a visit, and announced his visit by letter in advance. The letter was placed in my hands by Br. Hodgdon, and I gave it to the brother who is mentioned above as giving lectures. He said that it was our duty to receive him and treat him as a Christian brother, and that we as an organization were not responsible for any doctrines he might advance, neither should we endorse him any further than he taught the word of God. (Br. Hodgdon is a believer and has been in the faith of the Advent people; but they not having any organized body here, united with the Christians, under Br. Jewell, and exhibited a desire to be counted in and with the Church of Christ.)

Br. Burr came, made his home with Br. Hodgdon, delivered quite a number of discourses, in the hall used by the Christian church. He only occupied the time that they did not want, and the treatment he received from the officers of the church, I am sorry to say was more unchristian than the Baptist church exhibited towards them. They did not follow the instructions of Br. Jewell, but treated him not even as a gentleman, much less as a Christian brother. I felt grieved and wounded, but kept silent as long as I could. And Br. Hodgdon, with heart overflowing with gratitude to God for all his mercies attempted to give vent to his feelings in words at our social meetings: and for this offence he is all the time called in question, if he utters one word about that scriptural truth, the state of the dead, or the inheritance of the saints, the coming of Christ, the composition of man, his mortality or duty to seek immortality, and other soul-stirring themes that make up the only hope of a Christian. He is informed that he must stop or they will not occupy the place they now hold, as leaders.

There surely is something wrong, and my heart bleeds in sorrow at such conduct toward a brother. I want the whole truth, nothing but the truth. This is what I long sought for, and nothing short of it will satisfy me. Br. Burr preached the truth to us, and he received as his compensation here treatment entirely unworthy the profession of those who dealt him such unkind and unchristian blows. I joined the church of the Christians with my eyes open, and I will stand upon its platform as then represented to me, though I should be left all alone: God as my Creator, Christ as my Savior, the Bible as the law by which I must be tried, and the Gospel by which I must be saved: this and this only shall be my staff and my stay.

I write to inform you that I am still in the yoke, striving for the upbuilding of the cause of truth. I preached twice yesterday to large and attentive audiences. Truth is gaining notwithstanding opposition from the various forms of false theory. The more Adventism is assailed by the opposing elements, the brighter it shines—like gold that is tried. I reviewed a discourse by a Methodist preacher against Adventism. He said that he hated the doctrine worse than any doctrine of the old Nick's. He contradicted himself not less than nineteen times, and at last wound himself up by quoting Scripture to sustain him in his burlesquing and ridiculing Adventists. He said that men have immortal souls, and then said that he could not prove that man was immortal, neither could Adventists prove that man was not immortal; and then he said that man i. e. the real man, was immortal and that he had proved it to a demonstration!

From A G Williamson, Tuscola Co. Mich.

We have an Advent church organized here, known as Grant church. There are twenty-six of us that have joined the ranks as followers of Christ, others in sympathy with us, who are willing to stand up for the Bible truth. We look forward to the day that the majority of this community will come out on the Lord's side. The church is in the best of spitits, are lively and are laboring to spread the Gospel in its true light. We have prayer meetings twice each week, Sundays and Wednesday evenings, and have a good turnout every time. Oh? may each one set a godly example before the world, and may all be faithful. Br. E. H. Durand is laboring amongst this people, and I trust doing much good in his place, notwithstanding the opposition of the other churches. But we who are looking for the coming of Christ should stand up for the truth, and not advocate false teaching and false doctrine. May we ever be faithful workers in the Lord's vineyard, and all meet around God's throne is my prayer.

From F H Kenney, Iron Hill, Iowa.

Our first meeting in the new Iowa Tent is in the past. Was pitched at Toronto, Clinton Co., July 1, and meeting held over the second Sabbath. Br. Dutton being sick, I went to assist Br. Buck, and remained through the meeting. Br. Moses Chandler also assisted us by two sound logical discourses. We had good attention, good order, but not as much effected as we had hoped. We leave the event with God. One was baptised and others will be soon. Br. Dutton is quite sick. Remember him in your prayers.

From John Hobbs, Knox Co, Ill. June 18:

THE TIMES is a welcome visitor at our house; for while it comes we shall not perish for lack of knowledge. I never have met with a class of men who so earnestly and honestly search for and set forth the truths of the Bible, as do the persecuted Adventists. And I will just say, Do not be discouraged, but continue to publish THE TIMES. Articles from the elders and brethren are like living streams of water in a desert place. While the majority of mankind have not the patience to investigate and see if these things be so, yet there are some who are not satisfied with the popular theories, who when they hear of the real nature of man, of the sensible doctrine of life and death as set before them in the Bible, and hear of that blessed kingdom which hath not an imaginary but a real foundation, it does them good, as it doth the upright in heart.

Cummins, W. Whitney, L. D. Whitney, J. B. Abbott and H. Wilkinson.

The following Committees were appointed: Business—J. Ferris, J. Bower, and A. E. Babcock. Devotional—J. M. Snook, and W. L. Himes. Nominations—J. Bower, C. Fox, and A. M. B. Graham.

Camp-meeting—J. V. Himes, J. M. Snook, C. Fox, E. P. Daniels and J. R. Preston. Finance—J. M. Snook and D. R. Mansfield. Ordination and License—W. L. Himes, D. R. Mansfield, and A. E. Babcock. To take charge of Devotional Exercises—Eld. D. R. Mansfield.

The Nominating Committee reported the old officers, who were elected as follows: Pres. J. V. Himes (Buchanan); Vice Pres't Eld. A. E. Babcock, (Jonesville); Secretary and Treasurer, J. M. Snook (Jackson); Directors, J. Bower (Lakeview); D. R. Mansfield (Buchanan); J. R. Preston (East Gilead); and Geo. Wright Jr. (Lexington.)

The minutes of the Quarterly Meeting were read and approved, except the vote with reference to receiving Eld. A. D. Abbott at the Algansee Quarterly meeting; about which the Conference decided that no person can be voted into membership against his or her own protest.

The Committee nominated delegates to the General Conference as follows: To the General Western Ministerial Conference—Elds. W. L. Himes, D. R. Mansfield, and J. R. Preston. Report adopted and nominees elected.

The following resolutions from the various Committees were received and passed:

Resolved, that this Conference will grant letters of commendation only to such ministers, whether ordained or otherwise, as will actively engage in the work of the ministry, according to their several opportunities.

Resolved, That the President and Secretary are hereby instructed to withhold letters from those ministers who fail to report by mail or otherwise to the Annual Meeting, or who habitually neglect the improvement of their ministerial gift.

Resolved That all churches which have failed to report to the Annual Conference for two years or more be dropped from the Conference Records.

Resolved, That when a person is presented for membership in this Conference, if one or more votes shall appear against them, their case shall be referred to a special committee for examination.

WHEREAS, The regular session of the General Conference would come in order this Autumn, and

WHEREAS, but few of the State Conferences have appointed delegates and made provision for their expenses, and

WHEREAS, The Publishing Associations, East and West, are working efficiently and harmoniously for the general good of the cause, therefore,

Resolved, That under the circumstances we recommend the Board of the National Conference to defer the meeting to another year, with a view to a full delegation, and attendance which could not be obtained the present season, especially from most of our Western Conferences.

Resolved, That we hold our next Annual Conference in Jackson, or vicinity, as our Committee can best arrange; and be it further

Resolved, That in the coming year we will make efforts for a full delegation from all the churches, and as far as possible for every church to have a tent pitched upon the ground; and further.

Resolved, That the ministers and churches arrange to be on the ground with their tents by the first day of the meeting, and spend the entire week, in the work and service of God; and that each minister and member of our body use their best efforts to carry the above resolutions into effect.

Resolved, That we recommend to all the Western Conferences, to see to the matter of appointing delegates to the General Western Ministerial Conference, and we recommend the officers of that Conference to appoint the next session to be held at the time and place that may be fixed upon, for the next meeting of the Western Publishing Association.

Resolved, That we are more than ever convinced that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. The fall of the Papacy, and the critical condition of the Turkish power in Europe, conspire to show that the destruction of the man of sin by the coming of Christ is imminent (2 Thes. 2: 1-7); and that the Turk must soon come to his end, and none to help him (Dan. 11: 45), when Michael will stand up, and they that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. The times and seasons also being confined to a small circle, indicate that the Lord's coming cannot long be delayed. "Let us not sleep, as do others."

Resolved, That the Quarterly Conferences are chiefly local in their jurisdiction; and that members and churches outside of the territorial limits of any District be received as visiting members only.

Resolved, That churches of any District may be transferred to another District, as a matter of convenience, at their own request, by vote of the Annual Conference.

WHEREAS, The subject known as the "Name Question" has been to some extent agitated among us; and

WHEREAS, The impression has been given out that we as a body insist upon recognition of our name Adventists as a prerequisite to membership; and

WHEREAS, This is a false impression; therefore, in order to place the Conference in a true light, be it unanimously

Resolved, That we still adhere to our original principle—the Scriptures the only rule of faith and practice, and Christian character the only test of fellowship and communion;—and that we will heartily receive to our membership those who may conscientiously differ from the body generally as to names, or other matters, provided such conscientious scruples are not of a nature to prevent the parties holding them from heartily co-operating with the body in its constitutional relations.

EXPLANATORY NOTE. It is not expected that any persons holding views differing from the body represented in this Conference will seek membership with us, with the intention of pushing their peculiar views, or urging their conscientious scruples (which, when consistently maintained, we heartily respect) to make divisions in our churches, or provoke unprofitable controversies in the ministry and Conference.

Resolved, That we view with satisfaction the growth of our sister Conferences of Ohio and Indiana, and that we rejoice in their prosperity, and will gladly impart to them of our strength by transferring to them the churches within their borders, but connected with our organization, wherever such churches shall desire the change. And the Secretary of the Conference is hereby authorized to grant letters of dismission and introduction to Ohio and Indiana churches wherever the same shall be requested.

Resolved, That churches desiring transfer to other Conferences should notify the Secretary of this body, that the same may be noted and recorded in the minutes of our Conference.

Resolved, That we recommend the following form of a letter for delegates from the Churches to the Annual and Quarterly Conferences:

To the brethren of the Michigan A. C. Conference—Greeting.

The following named brethren have been duly chosen to represent our Society at your next meeting.

Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to publish the above form in connection with each call for Annual or Quarterly meeting.

WHEREAS, The Fort Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw Railroads have kindly favored the friends living on their line with a reduction of fare in attending our camp-meeting, therefore

Resolved, That we appreciate the kindness shown, and hereby tender our grateful thanks for the same.

WHEREAS, The officers of the Jackson Co. Agricultural Association have kindly favored the Advent Christian Conference and its friends, in granting the use of their Fair Grounds and buildings for the use of our Camp-meeting, therefore

Resolved, that we appreciate this kindness and hereby tender our grateful obligations for the same.

The Committee on ordination reported Br. W. C. Hicks, of Marlett for Licenses. ~~Also, Brn. A. A. B. Graham~~ (of Flint), and Wm. Branch (St. Johns), for ordination. Report adopted. Ordination service took place Sunday evening July 25. This service was exceedingly interesting and impressive.

Preaching by Brn. J. V. Himes, D. R. Mansfield, J. Bower, J. Ferriss, W. L. Himes, J. R. Preston, Sr. Mansfield and others. The services were all of an interesting character, and much good, we trust, was accomplished. On Sunday four were baptised, and five added to the Church. Many have become deeply interested, and we look for the harvest hereafter. The Lord water and nourish it. We received kindness on every hand, especially from the officers of the Agricultural Association. Another year, should time continue, we anticipate seeing over thirty tents on the ground. Resolutions of thanks were adopted as follows.

Also to the church and friends at Jackson, who did all they could to make all comfortable

The reports of minutes of churches were exceedingly interesting. Speaking of their trials and their joys in their experience, and showing great gains in some localities, while others seemed to be at a stand, and some were on the decline, from various causes. The following churches did not report, though blanks were sent to each: Rockbridge, and Antwerp, Ohio; Lexington, North West Lexington and Deerfield, Mich. This is very much to be regreted, and detracted greatly from the interest. Some others neglected to report until they came to camp, toward the last of the meeting. Brethren this ought not to be. Please reform in future. The following eight churches were dropped from the roll: Dayton, (Berrien Co), Seneca, (Lenawee Co), Liberty and Lakeville, (St. Joseph Co), Jonesville, North Delta, (Ohio), Wayne (Cass Co), Pipestone (Van Buren Co).

Report of the Conference for the year ending May 31, 1871. Received 2 Ordained preachers, 8 Licensed preachers, and 22 churches. Total membership, 27 Ordained preachers, 16 Licensed preachers, 55 churches.

Report of churches for the year: Membership, 1200; dismissed, 17; withdrawn, 22; moved, 74; died, 10; baptised 173. Average attendance at prayer meetings, 651; Sunday school scholars, 586; average, 377; Teachers, 103; Churches not reported, 13.

IOWA.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Iowa Christian Conference held its Fifteenth Annual Session at New Hartford, Butler Co., commencing June 28, in connection with the Iowa Christian Mission Campmeeting.

Members present: P. S. W. Deyo, S. B. Ensign, Alonzo Raymond, A. A. Wilber, A. H. Eggleston, Ancil Durand.

Visiting brethren present: R. M. Thomas (old Christian order), J. W. Burroughs, Levi Lyons, James Skillin (old Christian order), Eld. Henry (Disciple order).

Br. Gildersleve not being present, we elected Br. R. M. Thomas, President pro tem. Whereupon we suspended the rules of the Constitution and proceeded to receive new members and churches. The following names were presented and received: C. C. Ramsay, E. A. Marsh, N. F. Eggleston, J. B. Talmage, M. A. Newcomb, Reuben L. Clark, A. F. Tichenor. Three new churches were received, namely: Tama City, Douglass, and Bear Creek, with an aggregate membership of sixty-one.

The following are the officers elected for the ensuing year:

Job Gildersleve, President; Alonzo Raymond, Clerk; W. H. Peck, M. A. Newcomb, J. J. Towsley, Directors.

Eleven churches reported, with an aggregate membership of 460, all alive and trying to let their light shine, especially on the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead.

Seventeen ministers reported; eleven were present, six by letter. Others did not report who are known to be at work in the gospel field. All make a similar report. All felt a lack of doing as much as they might. Hoped to see the cause of God prosper. All expressed determinations to try and do more the coming year.

Br. Reuben L. Clark was set apart for the work of the ministry by prayer and the laying on of hands, June 29, in the following order: Prayer by C. C. Ramsay; charge by R. M. Thomas; right hand of fellowship by J. W. Burroughs.

Br. N. F. Eggleston was set apart for the work of the ministry by prayer and the laying on of hands, July 2, in the following order: Prayer by J. W. Burroughs; charge by C. C. Ramsay; right hand of fellowship by Alonzo Raymond.

The invitation of the Iowa Christian Mission Camp-meeting Association to hold our next annual meeting in connection with their next annual meeting was cordially accepted.

Motion, That this Conference express their sincere gratitude and thanks to the Camp-meeting Association and people for their kindness and liberality. Adopted.

The report of the meeting will be found in the report of the Secretary of Campmeeting Association. However, I will say I think it was the best meeting we ever had on the old campground. Bless the Lord. There was such consecration to God. Many denominations were represented. The truth was spoken in the spirit of Christ. All were willing to bear and forbear to the glory of God. Peace reigned in all our borders. I can better express my thoughts in the words of Br. R. M. Thomas. He said: "I have attended conferences for over forty years, and I never saw such unity of action in all my life." Not a single negative vote was cast in all our deliberations. May the Lord help us to get better and better; and if Jesus should not come, and the Lord should spare our lives another year, let us try to have a still better meeting.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY, ILLUSTRATED EDITION.—In short, there is not an art or a science, in the whole range of arts and sciences, a knowledge of which may not be acquired here. But time and space both fail to tell of all the new and wonderful and valuable things to be found in this book. It should be one of the necessaries of life in every house. It is a library in itself, and contains the pith and the essence of all other books. With this and the Bible, we might go comfortably through the world, and find no great lack.—Independent.

MUDGE. At Blenheim, Oxford Co. Ont., July 1, 1871, Master Frankie, our nephew, and only son of Lewis and Matilda Mudge, of Lapeer, Mich.; aged 7 years and 2 months.

While we think of the sweet flower that is gone, we do not sorrow as those having no hope. We do not mourn for the dead; for we know that our great Life-giver will bring them again from the land of the enemy. Our little nephew suffered many weary weeks before he fell asleep; but, blessed thought, he sleeps in Jesus. He realized for months that he had to die. He talked sweetly about the Golden City, and his last words were for us all to be good and meet him in the better land. Oh! may his relatives and friends, that loved him so dearly, pay heed to his dying prayer, and may we all be united in the promised land.

The Times.

AT HOME.

Connecticut gives one divorce for every eleven marriages, Massachusetts to every forty-four.

New England had another slight earthquake last week. A Calcutta ship reports an earthquake in the South Atlantic, June 10. It caused the ship to tremble violently, and raised a heavy sea.

Com. Selfridge has returned from his Darien expedition and thinks the canal from the Pacific to the Gulf of Mexico can be built for $131,000,000. It is not safe in these days to say it will not be done. Some of us can remember when the Pacific Railroad was generally considered an impossibility; and yet it is built and in successful operation.

The frequency of river-side murders is becoming appalling. Day after day we have to note the finding about the piers of New York or Brooklyn, of dead bodies bearing the marks of violence. A more efficient system of river police is urgently required to check the lawlessness which at present seems to be almost uncontrolled, around the streets adjoining the water front of the City.—N. Y. Times.

The storm king seems to be raging all over the earth. Everywhere there are fierce storms, hurricanes and tornadoes. Westward on the plains, in Kansas, Iowa, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Foundland, the West Indies, in Asia, he has left desolation in his track; in some instances barely touching the earth's surface, and in others sweeping whole villages and districts as with the besom of destruction. But these are faint types of the last terrible storm earth shall see, which is even now impending.

If a European government should send a war vessel to New York Bay, and its officers should send out parties to take a survey of the harbor, with soundings, bearings, etc., it is highly probable that they would be "fired upon" with a hearty good will; and the verdict of the civilized world upon the intruders would be—"served them right."

An American Commodore recently invaded Corea, and without asking leave or license proceeded to take soundings in a fortified river mouth; and when the Coreans did just what the commander of the New York forts would do under similar provocation, the Commodore opened fire with shell and killed and wounded over two hundred of the ill-armed Coreans. It may be this is one of the signs of modern progress—of the approaching millenium. However, were we a Corean, we should be compelled to believe that so-called 'Christian nations,' believed more in the maxim—'Might makes right,' than in the Golden Rule. The Coreans used our shipwrecked sailors very wrong, no doubt; but shame on our government for acting as if two wrongs would make one right. Every Christian citizen must blush for his country.

ABROAD.

England.

Great Britain has been astounded by the last display of the energy and determination of the present ministry. The Lords having refused assent to the bill abolishing the purchase of officers' commissions in the army, the ministry applied to the Queen, who by a stroke of the pen canceled the royal warrant upon which the purchased system rested. England has seen no such display of regal power as this in many years, and all parties were for a moment confounded. The people generally stand by the Queen and the ministry; while the conservatives, or Tories, cannot conceal their rage. The result will certainly be increased bitterness of party feeling in England, and the event is doubtless a crisis in British affairs involving greater results than its authors even dream of. We shall see.

Much has been said of the fictitious narrative of the Battle of Dorking. It is a story published in Blackwood's Magazine, professedly told by a survivor of the battle in 1925. It is a battle fought by the Germans against the English, about a dozen miles from London, near Epsom and Malden, Richmond and Hampton Court, August 15, in the year 1875. He describes the unpreparedness of England, the suddenness of the attack, the completeness of the rout and overthrow. A few personal touches are introduced, and the old volunteer in 1925, is telling this story to his grandchildren, just as they are emigrating to foreign lands. France recovers, but England is "done gone." The first blow of Bismark smashes her all to pieces. Her colonies set up for themselves or go to America. Ireland is independent, and everything gone to everlasting smash. It is a pretty piece of pyrotechnic thunder, and may scare the Radicals a little, but not enough to give the country back to the Tories. Yet it must be confessed that the story is terribly suggestive to an Englishman in view of recent European events, and the present aspect of affairs at home and abroad.

The London Spectator laments the decadence of the monarchical system of Great Britain. It says: "There is in this country but one great political institution, and that is apparently endeavoring to commit suicide by asphyxia. The throne, as a political power, is dead. The Lords are dying, and if the House of Commons loses the respect of the country, there will be nothing left."

Poland.

M. Popiel, the new diocesan of Chelm, in Poland, has instructed his clergymen to preach against the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope, as it is to be used as the pretext for separating that diocese from Rome. Those who follow his instructions endeavor to prove that the Pope, in the pride of his heart, has made himself equal with God, and can, therefore, no longer be acknowledged as the head of the church militant. They also argue that those who acknowledge and reverence a man as God cannot claim to belong to the Church of Christ. These sermons are said to have made a great impression on the congregations.

Asia.

The famine in Persia continues, and a vast deal of cannibalism is reported. The Zoroastrians and Jews—being the weaker parties—are killed and eaten by the Mohammedans.

A terrible hurricane recently visited the district of Surat, India, destroying the nutmeg and other crops and causing damage to the extent of over £500,000.

A telegram to Lloyds from Hong Kong, 17th, announces a terrific typhoon which had visited Hiago, Japan. Seven steamers were driven ashore, and were nearly or quite destroyed. The place was inundated, and suffered considerable injury.

THE PROPHETIC TIMES.

THE TIME, TIMES AND A HALF.

The division of time around which the history (at least the sacred history) of this world revolves, is the Week. It does not, like other divisions,—the day, the month, the year,—depend, in the least, upon the motions of the heavenly bodies, but on the arbitrary choice of the Most High God. He chose so to order the progress of his creation, that, with its consequent rest, a week of time should thereby be covered; typical, as is generally thought, of a yet more august Week, of which each unit should be a thousand years. When he separated Israel to himself, he divided their time into three series of weeks;—the week of days; the week of years; and the week of sabbatic years (Lev. 25: 4, 8). The captivity in Babylon was ordained to be seventy years;—"that the land might enjoy its Sabbaths." (2 Chron. 36: 21:) And the interval of restoration, the "lightening of the bondage," until Messiah the Prince, was to be seventy weeks, of which each unit should be a year.

It is in harmony with this Divine order that the great period of Seven Times be considered as another august Week, of which each unit is a symbolic year, a year of years, 360 years. And, as the closing week of the Seventy Weeks (Dan. 9: 27) was to be marked, "in the midst" of it, by a portentous darkening of recognized worship, and a calamitous uprising of impious power, so this grand Week, the Seven Times, was to be bisected; and its middle point distinctly marked by the rise of that terrible mysterious power, so often, and with so various threatening features, portrayed by the Holy Ghost,—the Antichrist. Twice to the prophet Daniel, and five times to the beloved Apostle, is the duration of this enemy limited to the latter half of the grand Week, computed, sometimes as "a time, times and a half" (i. e. 3 1-2 years); sometimes as 42 months; sometimes as 1260 days.

No computation of this period can be presumed correct, whose commencement does not bisect the 2520 years; and any that does, particularly if in both its incipient and its absolute admeasurements, most surely derives a force from that fact.

This being premised, we have to search for the date of the rise of the Papacy. Its rise, indeed, was very gradual, covering many centuries; and unless the Divine Oracles have marked some distinctive features, by which its maturity should be defined, our inquiry is futile.

In Dan. 7: 22 it is written,—"And [he] shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time." Thus the giving of the Saints or the Laws, or both, into the hand of the horn, marks the beginning of the datum.

In Rev. 9: 2, the holy city is represented as to be trodden by the Gentiles forty and two months. In v. 3, the witnesses for Christ prophesy in sackcloth 1260 days. In 12: 6 and 14, the persecuted heavenly woman is in the wilderness, and is nourished there, for the same period. In 13: 5, the beast is empowered to continue [or practise, or make war] forty and two months.

Thus, then, we must ascertain at what period the Saints were given into the power of the Pope, whereby he began to trample under foot the professing Church, and to make war upon, wear out, and reduce to great affliction, and to invisibility, the true saints, the hidden church. And, also, when the Laws were given into his power, so as to set him above law, and reveal him the lawless one. (2 Thes. 2: 8.)

Again, in Rev. 16: 12, it is announced that the ten kings receive power as kings one hour with the beast. So the date of their emergence will shed additional light on that of his.

Who could give the saints into any one's hand? Only he who possessed them by Divine right. But God had given into the hand of the King of Babylon, as the golden head of the Great Image (Dan. 2: 38), the children of men, dwell where they might. Now the Emperor of Rome was his lineal successor (v. 40), and inherited his rights.

The sixth century of the Christian era saw, on the throne of the Roman world, the Emperor Justinian, whose long reign was rendered eminent by publication of a volume of Civil Law, which was adopted, even by all the nations among which the Empire was afterwards divided. The publication occupied the greater part of his reign, including the Code in 529, the Pandects in 533, and closing with the Novellæ Constitutiones, the first of which appeared in 535.

Throughout these the authority of the Bishop of Rome was exalted and aggrandized; and he was constituted supreme judge in all matters of faith and heresy. In 533, the Emperor wrote his famous decretal letter to the Pope, in which he "makes haste to subject and to unite to the See of his holiness all the priests of the whole East [those of the West being already subject]," and declares him to be "the head of all the holy churches." In the Novellæ, in which many new laws were added to those already in force, jurisdiction was largely given to the ecclesiastics above the secular judges; the supreme Pontificate was said indubitably to belong to the Old Rome (Nov. 10): the decisions of the four first Councils were to be received: the first place to be given to the Pope of Rome, the second to the Patriarch of Constantinople (131). Justinian declared his obligation to see the canons observed, with the force of laws, (137.)

Thus, every human conscience within the Fourth Empire being subjected, under cruel penalties, to the Bishop of Rome, and his authority being thus declared paramount, the saints and the Laws were together put into his hand, by one who alone could legally do either. And this was accomplished mainly within a period ranging from A. D. 533 to 535-6. And this was precisely 1260 years after B. C. 727-724, the date just assigned to the incipient captivity of Israel.

This, however, was but the incipient revelation of the man of sin. The power of the Emperor himself was passing away, and, in the field of the Western Empire, which was now to be the almost exclusive scene of prophetic vision, the Gothic hordes were already forming themselves into the ten kingdoms. For sometime the majority of these, though professing Christianity, maintained a stout antagonism to the See of Rome; but soon after the commencement of the 7th century the last of them, the Goths in Spain and Italy, and the Anglo-Saxons in Britain, submitted to the Pope as their head; and so the subjection of the whole ten was accomplished. By this time, too, all the ten had assumed the diadem as the royal badge: an important note of time, as the ten-horned beast (Rev. 13: 1) has diadems on his horns at his emergence.[1]

At this period the Papal throne was occupied by Gregory the Great, a prelate of many admirable qualities, who ever concentrated his efforts on the aggrandizment of his See. He has been styled "the last Bishop of Rome,[2] as if after him the overseer were merged in the sovereign. He denounced in the severest terms the "scandalous profanity and blasphempy" of the Patriarch of Constantinople, who had assumed the title of Universal Bishop; protesting that whosoever should do so would be the forerunner of Antichrist. A memorable verdict! For within three years after Gregory's death, namely, 607, his successor Boniface III. obtained from the Emperor Phocas that this very title of Universal Bishop should be authoritatively withdrawn from the Patriarch of Constantinople, and transferred to himself and his successors in perpetuity. And he had no sooner acquired it than he began to act upon it with the most arrogant assumption, lording it as absolute monarch of the church.[3]

This Emperor Phocas, himself one of the vilest of mankind, heaped successive favors on the Roman See, so that his reign (from A. D. 602 to 610) has been generally reckoned, by Romish as well as Protestant authorities, the epoch of the true rise of the Papacy. In 609 he conferred upon Boniface IV. the famous Pantheon, a temple which had been built in the reign of Augustus, for the worship of Cybele, "the Divine Mother," and all the gods. The Pope in the following winter[4] solemnly, and with great pomp, dedicated it to the worship of Mary, "the mother of God," and all the martyrs. Thus he publicly and authoritatively adopted the Pagan idolatry, the names of the idols alone being changed.

Other important circumstances there were, which combined to fix attention to this particular juncture as a grand prophetic era. It was in A. D. 612 that Mohammed began to publicly claim the character of a prophet, and to teach that heresy which was soon to attain such vast magnitude. If the little horn of the goat (Dan. 8) signifies this power, it is observable that its scourge is provoked by transgression [apostasy] (v. 12); and its rise is fixed to the period when the transgressiones [apostates] are come to the full (v. 23); expressions which seem to glance at the maturity of the foretold great apostasy of the west, which, therefore, in the Divine mind was now accomplished.

Again, the persecution of the poor broken people of Israel, by the apostate Christendom, which was to reach so terrific a hight, began at this very era. Hitherto the church had exhibited towards the Jews an aspect of at least comparative moderation; but, in 610, the Emperor Heraclius in the east, and in 612, the Visigoth King Sisebut in Spain, issued edicts of the most rigorous character against the Jews, as being "the authors of all the miseries of the empire,"[5] inaugurating the accomplishment of those fearful predictions to be found in Lev. 26: 36-39, and Deut. 28: 64-67.

Let us pause here for a moment; and see whereunto we have arrived. We have found reason to conclude that the seven times began incipiently B. C. 727-724; and that the incipient rise of the Papal power took place A. D. 533-536, precisely at their bisection. But the seven times began absolutely and finally seventy-five years later; viz., B. C. 652-649: and we have just seen ground to assign the maturity[1] of the Papal power to A. D. 607-612:—again precisely at their bisection.

Can this parallelism, which must be confessed to be highly worthy of our serious regard, to say the least, be carried yet onward to the completion of the times?

That the year with which the last century closed constituted a notable prophetic era, Presentist interpreters are nearly unanimous. Then "the judgment [on the little horn] began to sit, taking away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." (Dan. 7: 26.) And then flew forth the angel with "the everlasting gospel to preach....to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Rev. 14: 6, 7), founding his mission on the fact that the hour of God's judgment was come.

Now, this striking of "the hour" seems to point to some specific, recognized note of time; just as our Lord's phrase, at the opening of his ministry (Mark 1: 15), "the time is fulfilled," clearly points to the famous prediction of the seventy weeks.

Had any notable period, then, arrived, which might be connected in the minds of devout men with the judgment of God? A moment's calculation will show that it was just 2520 years from the incipient opening of the times of the Gentiles, B. C. 727-724; and just 1260 years from the incipient rise of the Papal power, A. D. 533-536.

Just at that very time sounded the seventh trumpet, the third and last wo, comprising seven vials, in whose successive outpourings the wrath of God on the apostate Roman world should be filled up. It was the "hour" of the first French Revolution.

Then "fell the noisome and grievous ulcer" of atheism "on the men who had the mark of the Beast;" upon France, "eldest son of the church;" always foremost in supporting the Papacy. The dreadful outbursting of democratic fury suddenly overturned all that was most stable in civil institutions; and full of hatred against Christianity, satiated its rage on that form of it with which alone it was familiar, the corrupt apostate religion of Popery. After several heavy blows inflicted by the popular assemblies on the church, such as the confiscation of all its property, the degradation, impoverishment, banishment, and slaughter of the clergy, the use of the Christian era and the Christian religion itself were publicly renounced. This was in November 1793; and it remained the law of France till Lanjuinais brought in his decree for freedom of worship in May 1795. In the following year a new power arose, and the scene of judgment shifts to the rivers and fountains of Italy.

But this judgment on the Papacy and Papal Europe, heavy as it was, was only an incipient taste of the wrath of God. The epoch which ought, if these parallelisms are not delusive, to accomplish that wrath to the uttermost, is even now upon us. The seventy-five years of interval between the incipient and the complete are even now in the very act of closing. The fated years!—the august week of symbolic times!—the far reaching, slow-revolving ages of Gentile dominion! are even now, unless these calculations are utterly baseless, dropping out their very last sands! We stand on the brink of a shoreless ocean, and in breathless awe ask if the events are still holding out their even race with the times; or whether they fail at the final issue. The FINAL ISSUE is not yet come; but does not every feature of the age in which we live confirm the accuracy of the calculation, and encourage the blessed hope?—(To be continued.)

[4] The actual date seems not quite certain. Boniface IV, assumed the Pontificate August 25, 608. Baronius says the dedication was on November 1; but this could hardly have been the November of 608, two months after his ascension. Platina mentions an act of this Pontiff in May before the dedication, which could not be earlier than May 609. Alcorn, in his Chronology, puts it in 610 but gives no authority.

THE THRESHOLD.

The most joyous thought the wanderer entertains, is of the time when he shall cross the threshold of his own home, and embrace the loved ones so dear to his heart. He dreams of the little cot where his children repose in quiet, and his heart is stirred with melting emotions, as in his fancy he visits the sacred spot where the objects of his heart's best affections rest, and he fain would transport himself thither; but he wakes to find himself still a stranger in a strange land.

The child of God is heir to a glorious home in the world to come. The chief object of his affections is making preparation for their reception at home; and being assured of this, he longs the more earnestly to reach the blissful habitation where splendor transcending all that he had witnessed in his whole journeying is to be shared by him endlessly.

In his journey, he thinks of Paradise lost, but still he hopes. After wandering long without any clear light relative to the time when he should arrive at home, his ever precious Friend sends him a chart, and words of comfort and guidance, to help him on the way, and to cheer his heart, when toil-worn, with the thought—"I'm almost home." He has called at Babylon, and marked its splendor. He has surveyed the entire coast of her dominion. "This is not my home!" he cries, and passes on. Next he calls at Medo-Persian ports, and casts about to see what landmarks he can find, moves on to Grecian borders, where he finds that he is well on the way toward his final destination. Soon Delphi, Thermopylæ and Athens are lost to sight, and on he sails to Rome. He tarries a long time here. He sees her power, he admires her greatness. He looks long and intently at her, until she becomes divided, and her glory is marred. Ten ports are now to be passed and he watches with care till they have all appeared to his vision. He examines his chart to see what next. He reads from his guide book to learn what other ports are to be passed on his journey, and he sees that a terrible power is coming up among the ten at which he has looked with so much interest—and he watches its progress—sees its entire course and asks: "What next?" There stands the word pre-eminently beautiful, HOME.

He ascends the hights, and looks around. He looked at Babylon—it is ground to powder. He sees Persia—it is chaff. He looks on Grecia—she is not. On Rome and her divisions—and the wind has carried them all away. Transported with delight he now crosses the threshold. The loved ones are all gathered together, and the joys of home are his.

* * * *

Brethren, we now stand near the threshold. All the great landmarks on the coast of time are past. We are about to enter the sacred portals of our everlasting home. Let us gird on our wedding apparel. Let us trim our lamps anew, and wait, till brighter glory than this sad world has ever witnessed, shall be shared by us beyond the threshold in our eternal home.

THE CHRISTIAN'S ATTITUDE.

"TO WAIT FOR HIS SON FROM HEAVEN."

"Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."—(Mat. 25: 13.)

"I stand continually upon the watch-tower." (Is. 21: 8.)

I stand on my watch-tower, Jesus,
Watching for thee;
For I know thou wilt soon be coming
To summon me.
I am up in the early morning,
Ere the sunrise,
Piercing the grey streaks of dawning
With eager eyes.
I am longing, continually longing,
Thy summons to hear—
"Arise ye! prepare for the wedding;
The bridegroom draws near!"
Oh, how shall I greet thee, my Jesus,
What joy shall be mine,
When, all doubts and anxieties leaving,
Thou claimest me thine?
What happiness just to behold thee,
And gaze on thy face,
While still in that visage of beauty
Thy wounds I shall trace!
And as sure as thou livest and reignest
In heaven above,
So surely thou never wilt sever
Thy Bride from thy love.

I stand on my watch-tower Jesus,
Looking for thee;
For I know thou art shortly coming
To summon me.
So I stand in the noontide gladly,
'Neath the hot sun's scorching rays,
To greet thee when thou comest,
With a song of loving praise.
Mine eyes with looking upward
Are failing; yet to see
One glimpse of thine appearing
Is rapture, ecstasy!
So still I'll pierce through distance,
Though clouds may cross my sky,
With this wondrous thought before me—
"I shall see him eye to eye."
No darkness then between us;
The veil shall be withdrawn,
And the evening mists have vanished
In the brightness of that morn.
So I'll bear the heat and burden
Of the present "little while,"
Till thou come and light my spirit
With the sunshine of thy smile.

I stand on my watch-tower, Jesus,
Longing for thee.
Thou hast said thou wilt come unexpected
To summon me.
The shadows of evening have lengthened,
The night wears apace;
And I'm watching, still watching, my Jesus,
For thy glorious face.
How long wilt thou "tarry," Lord Jesus?
Oh! when wilt thou "quickly come?"
Haste! "Hasten the wheels of thy chariot,"
I long, oh! I long to be home.
Thou biddest me "watch and be ready,"
With my lamp burning brightly for thee;
For, at "evening, or midnight, or morning,"
Thou mayest suddenly come and fetch me.
Then let me not weary or falter,
Though darkness my spirit enshroud,
This night must give place to the morning—
The "morning without a cloud."
"With patience," my soul, I'll possess thee
Leaving all to his wisdom and power,
Content with the message he sends me,
"Ye know not the day nor the hour."

A SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

BEING

A RELIGIOUS AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

BY GREY QUILL.

CHAPTER IV.

In the first place then it was customary to go to church early. Especially was this case the with all who lived at a distance, and, also, with the young people who lived in town. This was easily accomplished, for Sunday commenced at sunset on Saturday, and continued until day's luminary hid his shining face behind the western hills on Sunday eve. The day was regarded very strictly. No stranger or other person was allowed to drive his team through town on secular business;[1] and from morning till night, except the rattling of wagons over the roads going to and from meeting, the singing of birds, the lowing of cattle, and the hum of animated nature, silence reigned supreme. So rigidly was it observed by professors of religion, that they usually blacked their boots, shaved and washed before sunset on Saturday, that they might not desecrate the day by doing unnecessary work; and to cut wood or any such labor, whether it was necessary for their comfort or not, was out of the question.[2]

As early as nine o'clock (though service did not commence till half past ten), the wagons would begin to roll in from the country, and by ten o'clock most of the males who designed to attend that forenoon would be there. An exception being a few of the elder members residing near by, who would wait for the bell to toll, and come in with the minister. The reason WHY the people generally came thus early was twofold. First, the elderly people who lived in the country came early, because they wanted the opportunity to chat with their neighbors and get the news, talk about the crops, etc., and occasionally you would see two or three apart by themselves holding a private confab, which (if it had not been Sunday) you might have surmised related to some political matter; especially if it was just before the election.

On the part of the young people they came early simply to see and be seen, and especially to watch the young ladies as they walked up the wide sloping green to the church. When the bell began to toll all hands began to enter the meeting house, and, to their credit be it said, when the last blow struck (which was when the minister entered the pulpit), every person who intended to be there, with scarcely an exception, were in their places. When quiet reigned the minister would arise, which was a signal for the whole congregation to do the same. He would then stretch forth his hands and pronounce what might not be inappropriately called an introductory benediction, after which the people would again be seated. He would then read a long hymn which would be credibly sung by the choir in the gallery, the people standing up and facing them, meanwhile.

The minister would then again arise in his place and read a portion of Scripture (these divines were good readers), usually from the Old Testament, he would then again stretch forth his hands for the congregation to arise, when he would commence prayer. These prayers were my especial dread, particularly in hot weather on account of there extreme length, which was never less than twenty minutes. He would commence by telling God what a great and good being he was, and after dwelling a while on his attributes, would then inform him what a low, corrupt set himself and congregation were—"miserable worms of the dust," which it would be right and just to send to hell without ceremony.[3] He would then go on to pray for a variety of things I cannot particularize, but, especially, for the conversion of the world, "when the watchmen would see eye to eye" (which I interpreted to mean when everybody joined his church and obeyed him; you see I was very wicked); and there "would be naught to molest or make afraid in all God's holy mountain" (which I interpreted to mean when no other denomination could retain a foothold anywhere. They could not then in our town.

He would then pray for their own individual church, which he called "a vine of the Lord's own right hand planting" (I used to doubt that); that it might "be watered with the dew of divine grace," and that there might "from time to time be added to it of such as shall be saved." (I used to notice he placed a particular emphasis on SHALL.) He would then pray for foreign missions, etc., etc., to the end. During this long prayer the congregation were expected to remain standing.

And how do you suppose they employed their time? You may reply in looking at the minister. But you are very much mistaken. From the highest to the lowest (with rare exceptions), they were gazing around at each other, to see how each was dressed, or for any other purpose that chanced to come into their heads; and wo to the unlucky wight of a stranger if one happened to be present, especially if he chanced to come in during prayer time; for I am sure if he had not known to the contrary; he would certainly believe he had made a mistake, and instead of entering a house of worship had got into a staring school, where all the pupils had arrived at such a state of perfection that they ought immediately to graduate with the highest honors.

After the prayer was ended another hymn was read, and sung; and then the sermon commenced. This was always read from manuscript, and lasted at least one hour and was often longer than that, and was invariably as dry as the sands of Arabia. I never could tell much that was in it. In fact there was but one word that directly interested me, as a general thing, and that was the one which usually closes all sermons: and I watched for it as a sick man watches for the dawn of morning. Especially was this the case after a majority of the leaves of the manuscript had been turned, and I was thenceforth trying to take a mental measurement of the distance to the end. The tedious monotony of this service would have been in a measure relieved if I could have had a little pleasure of my own, apart from it. But the least movement in that direction, even to a whisper, was sure to bring the "Tythingman" to my side,[4] and thus make me a spectacle to the whole congregation.

But as every thing of a mundane nature must ultimately have an end, so these tedious discourses must close at last; and the long looked for word would finally be pronounced, and a sense of relief be apparent in all the congregation—except the sleepers. They took that opportunity to make up 'for a bad night's rest,' and sometimes became so engaged in that laudable and necessary employment that they nearly forgot to wake up in time to hear the concluding exercises.

After the sermon closed another hymn was read and sung, the benediction pronounced, and the people dispersed; some to their homes, and others to a convenient place where they could eat their luncheon and wait the intervening hour for the afternoon service.

MATERIALISM AS TAUGHT BY SCIENCE AND REVEALED IN GOD'S WORD.

In the preceeding articles we brought forward science as a testimony in favor of materialism. Science is an intermediate proof between two great mysteries, viz.: from whence came life and to whom does it return.

Science is impotent to answer these questions; but, thanks to an indulgent God, what man is incompetent to discover, he has seen fit to reveal. But for the Bible nothing would be known of man's origin. Science built upon man's observations and demonstrations, deals exclusively with the past and present. Scripture coming from him who is the "Alpha and Omega" of all things, speaks to us not only of man's primal origin but also of his final end. It tells us of a glorious future, to which the present is nothing in comparison, which awaits those who comply with the conditions upon which it may be obtained.

It is to the Bible as our only source of knowledge, then, that we turn to find out all about man's hereafter. Let us notice what the Bible has to reveal concerning the "spirit" and "soul." What is meant by the scriptural term "spirit?" Orthodoxy replies—"the intelligent, immaterial, immortal part of man." Scripture does not say so. Neither will the derivation of the word show it literally to have any such meaning. "Spirit," from the Latin spiritus, in its literal and primary sense means a breath. And often when the original Hebrew or Greek word is translated into the English by this Anglicized Latin word, this meaning attached primarily may be given it.

Is a breath "intelligent, immaterial or immortal? Chemistry says, No! It is unconscious, composed of oxygen and nitrogen, plus a small amount of Carbonic Acid, and is not mortal nor immortal, because it never lived.

Spirit can not be understood in a metaphorical sense, unless that for which it is used has points of similarity with the primary sense of the word itself. To say that spirit meaning literally something unconscious, material and neither mortal nor immortal, means, in a metaphorical sense, something immaterial, intelligent and immortal, would be as great a violation of the laws of Rhetoric as the personation of anger by a smiling countenance would be a violation of the laws of gesticulation.

This does not necessitate our understanding spirit to mean breath in every instance when we meet with it. The thing for which it is used metaphorically need not be composed of oxygen and nitrogen; but it must have the same qualities or attributes. It must be material, unconscious, and independent of life or death.

"Spirit" is used metaphorically in the Bible in almost every instance. Often for influence, as the Holy Spirit, and as an evil spirit. That an influence is meant by the terms Holy Spirit, and an evil spirit, we take as unquestioned, even by immaterialists. Here the likeness to the literal meaning of Spirit is manifest; since influence is an unconscious, and neither mortal nor immortal substance; and as to its materiality we know nothing to the contrary, while probabilities would seem to point it out as material, inasmuch as it is an emanation from a material organization, and it operates upon matter.

Again, we at times find it used for the mind or some of its passions, as desire (Ezk. 1: 12); will (Mat. 26: 41); and for thoughts. Here giving to mind the meaning justly belonging to it—"a collective turn for every act and operation of the brain, whether it be sensation, perception or conception," the metaphor is beautifully perfect. Mind, in itself, cannot be conscious any more than a thought is conscious. It can neither literally live nor die any more than thought can. And it is produced by a material organ, the brain; and for all knowledge to the contrary, and as far as suppositions will go to prove, is material: and the fact that it stands at the head of the product of breath especially justifies the metaphor.

Again, we often find spirit used to denote the state of one's feelings, as an "humble spirit," "a proud spirit," etc. The beauty of the use of spirit in this sense may be seen in the fact that when we are dispirited we breathe slowly and the inspirations are shallow; and when we are full of life and energy we breathe deep and quick. Says Shakespeare, that unrivalled reader of human nature, when King Henry V. is urging his men on to deeds of valor—

"Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide."

"A broken spirit drieth the bones." (Prov. 17: 22.)

"A wounded spirit who can bear?" (Prov. 18: 14.) The intimate connection between the metaphorical meaning of spirit here and its literal meaning is obvious.

We have noticed a sufficient number of metaphorical uses of spirit to show that in all cases the metaphor is perfect; that is, that whenever we meet the word spirit we must attach a meaning to it akin to its literal meaning. Now we come to the place where "doctors disagree." What is the spirit that returns to God who gave it? Popular theology claims that it is a certain conscious, immaterial, immortal element, equivalent to the "breath of life," which God gave to man at creation, and takes from him at death. If spirit here means something intelligent, immortal and immaterial, it is a very poor word to use, as it literally means something possessing opposite qualites. But why go to the trouble of censuring the rhetoric or logic of the Bible and its Giver when we can more reasonably avoid this difficulty. That the spirit of man is the breath of life we do not dispute. Perhaps not the breath of respiration, although we find air in connection with the earliest stages of life; but rather, the effect that oxygen has within the body—motion, life. That this returns to the God that gave it, within whom is the fountain of life, materialism does not necessarily deny. That it was this which Christ commended to the hands of his Father for keeping (Lk. 23: 46); that Stephen asked the Lord Jesus to receive (Acts 7: 59); that entered from God into the two prophets and caused them to stand upon their feet (Rev. 11: 11); that the body is declared to be dead without (Jas. 2: 26); that came again at Christ's command into the body of the little maid, and she arose (Lk. 8: 55)—all this materialism can agree with; but denies that is it an intelligent, immortal and immaterial substance. It is rather the life which is laid up in the great storehouse of heaven, the life that we have in Jesus Christ, which he will bring with him to animate our dead bodies.

Spirit opposed to flesh is a stumbling stone to immaterialists, in attemping to grope their way out of the midnight darkness of popular theology. Christ says: "Ye must be born of the water and of the spirit. That which is born of the spirit is spirit, and that which is born of the flesh is flesh." This they say indicates two natures in combination, and one a spiritual nature. Then they assert upon the strength of this, that man is possessed at both of these two natures. But stop. Christ says, "Ye must be born of the Spirit?" When? Suppose a man to live a life of rebellion against God is he then born of the spirit, and possesed of a spiritual nature? Certainly not. What is it to be born of the spirit? By repentance, placing faith in Jesus as the Savior of men, and submitting to the ceremony of baptism. Spirit and flesh here clearly indicate, the former, God's influence upon the heart, and the latter, man's natural evil inclinations. That which is born or produced by God's influence is like it heavenly; that which is born or produced by the natural evil inclinations, is evil.

Let us now consider spirit and breath in connection in order to more clearly show the intimate relation in their meanings. Turning to one of earth's greatest and inspired poets, Job, in that beautiful figure of speech in Hebrew poetry, called paralellism, we find that breath and spirit are almost, and in some instances quite convertible terms. A paralellism consists of two sentences connected generally by the conjunction "and," the first of which is the exact equivalent in sense of the last. Thus, Job says:

[1] The law was very strict on this matter, and there were men who made it their special business to see it faithfully executed. If a stranger was seen driving his horse through town on the Sabbath they would stop him and inquire his business; and unless it was of very great importance, would suffer him to proceed no further on that day even if they had to keep him and his team for nothing, which was often the case. And if he disregarded their mandate and drove on, they would follow him as soon as the sun had set, hunt him up, and if he would not pay his fine, prosecute him, if it took a week's time.

[2] This strict observance of the Sabbath, though perhaps unnecessarily rigid, made yet a favorable impression on the youthful mind in the right direction; and I am satisfied both from experience and observation, that it is far better for the community at large to err, if need be, in the direction they did then, than in the now too common one of almost total disregard of the day for religious worship.

[3] I often told the members if I represented their characters to others, or themselves even, in the same light they represented them to God in their prayers, they would consider it unmitigated slander and vile abuse. And they surely would have done so. But that was a part of their FORM of worship, generated by their view of the Sovereignty of God.

[4] These officers were appointed by the town to watch and punish, if need be, unruly rogues at meetings: and they were ever faithful to their trust.

"All the while my breath is in me,
And the spirit of God is in my nostrils." (ch. 27: 3.)

If any person doubts that here the first sentence is identical in meaning with the last, let them read the verses in the same chapter preceding and following this quotation. There the two subjects of the two sentences, breath, and the spirit of God, Job must have considered as one and the same thing. Again he says:

"The spirit of God hath both made me,
And the breath of the Almighty hath given me life." (ch. 33: 4.)

Here again Spirit of God and breath are used synonymously.

Speaking of God's interest in mankind he says: "If he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath." (ch. 34: 14.) (To be Continued.)

J. D. JONES.

"THIS HOPE"

In John 3: 3, we read: "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." What hope does John refer to? He refers to the coming of Jesus, for he says (1 John 3: 2): "Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is." All that have this hope in them, will, as John says, "purify themselves, even as he is pure." This hope is in harmony with the hope presented all through the Scriptures, for there is but "one hope" in the plan of God. What is hope? Hope is the desire and expectation, having confidence in a future event. The most popular hope entertained among the professed followers of Jesus, is, the hope of going to heaven at death. Such a hope as this is not in harmony with the word of God. Therefore it is spurious. In order to find out whether a hope is genuine or spurious we must examine its foundation. If founded on the word of God, it is genuine, if founded on anything outside of the word, it is spurious. A hope that leads people to expect to go to heaven when they die, is a false one; for it is not in harmony with the promise of the Savior, which is: "If I go away, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." (John 14: 3.) According to this promise, a hope entertained, that does not include the return of the Savior as the time (and not at death) when he will receive his people to himself, is unscriptural.

I had rather have a scriptural, a genuine hope, though it be unpopular, than to have a hope that is not genuine, be it ever so pleasing. This hope of the coming of Jesus and its attendant results is in harmony with the hope presented all through the Bible. Let us see: Paul in looking for the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, calls it a "blessed hope;" and he says (Phil. 3: 20, 21): "Our conversation is in heaven: from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his most glorious body." David expressed his hope thus: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." (Ps. 17: 15.) Job says (ch. 19: 25–27): "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself and mine eyes shall behold and not another."

It was at the latter day Job hoped to see God, and not at death. It was when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." When this hope is consummated, we shall be like Christ, having glorified bodies, being "clothed upon that mortality might be swallowed up of life" (2 Cor. 5: 4) "for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality..... then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? (1 Cor. 15: 53–55.)

This hope is supported by the statement of the Savior in Luke 20: 35, 36: "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead..... neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Blessed hope, this! Not that we shall go to him at death; but rather that he is coming to us, that where he is, there we may be also. I feel to say with Paul, this hope is a "blessed hope." It is my hope; and I would say with David, "Let me not be ashamed of my hope." (Ps. 119: 116.) With the poet I can sing:

"Oh! what a glorious hope is ours,
While here on earth we stay:
We more than taste the heavenly powers,
And antedate that day."

A word of inquiry. Have you this hope? Is it like an ancher to the soul? Has it entered into that within the vail? Does it hold us? If so, it will land us safely into the haven of eternal rest. The kingdom of God is accessable only to holy ones; therefore let us be holy, for without holiness none shall see God. Hold on to the hope a little longer, and life is ours, to enjoy forever.

WHAT IS PREACHED TO THE JEWS.

Henry Dana Ward attended the late anniversaries of the British Societies for Jewish Missions. He writes to the Advent Herald some of his impressions, as follows.

LETTER FROM LONDON.

I took up my pen to give you not the above personal matters, but some account of the anniversities of the London Jews' Society, and the British Jews' Society; one held last Friday, the other last Monday, May 5 and 8. The former is in the hands of churchmen of the establishment, the latter in other hands. I attended both with a willing mind. The former opened with a breakfast at 8 1-2 o'clock, followed by two very able addresses, and the public exercises at 11 o'clock a. m. At the close of the breakfast addresses the preacher of the sermon for the Society the previous evening was talking with the author of the first address that morning when I came between, and after a word—putting my right hand on the shoulder of the Rev. W. Dalton, and my left on the shoulder of the Rev. James Bardsley, —I said, "I came from America with a message for you and such as you; the Lord help me to deliver it." They took my address, and promised to send me a note of time, which I have received from one and happily answered in a conversation and breakfast of two and a half hours; to the other I have listened since three several times in addresses at the various anniversaries, and should he forget me at the moment it is because of the demands pressing on him. So instead of an account of the Jewish anniversaries you are again put off with personal matters!

The London Society is very strong in wealth, and character, and working. The British Society is more zealous. They are both doing what they can to bring the Jews to Christ, but in ways to make the Jews believe they are a people chosen both of heaven and of men to control the wealth and politics of this world, and to govern the nations upon the earth. This tickles the Jews and leads them to think highly of themselves, which all the children of men are naturally inclined to do, not excepting Israel. And this estimation of that worthy people is alike injurious to them and to the Gentile churches, and unjust toward God's word, which repeatedly declares that "he is no respecter of persons," and that "in Christ Jesus there is no difference between Jews and Greek." The speakers before these great Societies were various and some were not discreet—while exalting the Jews to glory for giving us not only the law and the prophets, but our Lord and his apostles; praising them for their fathers, and for their miracles, and for the incarnation of our Lord, and for the knowledge of his great salvation! What a mistake, to confer the praise of God's mercy and grace upon the instruments of communicating his love to sinful men! At the close of the exercises in the British Society last Monday, I took opportunity to say to Mr. Stern, that were I a stranger among a people of another race and they should publicly exalt my fathers and my nation in honor, and propose so high a position for my race in all generations to come, I should be puffed up. "We have abuse enough," he said "to balance it." Be it so; neither the one nor the other is good. The praise and the reproach are both wrong; and it may be the flattery is more injurious to the Christian Jew than the contempt is to the unbelieving. The conceit of aristocracy is sufficiently natural without stimulants to excite it. I am deeply convinced that the great expectations of a multitude from the conversion and restoration of Israel according to the flesh swell the pride of unbelieving Jews, and endanger the stability of the believing Jews. Their heart is set on the kingdom of this world, and they are taught to build their hopes on their fathers, and their house on the sands of time; all of which perish with the world, and are seen no more forever.....

Whether I shall return home at once or tarry here a little season, depends on the call made for my labors—which seems to be rising here and there. I am satisfied that misconception of the Jewish question leads many Christians to neglect the Old Testament in their study of the Scripture, and that I can do nothing better, the little time left, than to bring out those views which regard the whole Bible as much the word of God's holy mouth as the heavens and the earth are the work of his hands. Both his word and his work, to a superficial eye, discover remarkable blemishes: but the searcher of the Scriptures, like the searcher of this creation, constantly finds increase of testimony to the truth and goodness, the perfection and glory of the Lord God over all, blessed forevermore.

CONVERSATION.

The God of glory who lavished upon his children so great a blessing, that they are elevated thereby to more than royal dignity, demands the service of those to whom his blessings are sent, and at the same time gives them rules by which they are to be guided in the work he has given them to do. To live blameless, should be the desire of every child of God. In James 3: 2 we read: "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

Our conversation is made up of words, and these are either offensive, or acceptable, to God. Our words are the outbreathing of what is in us; hence the saying: "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Mat. 12: 37.)

God has given us power over our own will, and commands us to use that power for him. And although the obligations of his law are upon us and we must needs be subject to him, we are not required to be obedient without profit to ourselves; for the faithful word assures us that, "To him that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God." (Ps. 50: 23.) To share the salvation of God is our heart's most ardent desire; and it is to be our privilege if we "order our conversation aright."

But how shall we order our conversation? asks the young disciple. David the king of Israel, once asked: "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?" and answers: "by taking heed thereto according to thy word" Then we will appeal to the word of God for an answer to your question. In 2 Cor. 1: 12, we learn that our conversation should be in "simplicity," "with Godly sincerity," "by the grace of God." In Christian simplicity there is beauty as well as power. It does not partake of the doubtful, has no "white lies" in it, no opposites—yes, for no, and no for yes; but in sincerity, remembering that the great Teacher said: "Let your yea be yea; and your nay nay."

Again in Col. 4: 6, Paul says: "Let your speech be always with grace." Candid, considerate, kind. If indeed, you are disciples of Jesus, and your hearts are filled with his Spirit—as they ought to be—you will realize by the Spirit that is in you, when your conversation is pleasing to the Lord.

To those who are looking for God's Son from heaven inspiration says: "Be holy in all manner of conversation." (1 Pet. 1: 15.) And, also, that we ought to be engaged in "all holy conversation, and godliness." (2 Pet. 3: 11.) By this we understand that we are to engage freely in religious conversation; we are to talk of our hope, talk about Jesus' coming, and the glory of his kingdom, "exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching."

We may greatly enhance our usefulness by an improved course of conversation. If it is with simplicity, it will be easily understood, and not misapprehended; and we shall not fall into difficulties on account of ambiguous sayings. If our conversation is invariably with sincerity, it will soon be apparent that we are honest, and our words will carry the conviction with them that they are true. Thus our influence will be enlarged, and we shall become fruitful in the cause of God. If our words are holy, words of truth, words fitly spoken to those to whom we are sent, we shall indeed become the light of the world, and the salt of the earth. If our conversation is chaste, there will be no unsavory influence growing out of it, and we shall "be blameless and harmless the sons of God without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom," it is God's will that we should "shine as lights in the world."

We were not redeemed from our "vain conver[illegible]" with a sacrifice of trifling valu[illegible] with the precious blood of Chr[illegible] Jesus has purchased us, with all [illegible] powers, and has a right to control[illegible] to direct us how to control—them all. Let us not rob him of his glory by being wayward, or careless, or unkind; but each see to it, that his conversation be as becometh the people of Christ.

SOWING SEED.

Every individual of the human race may be well represented as a farmer sowing seed. Each is sowing seed of some kind, either good or bad; the seed of virtue or of vice, morality or immorality. We are sowing seed which may spring up and ripen into a glorious golden harvest, or seed which may bud with unnumbered woes and finally result in irrecoverable and irretrievable ruin to many of the human family.

We are sowing it in our every day actions and conversation, in the family and social circles. It is being sown in the school-room, in the pulpit, at the bar, and in the legislative halls. And those who are not sowing good seed, are sowing the seed of the evil one.

Stop and think—meditate before you sow. Those who are not for God are against him. We cannot serve God and Mammon; neither can a fountain send forth sweet water and bitter at the same time. If a house be divided against itself that house will fall. The farmer well knows the seed he puts in the ground in the spring-time, of what kind it is, before he sows it.

Young man, did you ever think when taking the first chew of tobacco, or cigar, in your mouth that you were liable to excite and cultivate a taste for the contents of the glass, perhaps a dram at first; which would naturally call for another, and so on until at last you fill a drunkard's grave, and subject yourself to the fearful verdict of a just God, who has said that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven?" Did you ever think when patronizing a saloon you were being fellowshipped into a congregation of people which are engaged in damning the world, instead of trying to save it? Did you ever think what kind of seed you were sowing when engaged in reckless and blasphemous conversation with your associates?

Young lady, do you ever think what kind of seed you are sowing when you are bowing at fashion's shrine, shaking your feet in the ball-room, spending your golden moments in acquiring a few ghostly stories of novels, and thinking how you may primp, paint and belt in order to make the best appearance in society, instead of acquiring useful knowledge, and trying to fill with honor the high position assigned you by our Creator?

We must not forget the great object of our creation. Our trials may be severe and many, but we must overcome them.

Those who are engaged in sowing good seed are quite numerous, but those who are engaged in sowing evil are more numerous. It is reported that we have 146,176 persons engaged in preaching the Gospel and teaching the various branches of science and literature. We have 565,640 liquor dealers, or four times as many as the former classes. The United States have about ten saloons to one church. Our little city, Madison, Indiana, has 75 saloons to about 20 churches. A sad, very sad picture.

Fathers, mothers, young and old, you must bear your part in this work. And "he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 1, 1871.

THE Independent finds a peace-token in the fact that Sharp's Rifle Works have been leased for a Sewing Machine factory. How about the Remingtons? Is not the real reason why the Rifle works are closed, that Sharp's is giving way to improved styles of arms?

THE Emperor of Germany uses no tobacco. We wish we could say as much, truthfully, of every Adventist. It is generally admitted to be a bad habit. Had you not better follow the Emperor's example, brother, and let it alone? How many papers would your year's tobacco money pay for? Do you pay as much for the cause of God, as for it?

DR. NEWMAN of Washington has been writing a letter to Iowa, to the effect that all good Methodists ought to help reelect a certain officer who is also a Methodist. Which is Methodism to be—a religious sect? or a political party? Surely there are unmistakable symptoms of "a fall from grace." It is but justice, however, to say that the best Methodist journals strongly denounce this meddling with politics.

'A POCKET edition of heaven and hell' is the somewhat startling announcement in a Swedenborgian paper. It has no reference to the idea favorably received in orthodox circles, that every man contains within himself his own heaven or hell; but refers to a work with that title, by the founder of the so-called New Jerusalem Church.

THE English society for promoting Christian knowledge has published a theological housekeeper's companion. It not only tells how to make cakes and pastry, but also advises vaccination and infant sprinkling. The religious rite, it is urged, should take place at an early moment; for by having your child baptised, says the manual, you make it a child of God and an inheritor of eternal life! Pretty strong ritualism that.

IN a late discourse Andrew Bonar said,—and there is food for thought in the remark:

> "There was a gentleman who could never agree with his friend on the subject of assurance, until, having studied much about the second coming of our Lord, he came one day and said to his friend, 'I have actually found assurance whilst thinking of the Savior's return.'"

—Others, many others, could truthfully bear the same testimony.

THE Independent says Prof. (now Pres.) Porter, of Yale, "scouts the idea and would hardly listen to proof that mental action could be one of the forces that are in corelation with heat and motion."

The idea that the earth travels around the sun was once scouted by very eminent men in their day. We believe, however, that the fact has come to be quite generally admitted.

WE are glad that the seeds of truth have been sown in the extreme West. California has heard the sound of the gospel of the kingdom, and at intermediate places across the great plains, papers, books, and tracts are circulated by brethren who have settled in Montana, Colorado, Nevada, California and Oregon, and other States and Territories. They are only a few, but if faithful, who can tell what results may follow? We extend to them a word of cheer, and will do all in our power to aid them.

BR. WHITNEY'S work in West Virginia is likely to be, indeed is well heralded. The item about the new sect called 'soul-sleepers' is traveling through the religious and secular press. The 'new sect' is simply the membership of an Advent Conference, that's all. May their growth exceed the worst fears of their opponents.—By the way don't overlook Br. Whitmore's caustic article, last week on 'soul-sleepers' and 'soul tormentors,' suggested by the above mentioned item. It is decidedly rich.

BARTLETT and some other immaterialists have sent their followers down into Egypt for help against the materialist forces But Macmillan's Magazine proposes that they apply to Greece. In other words it advises the general study of Plato to counteract the growth of materialism. It is often roundly asserted that the Bible teaches immaterialism 'on every page.' Why wouldn't that be a better text- [illegible] than Plato, even? It certainly would be [illegible] the assertion were true. The trouble is, it is not true. Hence the appeal to Plato and to Egypt.

IT is the long meeting rather than long sermon that tires the people, is the sensible suggestion made by Br. Leslie. He proposes that less time be taken in preliminaries, when a lengthy discourse is on the docket. We fear the trouble is, that those who have 'the gift of continuance,' display it in reading, prayer and singing as well as in preaching. There can be no rule laid down on this subject. Preachers who have common sense will learn wisdom from experience and observation—and the frequent strong hints in the papers!

BR. BOLTON affirms that Adventists in teaching 'dwell mainly on what man will be after death.' He also says that Winebrennarians dwell 'on what man must be in order to a happy future, allowing the future to take care of itself.' To which we reply that this last is a very slipshod way of preaching, with no Scriptural or apostolic precedent; while the former embraces the very essence of the gospel, which is the offer of future, eternal life. 'I have set before you life and death,' said Jehovah. The Winebrennarian brethren set before their hearers happiness and misery, and call that 'letting the future take care of itself.

But if Br. B. means that we dwell on the state of man in death, and ignore the necessity of conversion, and change of heart, we fear he is wilfully pandering to prejudice: he has seen enough of us to know better.

A WRITER in the Church Advocate says Adventists are divided among themselves. In the same journal we find in one column an essay of a Winebrennarian brother who attempts to prove that Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem, and the judgment is going on now, and 'souls pass over—into glory or its opposite we suppose—every day;' and in the next column we find a jubilant report of how another brother of the same order, effectually used up a Swedenborgian who had troubled the church with precisely those very notions, which are roundly denounced as 'heresy.' There are also other indications that if the Winebrennarians grow and thrive, they will suffer from 'splits' like all other sects. There is no help for it, and they need not boast over others.

AN English journal says speaking of its 'heathens at home:'

> A lad of fifteen had been brought before the city of London Magistrates on a charge of stealing. The ordinary of Newgate described him as "the most deplorable specimen of ignorance I have met with in my experience. He cannot read or write; does not know what religious persuasion he is of, nor does he even know that there is such a thing as the Christian religion. He is without friends. What must become of him is not difficult to foretell, unless he is placed in some institution."

—The immense mental powers of Webster, Cuvier, and other men of like intellectual caliber, are often cited as proofs of the immortality of the soul." How great mental capacity affects the argument is not over clear: but we simply cite the above case to inquire what bearing it has on the controversy. If great men are all immortal, and we know it by their gigantic intellect, what about the class of which this youth is a sample: are these all immortal?

A LATE writer, who calls sprinkling baptism, relates the following anecdote, concerning two young ladies whom he designed to sprinkle, but was hindered:

> Judge of my dismay when I observed, on the head of each a chignon of the modern and enormous pattern now in vogue, covering, with a two-inch thickness of false hair, the top and back of their head from forehead to neck! The consequence was, that when they bowed before the font, there was not a part of their bodies that could be touched with the waters of baptism. It was too late then and there to require them to remove these obstacles to the proper administration of the sacrament, and so I proceeded with the service and baptised, not these two young women, but their chignons, for I do not believe that a drop of water touched their persons. I confess to a feeling of indignation which was out of place at so holy a time, but it was of a holy sort, that so important an ordinance should be turned into a mockery by the unsightly customs and fashions of the day.

AN astute correspondent of the Tribun writes to that journal from Northampton, Mass., after a visit to the burying ground, among other things, the following sentence;

> A preacher said not long ago, that he had never seen on any tombstone an inscription testifying to the blissfulness of death; but now as I passed along, these words caught my eye:
> "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness.

—Could anything be more stupid? A passage written by an inspired pen some thousands of years ago in reference to the resurrection, and copied as an hopeful epitaph by a modern Christian, is interpreted by a still more modern observer to mean "the blissfulness of death:" just exactly the opposite of the true sense—which is the satisfying blissfulness of coming to life. Oh! immaterialism! The prophet's wo is upon thee; for thou hast turned the word of God "upside down." (Is. 29: 16.)

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

KANSAS TOUR.

TUESDAY, July 17. Left Columbus for Oswego, via Fort Scott, in company with Br. Sanford, and put up at the hotel. Wednesday, at an early hour I called upon Eld. Post, the Baptist minister, with whom I had a long conversation on the prophetic word. I found that he had been led to favor the "new departure," from the true principle of interpretation, that a day in symbolic prophecy denotes a year. He thought that the prophecies of Daniel and John were yet, in many things, to be fulfilled. He was looking for the Church of Rome to rise agan in power and persecute the people of God. I gave him my idea of this matter, showing that the sixty-nine weeks (Dan. 9) were fulfilled in years: also the 1260 days of Dan. 7: 15 and Rev. 12: 6-14. And that there was no persecuting Anti-Christ yet to rise. Prophecy is mostly fulfilled, and Christ's coming is the next grand event, and will come soon. Br. Post, like some others of the watchmen of our time, is inquiring, but does not see things clearly. My interview was very pleasant, and I hope it may be of some service to him.

I had a conversation last night in the cars, with a Methodist clergyman. His inquiries related to the nature and destiny of man, and the time of the Advent. He was liberal and candid, and did not take serious exceptions to our position.

At 9 a. m., I left Fort Scott for Oswego, and parting with Br. Sanford at Parsons, I arrived at Oswego at noon, and put up with Br. Miller, of the Congregational church. At night I spoke at their chapel on the inheritance of the saints. At the close the pastor, Mr. Armstrong, who had sat rather uneasy under the discourse, put some questions to me on the nature of the soul and destiny of the wicked, in connection with which he quoted the thief on the cross and other passages which he supposed would disprove my view of the subject, and confound me on the spot. I took occasion to answer his questions fairly, and then showed that his passages quoted to prove his theory of the conscious state, and immortality of the soul were quite susceptible of a different meaning. That the thief did not go to Paradise with the Savior that day; and that the latter had not gone to heaven even three days after; for he said to Mary—"I have not yet ascended."

At this point, he rejoined, and the subject was discussed between us in a friendly way, yet with much earnestness, till after 11 o'clock—I trust not without profit to some.

The pastors of these times ought to be better posted on the subject of the nature of man, if they would meet us with any success. But they rely mainly on the old Platonic arguments, and a forced construction of certain Scriptures, and suppose their case is made out, when, indeed, they have proved nothing, and perverted all they quote.

A NEW DEPARTURE AT ROME.

It seems that infallibility, of the Roman sort, is not above lying. A recent dispatch from Rome says:

> The Pope, in reply to an address by the Roman Academy, remonstrating against doctrines which are antagonistic to the spirit of modern times, disclaims any intention on the part of the Papacy to lay claim to inherent power to dispossess sovereigns or to assume direction over the worldly affairs of nations. "In ancient times," says His Holiness, "Christian nations revered the Pope, as the arbiter between sovereign and people in cases of disagreement, and great services have been rendered by the Papacy in preventing wars and healing up divisions among the nations of the world."

—It is well known that the Papacy was continually stiring up strife and causing war in Europe—often directly inciting the conflict, as for instance the wars of the sixth century, which finally gave temporal power to the Popes. And as to Pope Pius' disclaimers of "power to dispossess sovereigns, or assume direction over worldly affairs of nations," it is only another proof of the folly the Roman church committed voting its latest dogma: for it conclusively proves that either Pius is, or some of his predecessors were quite fallible. For we read in the Clementii, lib. 2, lit. 1, c. 2—The bishop of Rome has power to absolve from all allegiance, obligation, bond of sacrifice....the provinces, cities and armies of kings that rebel against him." Another declared: "The tribunals of kings are subjected to the power of the priests." (Crawf. p 300.) Innocent III. said: "Our Lord God the Pope; another God upon earth; King of king's and Lord of lords.... The power of the Pope is greater than all created power, and extends itself to things celestial, terrestrial and infernal."

It only remains to decide which infallible pope was fallible, in order to settle the pretensions of Rome. Pius insinuates that he asserts only spiritual power, outside of the States of the Church. Innocent declares that all power in heaven, earth and hell is in his hands. History is against Pius. It shows that the Papacy has endeavored to enforce the sentiment of Innocent's utterances. The apology of Pius is a new departure, and is fatal to the infallibility dogma.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE BOOK.

Many of our readers will remember that the General Conference at Rochester appointed a committee to issue a book setting forth, some of the main doctrines of Adventism. Its publication has been delayed for various reasons; but it is now in press, under the superintendence of Br. Sidney Hall of Hartford, Ct., which is a sufficient guarantee that it will be edited, and published in a neat and desirable style.

Every effort is being made to have the work ready for delivery by August 25 or earlier. Further particulars, as to price, etc, will be given hereafter.

OUR PULPIT.

We shall next week open a new department in THE TIMES. to be called 'Our Pulpit.' Under the head we shall publish from time to time sermons, by a number of Advent preachers, who are engaged to supply this pulpit for our readers. We expect their discourses will be suited to these latter days, when every one is in a hurry, and nothing sticks, unless it has a point.

The first sermon of the series will be by Eld. J. H. Whitmore, and will be followed by discourses from O. R. Fassett, L. C. Collins, A. A. Phelps, F. Burr, J. R. Preston, The Editor and others.

THE CAMP MEETINGS.

We call the attention of the friends to the coming camp-meetings in their respective States. The Illinois meeting comes first on the list. Illinois has more Adventists than any other Western State, and, so, we should say, ought to have the largest campmeeting of any. We trust it may be the largest this year, and, also, one of the best. Read Br. McCullock's call, reflect upon it, and as a result, make up your mind to be in Amboy at the beginning of the meeting, prepared to remain until its close.

The Association will not hold any general Campmeeting this year, and none need stay away for fear its business session will interfere with their spiritual interests. Let there be a grand rally, and may Illinois keep a glorious feast of tabernacles to the Lord.

Next in order comes the Iowa meeting at Cascade, the second camp of the young Conference of Iowa. We understand there is a good interest already in this gathering, and friends are making preparations to be there. Do not fail to form and carry out this good resolution. By the help of the Lord, I will be at my post at the camp in Cascade, and do my duty after I get there.

In S. W. Iowa and Missouri a campmeeting will be held at the same time of the meeting in Cascade. Br. L. C. Collins is expected to be present, which will insure a good interest and healthful influence. This is the first Advent campmeeting so far West. Let the friends in that region rally and make it a success.

Finally let all—preachers and people—read the article on campmeetings in the last TIMES, and act accordingly, and the blessings you desire will be assuredly yours.

HO FOR CAMP AMBOY!

Brethren of Illinois: Let there be a general waking up in the interest of our camp-meeting enterprise. We hope to see a tent on the ground from every church in the State. Shall it be realized? What say you? Is not the cause in which we are engaged worth some sacrifice? Are not multitudes perishing all around us for the lack of light and truth? Will not your own growth in grace and strength be increased by your coming to camp?

Come then let us rally all our strength to this annual feast. Come from the extreme north of the state, and from the most southern part. We hope to see Brn. Lawver, Spann and Thomason and all who can come. Come from Chicago east, and from Clayton west, and all along the various lines of the Railway to camp Amboy. Let no trivial excuse prevent you from being there.

Pray over the subject. Ask wisdom from the Lord to direct. Come laden with the weight of responsibility that should rest upon those that bear the last great crowning message of truth to the perishing. Come to work, not for a pastime, or for visiting, or to hear something smart. Come to work for Jesus. Bring your unconverted friends. Labor with and for them. Come trusting in the Lord for success, and the God of all grace, mercy and peace be with you.

Let each and every one come prepared to take care of themselves, as far as possible. There will be no boarding tent as heretofore; but supplies can be had upon the ground at reasonable prices. Let each church look out for their preacher. See that he and his family are cared for. Let there be no lack in this respect.

Respectfully submitted by one of the Committee. WM. MCCULLOCK.

"WAITING FOR YOUR LORD."

The following paragraph I found in an old book. It strikes me it is worthy of preservation:

> "Christians should live waiting for their Lord. Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord. Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching." "I say unto all watch." The followers of Christ are described as those who have turned from idols to serve the living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. Important representation! may you feel it aright. A waiting frame of mind is that the Christian should ever cherish. But, what is it to wait? Let a familiar illustration furnish a reply. The father of a numerous family leaves his children, intending to go and settle in a foreign land. Before he departs, he says, 'My dear children, I am going to leave you for a while, but not for ever. I am going to prepare for you, in a country where we shall be happier than we can be here. As soon as I have made the needful preparations I shall return for you: therefore wait and be ready. The father departs; his children continue in their old abode, but with new feelings. It is hardly like their abode now; for they are expecting to go. They pursue their needful duties, attend as before to necessary concerns, but still their hearts are gone after their father. They are looking for their new abode. They are waiting for the return of their father.
> "Such are the feelings and views which you should cherish. Not feelings that will prevent your discharging the duties of life; that will drive you into a desert, or turn you to a hermit; but that will lead you to act and live as not at home, but looking for your

Lord; waiting as those children would wait. Not building on great things here, but with a heart untied from the world, ready to go, be the warning ever so short, and to welcome your Lord ever so soon.

"Blessed are those who indulge this watching, waiting spirit; the king eternal has pronounced them blessed."

Such is the sentiment of true Adventism. We are, like ancient Israel when anticipating their exodus from the land of their long and tedious bondage, to be entirely disentangled from the surfeiting cares of this life, and with staff in hand be in perfect readiness, so that, when it is said, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh!" we may be able to go out and welcome him joyfully. This is the position of every true Christian. God has not enjoined upon us that we should wait for death, but we are emphatically commanded to "wait for his Son." Hiram Mattison made a sad mistake when he called "death the Prince of Peace." Such an honor is only conferred upon the Son of God!

FROM CALIFORNIA.

I have just returned from a preaching tour of two months. Went first to Vallejo, by invitation of the brethren, and stopped five weeks. Found the people ready to hear the truth and also receive it. Preached the truth, straight and plain. Many hearts were made to leap for joy.

I organized a church of seventeen members, good sound men and women, that love the truth and Chrrist's soon coming. Ordained a deacon to take the oversight of the flock, till they can secure a pastor. An unconverted man in the city gave them the use of a hall, free of rent, for six months. It had formerly been used for a dance-house.

The interest and congregation increased steadily. Baptised one in the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection—a backslider reclaimed, who had been in that state for twenty years. The Spirit worked powerfully with him.

The Presbyterian minister came out against the truth very hard, stating in a public place, that the "Advent doctrine was all bosh." The reason of this was, we run into his immortal-soul theory and exposed some of his heathen dogmas; and, also, took out some of his members. They have sent for Br. Fassett to come on and settle with them, and take charge of the little flock. If he cannot come, we pray the Lord of the vine-yard, to send some good man. Here is a great field and an open door. Others will join soon. They requested me to remain with them; but I felt I must go to other cities and villages and preach the gospel.

From this place I went to Petaluma and found some true saints ready to receive us. Here I preached in a new place, the first Advent sermon ever given there. It cut like a two-edged sword. When through I gave opportunity to speak. A brother, formerly a Methodist minister arose and desired to know how I disposed of the wicked. I told him what God said about it, that the penalty of sin was death, and not suffering in a hell of fire and brimstone, and that without end. I showed them that God was love, and not a tyrant, as I had formerly believed. After this a very intelligent lady arose, and was thankful the truth had been preached; for she never could look upon God as a being of love, if there was such a place as is commonly supposed in which to keep sinners burning forever. We left this place with our hearts uplifted for heaven's blessing to rest upon the truth spoken.

Came on to San Francisco, purposing to stop over Sunday and meet with the little flock that had secured a hall and were worshiping by themselves. But I found things in such a distracted, torn-up state, that there is no chance to do anything at p . The seventh-day keepers come there with their tent some six weeks ago, and have made sad work with the converts. I think there is scarcely a dozen but what have gone in with them.

Truly our hearts were sad. But let the old winnowing mill shake: there will be some grains of wheat that will be ripered for the harvest.

Truly we are living in perilous times, and there will nothing stand in these days, but holy faith in God and in the present truth. We are not going into the kingdom of God on "flowery beds of ease, while others fought to win the prize, and sailed through bloody seas." The sooner we get all the old leaven purged out the better. We need not deceive ourselves. There is nothing that defileth or maketh a lie shall enter the kingdom. We must have all this glorying taken out of us, and feel like Paul, who said, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of Christ." The Lord help us all to get just right, and then keep right.

Yours looking for speedy redemption. D. D. and M. S. Reed.

DR. JOHN HALL.

At four o'clock in the afternoon I took a seat in the Presbyterian church, corner of Fifth avenue and 19th Street —John Hall, D. D. pastor. I had heard much of this celebrated preacher and expected to hear a good gospel sermon. I was not disappointed. Dr. Hall took his text in Heb. 11: 13–16, and gave his audience a glowing description of the life of faith as illustrated by Abraham and other worthies mentioned in this richly instructive chapter. He is not an orator like Beecher or Chapin, but as a gospel preacher I think him superior to either of them. He spoke like a man deeply and thoroughly in earnest. This always has a sort of fascination about it. Earnestness is contagious, without it no speaker can succeed.

Dr. Hall is not a sensational preacher in the popular sense of that term, but his preaching nevertheless always causes a sensation. He is unaffected and unassuming in manner, and disdains all theatrical tricks and stage mannerisms. He has not the affluent language, rich diction and splendid imagery of Beecher, nor the vehement declamation of Chapin. He made no attempt to adorn his discourses with classic allusions or historic quotations. But he did this thing. He fixed all his powers of mind upon the subject before him—and thereby magnified the subject instead of magnifying himself. He seemed to forget himself, and spoke of the life of faith as though he thought it the grandest thing that could chain our attention.

Dr. Hall is a native of the north of Ireland, and when his Scotch-Irish blood is fairly warmed up, he carries with him in the treatment of his subject a power that no mere rhetorician can ever acquire. The man and his subject appear to be welded together at a white heat, and never for a moment seem to be separated. This earnestness, magnetic and forcible, I believe to be the secret of his great success as a preacher. I have one criticism to make which to many may appear frivolous. The Doctor when in the pulpit wears a gown something like those worn by the preachers of the church of England. It is difficult to understand why any sensible man should wish to array himself in such a cumbrous, ungraceful, and positively ugly looking habit. In "John Ploughman's Talk," Mr. Spurgeon rather extravagantly says "except a duck in pattens, no creature looks more stupid than a Dissenting preacher in a gown which is no manner of use to him. I could laugh till I held my sides, when I see our doctors in gowns and bands, puffed out with their silks, and touched up with their little bibs, for they put me so much in mind of our old turkey-cock when his temper is up, and he swells out his biggest. They must be weak fools indeed who want a man to dress like women before they can enjoy his sermon." Fancy how Beecher or Chapin or Gough or Phillips would look arrayed in a clerical gown!! This matter of dress may be thought to be very trivial or of no importance, yet I deem whatever affects a man's power over his audience is of importance. Why should ministers wear such gowns more than lawyers or members of Congress? Does any one for instance, suppose that Daniel Webster could have pronounced his magnificent oration in reply to Hayne, had he been arrayed in the toggery of gown and surplice? J. H. Whitmore.

"REMEMBER ME."

This was the request of the penitent thief as he hung upon the cross beside the blessed Savior. And I can say that it is my request and my prayer: "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." This is the passage which is obscure to the minds of a great many, let us examine it and see if it is in harmony with the rest of God's word; Let us see if the answer which our Savior gave the thief harmonizes with the general teachings of the Bible.

What was the request? Was it that Christ should remember him when he went away to heaven or some other place? No. He says remember me when thou comest (not goest) into thy kingdom. We first want to know where this kingdom is, and we find in Dan. 7: 27, that the kingdom which is to be possessed or inhabited by the saints, will be set up "under (not in) the whole heaven." If we turn to Mat. 5: 5, we read that the meek "shall inherit the earth." It follows then that the saints will inherit two kingdoms, or else the thief referred to the kingdom symbolized by the stone, which "became a great mountain and filled the whole earth." (Dan. 2: 35.) Now as this kingdom is to "consume" all others (v. 44), there will be but one which the saints shall inherit; and in this kingdom the penitent thief will be with Christ: for this was promised by our Lord.

But, says one, "Christ promised that he should be with him that day in paradise." Right here it should be remembered that Jewish time was reckoned differently from ours—the day commencing not at midnight, as does ours, but at sundown. The night was divided into watches and the day into hours. Turn to the account of the creation. (Gen. 1.) Was the morning and the evening the first day? No, but "the evening and the morning was the first day," and so with each of the six.

Now we find that Christ died about the ninth hour. (Mat. 27: 46–50.) The ninth hour Jewish time would be three o'clock p. m. with us. Therefore Christ died in the afternoon. We now find in Mark 15: 42, that when the even was come Joseph begged the body of Jesus; and Pilate thought strange that he was already dead. Next we find that it was the preparation day, or day before the Sabbath when the soldiers broke the legs of the thieves: but Christ's legs they brake not, for he was already dead. Thus we learn that Christ died about three o'clock one day, and that the next day, or when the even was come, the thieves were not dead yet. Therefore as Christ and the thief did not both die upon the same day, they could not have been together that day in paradise.

We will now consider Christ's answer or promise to the thief. "Verily." This word occurs many times it the Scriptures and is often translated from the Greek word, amen. Our Savior made use of this word, which means "so be it," or "so let it be." We thus see that the request of the thief was granted. Now if we remember that the punctuation of the Bible is not inspired, and place the comma after the word to-day, instead of before it, and all is plain. Christ says: "So be it. I say unto you to day, thou shalt be with me in paradise." This is a day of great events for now is the Son of God slain a sacrifice for sin. This is the day when the rocks are rent, the vail of the temple rent in twain from the top, to the bottom, and even the sun refuses to shine and look upon the cruel scene. This is the day when every one of my disciples have forsaken me and fled. But now, because thou art penitent, and also hast faith in me, even when all others have forsaken me, therefore I say unto you to-day, that thy request shall be granted, and thou shalt be with me in paradise.

Perhaps it will be asked, Where is paradise? In Rev. 2: 7, we read "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." And in the closing chapters of this book we find that the tree of life is to be in the new earth. Hence we conclude that paradise will be located there. Will it be any special favor of God if we are permitted to eat of the tree of life in the paradise of God when this earth has passed away and the new earth is established? It will; for it is "according to his promise" that we look for the new heavens and new earth; and the wicked have not this promise. As the result of disobedience Adam was shut away from the tree of life. As the result of obedience we shall have right to this tree when Eden is restored; and this will be a part of our reward. When will the reward be given? "And behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man [the thief was a man] according as his work shall be." (Rev. 22: 12.) "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

William Branch.

IS THE MAN OF SIN REVEALED?

1. Has he exalted himself above all that is called God so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God by assuming qualities, attributes and authority such as alone belong to God? (2 Thes. 2: 4.)

2. Has he asserted that he and the church of which he is head is stronger than the God of his fathers?

3. Has he ceased to regard the God of his fathers and substituted in his stead protecting saints? (Dan. 11: 37, 38.)

4. Has he forbiden matrimony to a large class of his adherents, viz., priests nuns, etc., and commanded his adherents to abstain from meats on all Fridays? (1 Tim. 4: 3.)

5. Has he divided the land for gain, and caused his bishops, priests, etc., to rule over many in the most strong holds? (Dan. 11: 39.)

6. Has he made war with the saints and caused many of those who refused to submit to his infamous dogmas to be put to death? (Dan. 7: 21.)

The Times.

AT HOME.

There are well defined apprehensions that the cholera is coming again. It has made its appearance in Poland, where it first appeared before its general prevalence in 1829. Says a New York journal: This season and the last have been distinguished by tornados, floods, and other exhibitions of apparently disorganized natural forces, working in singular fashion and to no desirable purpose. It is asserted that the same variations from the usual course of nature have always preceded visitations of the cholera.——Some of the eastern railroad kings threaten to have the whole race of peanut pedlers, prize-package candidates for the penitentiary, and other artists in petty swindling, banished from railway trains. If they will do this, the travelling world will rise up and bless the workers of so great a deliverance.——The way New York people spend Sunday is thus described: Nearly a quarter of million of people are reported by the keepers to have visited Central Park on Sunday. A corresponding crowd roamed all day through the Brooklyn Park. Thousands went over to Staten Island, and the excursion boats were literally overrun. It is not an unreasonable calculation that $50,000 were expended for excursion fares alone from New York and Brooklyn, the larger portion of which went to the horse railways. Considering the villainous whisky, which the neglect and violation of the Excise law allows to be freely sold, the number of disturbances was very slight.

Last Sunday the boiler of the Staten Island ferry boat exploded, in the slip at White Hall, and as we go to press, it is reported that about fifty persons were killed or have died; while 120 are injured, many of whom must die. The details are simply terrible, and excitement in New York and vicinity is intense. It is supposed that 'a patch' in the boiler gave way, as no other cause can be assigned for the explosion.

ABROAD.

England.

A debate in Parliament on cheap labor, a report of which is herewith reprinted, discloses an appalling condition of things among the English poor. We hear of children, of both sexes, employed, half naked, in the brick yards, carrying lumps of wet clay, weighing forty or fifty pounds, on their heads. And these infants—for such some of them seem to be—earn wages on which their unnatural parents live at ease. This abuse was first taken up by that noted philanthropist, Earl Shaftesbury, and, seconded by the press, his zealous labors have brought the question of remedy before the country. It seems time that some effort were made to rescue these unfortunate children from their dreadful condition.

It seems almost incredible, and yet the census reveals it as a fact, that during four years—'66 to '69 inclusive—while Great Britain used cotton goods to the amount of eight dollars only for each soul within its bounds, there were spent seventy dollars for strong drink for every man, woman and child. That over two billions of dollars were thus spent for liquors within that brief period seems incredible; and yet, in this case, the 'figures cannot lie.' What wonder that England and Wales alone have a million of paupers, in addition to the starving thousands of Scotland and Ireland.

There are some facts entering into the problem of the present age, that the prophets of

Correspondence

From J K Marse. Yorktown Ill.

I am trying to live so that when Jesus comes I may be prepared to meet him with joy and not with grief. Oh! that God would give us more love for each other, is my daily prayer. The Savior said, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." Let us see to it that we keep all of the commandments of God and by them we shall be saved when Jesus comes. Oh! how it rejoices my heart to hear from the dear brethren all over the land, not only those that belong to our church, but all that are looking for Jesus.

I must tell you what a heavenly visit I have had with my brother from Iowa. Although he believes in the immortality of the soul, yet we had a good time reading the Scriptures and reasoning together. There are some things he cannot see as we do; still I love him just as well. Wherever I can see the image of my Master, I find my brother or my sister. Glory be to God, that my eyes were ever opened to the glorious truths of the state of man in death, and the relation we sustain to God in this life and in the life that is to come.

We should be very careful how we offend one of these little ones by harsh words or unkind actions. I have heard our faith preached right out, without dodging in the least, and nobody offended, because it was all in love. If there are any hard words to be said let them be said by somebody else than Adventists.

From F J Morgan, Independence Town Minn.

I love The Times, and to hear from the brethren scattered abroad who write of the blessed hope and of the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. I hope that it will be as gratifying to the brethren to hear from us, in like precious faith, and to know what the good Lord has been doing for us in this part of the world. Br. and Sr. Fassett, still continue to preach for us one Sabbath in each month. Perhaps you would like to know what kind of warriors they are. Well, I will tell you. They are recruiting officers for the army of the Lord, and they understand the movements of the enemy, and they know the danger their their fellow men are in, unless they enlist in the army of the Lord. They tell them what a dreadful thing it is to fall in the ranks of the enemy. This was their mission with us.

In the month of April they were with us three days to see how many there were to enlist in the service of the Lord. The result was, being told that Jesus was the Captain, twenty of us enlisted. The first duty of every soldier of the Lord is, to get on the Lord Jesus, by being "buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Seventeen of us were "planted together in the likeness of his death, that we may be also in the likeness of his resurrection," "knowing this that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin."

Finally, brethren we intend to live faithfully to the Lord. We want to be found among them that are of the day, and not of the night, that the day of the coming of the Lord may not overtake us as a thief in the night.

From L F Hovey. Coldsprings N Y June 14.

I could not, if I were to try, tell you how exceedingly precious The Times, and the cause it advocates, have become to me. It is now nearly a year since Brn. Fenn and Wendell planted the old tent in Randolph, and we went to it, at first, merely to hear what Adventism was. It seemed as though I never could believe I had not an immortal soul; but soon light began to dawn. Then, when I began to see the perfection and beauties of all God's laws, and especially his glorious plan of salvation for the saints, and his (compassionate dealings with the sinner, in comparison), I mean, with orthodoxy, the Bible was a new book. And although I had stood with the Methodists about fifteen years, it was like a new conversion. Br. Fenn's baptismal sermon finished the work, and I felt I must go down into the water. Thank God for the sweet peace of mind I have enjoyed since I did so.

Oh! is it not blessed and glorious, that in the resurrection state, after sin and its results have passed away, we shall strike glad hands with the loved in other times, and "be somebody and be somewhere."

Can it ever be that I shall be worthy to dwell in Jesus' presence—with him who became subject to death, that all who would believe on him might inherit eternal life? Measured by my merits I could not. But those precious promises are mine, and by the help of him who can save even to the uttermost, I will lay hold of them, and come off more than conquer.

I attended those discussions between Brn. Fenn and Burgess. Not until then was everything clear, but I listened in prayerful and almost breathless attention for orthodox proofs of that position, but was fed with husks instead. But it would be futile for me to attempt, to describe those meetings. They are better imagined than described. But one thing struck me as singular: that when Br. Fenn would arise, with his calm, dignified deportment and with commonsense reasoning so thoroughly demolish all that Br. B. had said, he (Burgess,) could go on so unconcerned, and, I had almost said, so impudently. But the facts seemed to be that he had his part of the discussion prepared beforehand; and when he got to the end he had to stop.

I have sent you one of his 'Primers,' entitled, Light. I said his. I think I ought to say Erie Conference; for he spoke of several prominent parties in his connection; and it is thought by many that 'the Primer' was compiled by them in answer to the Advent theory, long before it was delivered here, and then modified to suit the occasion.

From J W Johnson, Shelbyville. Ill.

Our minister preached a series of sermons a short time ago, on the fate of the finally impenitent, in which he said that the French infidel is more consistent than the man who believes in the annihilation of the wicked. I know that you will admit this to be a marvelous argument, and that it required a genius of no mean caliber, to invent one so overwhelming and crushing. The doctor has said it: therefore it must be true.

But, seriously, the declaration does not touch the question of the truth of the doctrine, or at all shake my faith in the Bible, or the doctrine of life and death, as set forth therein. I would like to ask the learned brother, what is the blessing held out in the Bible, for faith in Christ? Is it not life? What is the curse held up to unbelief? Is it not death? What is the reward which it proposes to "patient continuance in well doing?" Is it not immortality? What is the penalty held before the minds of those who reject Christ? Is it not "everlasting destruction?" Or, once more, is this punishment with which God so terribly threatens the wicked; an eternal state of conscious being in misery? Eternal life in torment? We are no where told in the Bible that the righteous are to enjoy a happy eternal life, or that the wicked are to endure a miserable eternal life. Life is the opposite of death.

I often ask myself the question, why is it that some few of the many professing to be Christians (not possessing much of this world's goods), are perfectly satisfied; thank God, and pray to him daily for their daily bread; enjoy themselves best while reading the Bible and talk about Christ's soon coming; while the other class of Christians make as much profession of their love for the Savior as the former class, while in social meetings, but are continually complaining and fretting about their crops, or business being dull, or whatever they may be interested in. These actions say, we will not trust him who says he careth for us, until we see there is no other resource; and then it will be soon enough to trust a stranger.

I think this will answer the question: The former class love God and keep his commandments, while the latter class neglect the commandments given by our Savior, viz., "Take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, With what shall we be clothed? But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

From H B Sevey.

How precious to the lone pilgrim are those, words—"I will come again!" And sweeter still to know the event is so near. Jesus says: "When ye see these things [namely, signs in the sun, moon, stars, upon earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth] come to pass, know [not to be mistaken] ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

"Dear brethren and sisters, we can look up, and lift up our heads, for redemption is due. Praise the Lord. It will not tarry long. Shall we wait for it? Let us be ready, and not overcharged with the cares of this world, but living for translation; not having a desire even, to look back. Remember Lot's wife!

I fear many that profess to be looking for Jesus when he comes would like a little time to get their vessels filled with oil. Many will cast their idols of silver and gold away, when it is too late. When he ariseth to shake terribly the earth, will it not be much better to be rich towards God, as men count riches? Why cling to this old earth? Why not do good with what the Lord has lent you, and meet with his approbation? How blessed will be the words—Enter into my kingdom! Yes, after we have done all we can, spent property and our lives in his service, we shall still exclaim, "Jesus paid it all, all to him I owe." Bless his name forever!

From Br J S Brandebury, Burlington, Iowa. June 21.

A word on faith. In Acts 14: 27, Paul says, "They rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles." "I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world." (Rom. 1: 18.) "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (Col. 2: 5.) "And the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." (Gal. 3: 8.) "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Eph. 2: 8–10.) In Rom. 5: 1–5 he says: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but the glory in tribulations, also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us."

This faith the Holy Spirit works in every believer, or enables us to believe with the heart unto righteousness, to life everlasting. Or as Paul says (Eph. 1: 19) "And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward, who believe, according to the working of his mighty power." May we, my brethren, have our "lives hid with Christ in God: that when Christ who is our life shall appear we may also appear with him in glory."

From J Eaton, Little Falls, N Y June 27.

My heart rejoices in the love of God this evening. I find him a present help in time of trouble. I love him because he first loved me, and gave his life for all who would believe in him. I feel that I have a Savior, one that is mighty to save. He is able, and willing to give us grace to bear all our trials and tribulations in this life. I love the blessed word that he has given us "a lamp to our feet and a light to our path," to guide our steps, and show us the pathway through this long dark night of sorrow of grief and tears. I do rejoice that I am permitted to love him who died to save such an unworthy sinner as I am. I feel that if ever one had reason to praise our Savior it is I. I want to keep close to him. I want to be ready to hail him with joy when he comes with the promised reward. Oh! let us watch; lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping.

From S E Pearl, Shawanee Co Wis.

Some time ago I received at two different times, packages of tracts from the office, and, also, The Times comes regularly. I am very thankful to you for the opportunity which you have given me to do good. Like all other farmers, what I am earning now I will get next fall, when I hope that I may be able to give, or rather let the Lord have back, a little of what belongs to him. I have never had a chance to understand the doctrine which The Times promulgates, perfectly, until I commenced reading it. I had heard enough, however, to be convinced that its foundation is the same which the apostle Paul built upon. I have found all the passages where immortality is referred to, and find that there is nothing in them to teach inherent immortality in man. No, the Book says, that we must seek for it if we would obtain or have it.

Sometimes we get discouraged, the laborers in God's vineyard are so few, while the fields are already white for the harvest, and the people are starving for the bread of life. As it was in the times of the apostles, it is in our day. Where God would start a little band of believers, rejoicing in the goodness of the gospel, Satan would commence work, too. The contest thickens; the warfare between light and darkness increases; the multitude choose darkness rather than light: and not even every one that says, "Lord, Lord," and makes a great show will be saved. Not every one that is baptised and dons a religious cloak will be saved. Some are wolves working against the good cause, and pulling it down as fast as it is being built up. But they who do God's will, strive still to build up the waste places. It takes striving instead of careless work to get into the kingdom. And some will believe and be saved, in spite of all opposition.

Br. Ferriss has been laboring with our little church on Sumption's Prairie, in the midst of opposition and prejudice. The truth does not suffer in his hands. June 18, Lord's day we had a good time. Br. Ferriss preached a good discourse on baptism, which had quite an effect, and four went forward and were buried with Christ in baptism.

From Jacob Wilbur, Hoosick N Y.

As I have received letters from several friends in the West, of late, inquiring whether I am yet alive. I would reply—I am still alive. We are in the midst of haymaking and harvest now, and I am very busy trying to get enough for my wife, and five young "Adventists" (children) to live on the coming winter, if we should be obliged to stay here so long. But I must say that I never felt more positive that the Lord was soon coming to take home his weary Bride, than now. I am preaching every Sunday, and evenings as the way opens; and doors are thrown open in new places all around us. The Friends have kindly offered me the use of their brick meeting-house to preach in, and as a result some are coming over to the truth. One whole family is rejoicing in the light, and others begin to "see men as trees walking." Pray for us.

From H P Dunham, LaCross Co Wis.

Our family camp-meeting in Adam's Valley closed with encouraging prospects of good results. The place was all that one could wish, and the weather delightful. We had a shower Monday evening, and as it was still raining when preaching closed, some one proposed to have a short conference meeting, which was so full of interest that ere we were aware it was twelve o'clock. The fourth of July was spent in prayer and praise beneath the folds of the tent, and I heard it remarked by many that they never attended a better meeting. I do not know how many there were on the ground at any time; but I am sure the Spirit of the Lord was there. There was no hooting nor quarreling of rowdies, nor angry discussions of religious zealots. The ministers present were Elds. Hough and Thurber. But there were so many preachers that they found some difficulty in getting an opportunity to preach. Eld. Thurber had to omit the sermon one morning, the interest in love feast was so great.

From W E Brown, Fairport, N Y.

We have just closed our meeting here under the "Lord's Tent." The effort has not been as successful in all respects as could be desired, and yet we think we have had a good meeting. At least we feel our duty is discharged, and we are willing to leave the results until the accounts of the great day—feeling assured that the word of God faithfully spoken shall not be in vain nor fail of accomplishing that whereunto it was sent. Thirty-one sermons have been given by Brn. Stevens, Gove, Whitmore, Sergisson, Fenn, Wendell, and Srs. Stoddard and Jennings. They have labored faithfully and many have been enlightened and benefited, but not the multitude.

We have had a good attendance and good attention, and many are searching the scriptures as never before. Some of the ministers have come in freely, others and many of their members have refused entirely to come inside the tent.

Three were baptized and others trembled, like Felix of old, being almost persuaded to start in the Christian life. The brethren here are very much encouraged, and are determined to hold up the light till Jesus comes. They have hired a hall and will hold regular meetings. May the Lord bless them abundantly. The Tent is now shipped for Alton, Wayne Co., where we expect to commence a meeting on the 21st inst. Let all interested pray for its success.

[The seed sown will yet spring up. Father Taylor said—"Don't carry the seed-bag and sickle into the field at the same time." Ed.

From O E Merrill, Worcester Mass.

I feel that we as a body need more of the life and power of Christ's Spirit in our midst. When I go to meeting (and I go to all) and see how few there are who attend, compared to what there was in '66, '67 & '68, when some of us were looking for Jesus to come, I ask myself what is the matter? I will not undertake to answer this question; but will submit it, for your consideration. Will you write an article on the above question—"What is the matter?" and answer the following: Why do some write and talk about the Lord's coming being right here, this year, even, and at the same time can spend hundreds of dollars at law with brethren, and also build nice houses? Do they not deny their faith? There are those that are denying these things. What shall I do? I shall follow Jesus and let what light I have shine. I feel that I can't give up my faith if all go back. If there is only one saved when Jesus comes, I will try to be that one.

[Our brother's questions are pointed. Perhaps if we should add more it might dull the points. Let every one examine himself. Ed.

From Caroline Fosdick, Sparland, Ill.

I love to hear from the brethren and sisters in all parts of the land. It reminds me of the day when the Lord shall call them all, whether sleeping, or awake, to meet him in the air. Oh! shall I be one of that joyful number. To be so is the greatest desire of my heart. But how many seem to be asleep at their post with no interest for Christ's cause. I often think, will there be ten righteous found in these parts when the King comes? Shall the Son of man find faith on the earth at his appearing? May God wake up his sleeping children, and help them to engage in work in earnest for their Master.

CHRISTIAN MISSION CAMP-MEETING.

The campmeeting held at New Hartford, commencing June 22, was one of great interest. The love, peace and harmony with which it was conducted was a remarkable feature of the meeting.

Although many views were entertained respecting the doctrine and teachings of the Bible directly antagonistic to each other, no unchristian or uncharitable feeling was manifested.

The fruits of the spirit, love, joy and peace were predominant and no spirit of controversy or contention was shown, although some five different denominations were represented.

The principle of Christian union and brotherly kindness was evinced by all. Charity, liberty of opinion, and a desire to investigate God's holy word was very noticable, and glorious results must follow as a sequence.

The Christian conference was held in connection with the campmeeting and its sessions were also remarkable for the order and harmony that existed among its members. It was presided over by Eld Thomas, whose age and experience eminently qualified him for that responsible position. In the fulfillment of his duties he elicited the commendation of all.

The discourses of Eld. C. C. Ramsay and his co workers were of such a character as not only to attract and claim the attention of the large audiences that assembled to hear, but were clear, powerful, and logical, convincing the gainsayer, reclaiming the wanderer from God, and converting the sinner. The subjects treated were adapted to the times in which we live,

THE KINGDOM FUTURE, BUT AT HAND.

"And as they heard these things he added and spake a parable because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear. He said, therefore, a certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." Is not the absence of Christ the existing fact? Will that kingdom be established before his return?

John the baptist came, preaching in the wilderness, and saying, repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. (Mat. 3: 2.) From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. (Mat. 4: 17.) The disciples proclaimed the same message, "preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom." This does not refer to the dispensation which Jesus was inaugurating, for the same kingdom had been in existence ever since there was a Church. Turn to the twenty first chapter of Luke, where Christ, in answer to a direct inquiry from the disciples respecting the coming of Christ and of the end of the world, enters into an explanation, so that they might not be disappointed. The coming of his kingdom and the winding up of this dispensation are coeval, but the reign of Christ will succeed them.

There is not a hint in the Bible that the millennium will precede the coming of the Lord. It is impossible to terminate these disasters in the destruction of Jerusalem. The predictions have been verified in a greater degree in modern times. "Nation shall rise against nation and ,kingdom against kingdom," etc. Jerusalem is to be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The whole space is filled up with these commotions, the world—not Judea alone—involved in the perplexity, distress of nations, "looking for those things which are coming upon the earth, for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken," "and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads: for your redemption draweth nigh." When ye see these things come to pass know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Christ did not come in the destruction of Jerusalem, any more than in the flood; neither has he yet appeared in the clouds.—H. A. Barclay, in Interior.

IMAGE. NO. I.

What do you materialists do with the scripture declaration that 'God made man in his own image?' Now 'God is a spirit.' So you see man must have a spirit entity or he could not be 'in the image of God.'"

What do you mean by God being a spirit?

"I mean that he is immaterial, an essence not material substance."

Say "without body or parts."

"Yes that comprehends it."

And man was made in his image?

"Yes, certainly!"

What! How is this? Image means form, shape, or likeness. And man was made in the form, or shape, of that which has no form, or shape; or in other words man was made an essence of no material substance. Then when made, he had "no body or parts." Is this it?

"No I mean his spirit was made in the image of God."

Then you mean something owned or possessed by the man and not the man himself. Let us look at the record and see if God 'created,' 'made' or 'formed,' a spirit on the sixth day of creation: and if so, what he 'made' it of will be told us: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." What, make an essence out of such substantial material as "dust of the ground?" "And God said let us make man in our image, after our likeness." And he made him of dust, and what was made was in his image or form, or shape.

Now notice. Whatever was in God's image, was 'made,' 'created,' 'formed' (all three words are used) into that image, not from nothing, but from the substance of dust. So if man was a spirit, he was a very material one. But more anon.

FROM ENGLAND.

I send you one subscriber for The Times. He was converted from a drunkard's den, and his old companions declare that they will yet have him back with them again. But they have not yet succeeded, thank the God of all mercy.

Since I last wrote, sickness has entered my family, and death has even seized upon one of my little ones—a daughter three years and six months old. This has been the cause of much grief to us; but we hope soon to meet her in glory, at the day of reward.

I am glad to see the tobacco reform urged in your paper. If the money for that noxious weed was used for the benefit of society, what good might not follow? If it was used in circulating the doctrine we profess to believe, how much might be effected. Many of my poor neighbors would be glad of The Times weekly. And if by your tobacco-money you should pay for some of these, and one soul should be converted by the means, would not your reward be an amply sufficient compensation for your self-denial? It is a small sacrifice. Let one and all make it! Let not the Judge find you with a pipe in your mouth, or a 'cud' in your cheek

PROPS AND HELPS.

Some trust in horses and some in chariots, but my trust is in the living God. While some lean upon props and helps, I prefer to lean upon the arm which moves the world. Not but that helps are very good in their proper place, but they must not be relied upon. "Cursed is the man which putteth his trust in the arm of flesh."

Since I first fell into the ranks of God's children, how many I have known who outwardly appeared to be true Christians. They ran well for a while, but they feared the frowns and courted the smiles of their brethren and sisters, they strove to be thought well of: they watched man's judgment with a jealous eye; they were self-made men and women; they were only buoyed up by human applause. And as soon as the cold shoulder was turned to them, and they were not treated with the usual familiarity, their religion was gone, and they commenced to find fault with every thing and every body. They displayed nothing but a "sour godliness".

Some said, they were poor backsliders. Were they? I say, nay. They had nothing to backslide from but a self-righteousness. They donned a garment of their own making, and still rejected the garment provided for them by the Savior. They are not plants which my Heavenly Father had planted; therefore they were rooted up. They built their houses upon the sand; and we all know the history of such. May the Lord give his own a spiritual eye to detect the chaff from the wheat.

Obituary.

LAWRENCE. Died at Nettle Creek, Ill., June 23, 1871 Sr Margaret Lawrence; aged 23 years, 9 months, and 13 days.

The subject of this notice is a niece of Br. Wm Cummings, of Neponset. She, with her companion, first learned the true faith of the Scriptures by hearing from Br Cummings, and reading the papers and the tracts published by the Adventists. She and her companion embraced the light that shone out from the blessed Bible. They loved it, although they had never heard an Adventist preach until last May, when I was called upon to preach the funeral sermon of one of their little ones. Sr. Lawrence's health at that time was very feeble, and she continued to fail until death relieved her from all her sufferings. Her faith was strong in the Lord and the resurrection of the dead. She said:—"I know I shall come up in the first resurrection." Her sorrowing companion mourns, but not without hope. Her special request was that I should preach her funeral sermon, which I did July 9, though she was buried two weeks previous.

WM. McCULLOCH.

BOYEE. Fell asleep in Jesus, July 4, 1871, at Parkersburg, Iowa, Myra R., wife of Edwin O. Boyee, and daughter of A. H. and N F. Eggleston; aged 26 years, 3 months, and 4 days.

She died of consumption, and her sufferings were very great. She bore them with Christian fortitude and patience. She had a strong desire to get well, especially upon the account of her husband and child. But when she saw that she must die, she seemed resigned. She called all of her friends and neighbors to her, shook hands with each, bidding them good-bye, and urging them to meet her in the kingdom of God. To her mother she said, "Take Dulie, and take good care of her." A few minutes after she said, farewell to all, and fell asleep in Jesus. Services by Eld. C. C. Ramsay. Sermon from 1 Cor. 15: 26, in the Congregational house.

At a regular meeting of the members of the German Christian Church, May 23, 1871, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to call from our midst our beloved brother, founder and minister of this church, on the 9th day of May, 1871; and,

WHEREAS, Although humbly submitting to the all-wise decree of the Most High, we desire to express our deep felt sorrow for the great loss we have sustained in the death of our friend and brother, therefore,

Resolved, That in the deceased we have been deprived of a most worthy, zealous and efficient worker in our congregation; and who, as one of the original founders, ever remained a most faithful advocate of the interests of his people.

Resolved, That while it was the constant endeavor of our deceased pastor to cultivate the heart, he was always ready to help on the cause of progress whenever and wherever advanced in behalf of the rising generation.

Resolved, That it is hoped the moral and true Christian character may serve as a worthy example to all who will live a life of piety, strict probity, and with a desire to cultivate the finer affections of the heart.

Resolved, That wherever benevolence and Christian charity were needed, he was the first to bestow, and in dying, his last request to his beloved congregation was, that love and harmony should ever dwell in their midst.

Resolved, That we, as a church, express to the family of our beloved counsellor our deep felt sympathy, with the sincere desire that he who protects the widows and the orphans may comfort and console this family in their great affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family of the deceased; that they be embodied in the records of our proceedings, and that they be published in the ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES and in the World's Crisis.

CHARLES KOLER, Sec'y.

KNAPP. Died of consumption in Adams, Wis., July 21, 1871, O. P. Knapp; aged 26 years.

Patient through his long sickness, he passed into the dark land of the enemy, exclaiming "All is well." Some time ago he was led to examine the Scriptures by reading the works of Br. Blain. He joyfully received the truth, thence onward, as life lingered, in sweet submission to the Divine will he received strength to bear all, believing that God has power to raise the dead. The morning before his death he whispered, "I have a bright hope of resurrection to life eternal." Words of comfort were given from 1 Thes. 4: 18. May the Lord sanctify this affliction to the friends and relatives both West and East.

BROWN. Died at Pine River, Henrietta, Richland Co., Wis., July 19, 1871, Sr. Myra E., wife of Br Amos Brown; aged 37 years.

She was suddenly taken sick on Monday, and after two days severe suffering closed her useful life, leaving her husband and three children and numerous relatives to mourn. For the last few years she has been a faithful Christian, ready to perform the duties of the true child of God. Her mind was ready to receive the truth, and the Bible her constant study. She firmly believed in the sleep of the dead, the literal resurrection of the body, and the speedy coming of our Lord; and her untiring zeal to persuade others to live in readiness for the event, evinced her sincerity. She was faithful and prudent in her household, wearing a cheerful countenance in the every day trials of life. When her husband was called to the army, it was her constant practice every morning to read with her children the word of God; then kneel in prayer around the home altar to commit her husband, her children, her all to her Heavenly Father's care. She has lived to see her husband return safely, and her children publicly profess Christ.

Sr. B was arranging for the Q. M. commencing July 28, with the church at Pine River. On Saturday previous to her death, the family moved to their new dwelling, to arrange to receive the brethren and sisters from abroad. Their home has indeed been the home of the weary pilgrim, and the church has lost one of its most faithful members.

progression and a golden age to come in the state of mortality, studiously overlook, or refuse to allow any position in their calculations. But those who do perceive their value, are uneasy as to what is coming, and are perplexed concerning the world's prospects. And the most perplexing thing of all is, how intelligent Christians, conversant with the condition of mankind, can affirm that it is becoming Christianized, in the true sense of that word. It is, rather, declining from godliness.

Asia.

The Russian expedition against Khiva has been stopped by the threatened proclamation of a holy war through Central Asia against the Muscovite infidels. The force which had been prepared to invade Khiva did not exceed 12,000 men. A far greater number of troops were available, but the waterless country to be crossed rendered it absolutely necessary to restrict the expedition. The course which the Russian Government will now take will probably be to crush the malcontents in Bokhara and among the Kirghiz, before resuming the movement against Khiva.

Persia

The English Consul at Tabriz announces that he has received, and will forward to his Government, most heartrending details of the famine in Persia. A special from Constantinople says the famine in Persia is causing a dreadful havoc. The deaths in the province of Khorassan average 300 daily and so great is the distress that the dead bodies are devoured by the survivors, and men, women, and children are in some cases killed to render the supply of food more abundant. The plague has also appeared among the Persians, and the Turkish Government has been compelled, by the exigency of the case, to draw a sanitary cordon along the border of its dominions.—Another dispatch says: The accounts from Persia are in no way exaggerated. In addition to the famine, cholera, typhus fever, and the plague are making terrible ravages. The reports of canibalism are confirmed. The Governor of Pheraaze has placed a guard at each of the cemeteries to prevent the unfortunate starving people from disinterring dead bodis for food. The attaches of the British Embassy and the telegraph have all fled the country.

Mexico.

There is a gentle cynicism about our dispatches from Mexico, which is not without a charm of its own. The Lerdistas and Porfiristas are uniting against Juarez, for no assignable reason but because the majority is for him. Diplomatic relations are not to be resumed with France, which shows a persistence worthy of the Bourbons. A Roman Catholic entered a Protestant church, the other day, to stab the preacher, but contented himself finally with one of the congregation. We are informed that the country is quiet, and the regular industry of kidnapping flourishes,

Great Earthquake.

A special London dispatch says the earthquake in the Phillipine Islands on May 1, affected, in a terrible manner, the small islands of Camiguian, five miles from Misami's. For some months previously, especially in March, there was a succession of violent shocks, which opened extensive crevices in the earth. Finally, on May 1, the level plains near the village of Catarmin began gradually to subside, till the tops of the houses became level with the surface of the earth. This remarkable phenomenon attracted a large number of people, when suddenly some terrible shocks were felt, and before the thundering reverberation died away, the whole level plain fell in, engulfing 150 persons. The plain became the crater of a volcano, 1 500 feet wide, and from it smoke, ashes and stones, were thrown into the air. A pause till dark succeeded, when there was another explosion, and a rain of fire followed. The woods became ignited. Men and cattle went flying before the flames The spectacle was frightful in the extreme. The volcano continues to eject stones and earth. The inhabitants left the island, which formerly contained a population of 26,000. Camiguian produced one-tenth of the whole Manilla hemp grown.

Does It Mean Peace or War?

While the German staff office is provided with accurate information concerning the strongholds of its warlike neighbors, the Russian Government is just awakening to the necessity of knowing a good deal more than it does about its own. It is going to put its staff officers into the field and compel them to maintain an attack on and defense of St. Petersburg, each with an army of four divisions of infantry and eight or ten regiments of cavalry, together with an artillery train. The topographical sketches made during the campaign are to be submitted to the War Department. In the same connection may be noted the fact that at a scientific exhibition, to be opened this year by the Government at Moscow, detailed charts will be presented of Turkestan, where the progress of Russian arms has recently been marked, and where Germany, it is said, has sent men to "take notes."

France and the Pope.

The remarks of M Thiers on the Roman question on Saturday are temperate, and calculated to allay alike the unreasonable expectations of the Ultramontanes and the apprehensions of the friends of peace. Whatever is done, the President is positive that nothing which might lead to war is possible for France. No steps which might even tend to alienate Italy are to be taken now. This certainly ought to satisfy those who have thought it likely that France would be mad enough to complicate affairs with Italy while the work of reorganization—which especially required peace—should be still going on at home. On the other hand, the Ultramontane organ in Paris demands, that Corsica be offered the Pope as "an inviolable residence." There is not much probability that M Their's government will do any such foolish thing, and still less that the Pope would accept the island, after his repeated assertions that he should never leave Rome.—Tribune.

THE 1290 AND 1335 YEARS.

The "time, times and a half," mentioned in Daniel 12: 7, must surely be the same period as we have aleady considered, in its fullest and most complete sense; because, from the question to which it is an answer, and from the event which is to mark its close,—"after the accomplishment of the dispersion of the holy people" (Wintle's version),—the times of the Gentiles end with it.

But the two periods mentioned in the latter part of the same chapter,—1290 days (v. 11), and 1335 days (v. 12),—may not be a simple prolongation of the former; and this may be hinted by the notable change of the formula, these having a day for their unit, instead of a time. They are both confessedly obscure; but from the fact that the space by which the longer exceeds the former is exactly that of the difference between the incipient and the complete dates, viz., 75 years, we incline to accept them as intended to unite the two modes of computation. Thus the taking away of the daily sacrifice, and the setting up of the desolating abomination, may both be taken in the mystical sense;—the former equivalent to the rendering of the true church invisible (Rev. 12: 6), the latter to the revelation of the Papal apostacy. The 75 years are subdivided into periods of 30 and 45. The former of these, dated from 1792-6, brings us to the Greek insurrection, the first fatal blow to Turkey, and the beginning of the drying of the symbolic Euphrates. The latter promises its completion; and that imminently, if this computation is well-grounded.

A TIME NO LONGER.

In an intimate relation to this grand period of three times and a half stands the remarkable promise in Rev. 10: 6, 7, "thatthere should be time no longer." If we do not misread the Oracle, it adds an independent and very important confirmation to the chronological conclusions at which we have just arrived. Our translation, indeed, making it signify that time itself, time in the abstract, should cease, being lost in eternity, is untenable and absurd; being contradicted by the subsequent announcement of a thousand years (20: 4-7) to begin after the seventh trumpet has ceased. Mr. Elliott ("Hor. Apoc.," 5th ed.) renders it, "the time shall no further be prolonged;" and rejects the rendering of Mr. Birks and Mr. Bickersteth—"a time shall not yet be," (i. e., a mystic, symbolic time, chronological period), on the ground that the word is never used in this sense, either in the LXX version of Daniel, or in the Apocalypse; the word used in these cases being always and distinctively kairos." Mr. Elliott adds,—"Mr. Birks does not appear to me to have advanced a step towards removing the gravity of this objection.

Mr. Birks' argument we have not met with; but the gravity of the objection seems, to our own judgment, greatly diminished, when we reflect that there are but two original occurrences of the expression, besides the one in question. For Dan. 12: 7, and also Rev. 12: 14, are, without controversy, reproductions, and (so to speak) quotations, of the original phrase in Dan. 7: 25. And so the fact will stand thus: The Holy Ghost, for a year in a symbolic sense, has twice (Dan. 4: 13 (16); and 17: 25) used the word kairos, and once in (Rev. 10: 6) chronos. But the constant use of these two words as strictly synonymous and interchangeable, both in the Scriptures and in profane authors,[1] helps further to remove the objection.

Nor can we overlook the very notable parallelism between the passages Dan. 12: 7, and Rev. 10: 5. In the former a heavenly man stands on the waters of the river, and, holding up his right hand and his left hand to heaven, swears by him that liveth forever, that it shall be for a time, times and a half; and then all these things shall be finished. In the latter a glorious angel stands on the sea and on the earth, and, lifting up his hands to heaven, swears by him that liveth forever and ever, that there shall not be yet a time; but in the days of the seventh angel, whensoever he may have to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished. We can hardly fail to infer the identity of meaning of the terms used for "time" in the two cases; or to conclude that, in the latter utterance, two times and a half, out of the three and a half of the former, had already passed away.

Now, that the historical event prefigured in Rev. 10 is the glorious reformation under Luther, has been clearly shown by Mr. Elliott. Then, if these premises be accepted, we have good ground for confidence that, from A. D. 1517, there should not be 360 years before the consummation of the mystery of God.

EVENING-MORNING 2300.

We will now examine a prophetic period, perhaps the most difficult of all. In Daniel's vision of the ram and he-goat, the duration of the events foreshown is thus limited: "Unto 2300 days (lit., unto evening-morning 2300): then shall the sanctuary be cleansed (justified)."

We do not here inquire whether Rome (Pagan and Papal), or Mohammedism, be symbolized by this little horn; nor whether the oppressed and scandalized church, or the Gentile-trodden land of Israel, be intended by the sanctuary. The vindication of the one and the cleansing of the other will doubtless synchronize; and it is the chronology that is now in question.

In the third year of Belshazzar Daniel (8: 1) saw a vision, of which (v. 15) he sought for the meaning. A divine voice commissions Gabriel (v. 16) to make him understand the vision. Gabriel (vv. 20-26) explains the symbols copiously, with one exception, the symbol of duration. This he expressly shuts up, merely telling the seer that it shall be for many days, and that it reaches to the time of the end, "the last end of the indignation." But this point, "how long?" had been the main object of holy inquiry among the angelic speakers in the seer's hearing; so that, this being still shut up, Daniel remains "astonished at the vision, no one understanding it." (v. 27.)

It is plain, then that Gabriel had not, as yet, done what he had been commanded to do;—he had not "made the man to understand the vision."

But, in the first year of Darius (9: 1), Daniel being occupied in confession and prayer (v. 21), Gabriel is sent a second time to him, "the same Gabriel whom he had seen in the vision at the beginning" (as he is careful to tell us); who says, "O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding." That is, surely, "I am now come to perform the commission entrusted to me some time ago, in thy hearing" (but which hitherto had remained incomplete, perhaps in order to educe this very spirit of humiliation and confession):—"therefore," he goes on, "understand the matter, and consider the vision."

But what vision? No vision is mentioned as having been seen by Daniel, since that of the ram and he-goat; and the whole of Gabriel's address shows irrefragably that it is that vision which he wishes to recall to the prophet's attention, before he opens his explication.

Well; the prophet opens his ears, doubtless:—we open ours too. Now, at length, he is going "to understand that vision" which so astonished him before. He is going to get a clue to the duration of it, surely; because this is the only part left shut up.

The revealing angel then begins a discourse; and his first word shows that its subject is chronology. "Seventy weeks are cut off,"[2] etc. We listen to the end;—and what have we learned about "the vision?" What do we know about the evening-morning, that we did not know before? Most of us would, I fear be constrained to reply, "nothing!" Has Gabriel then failed a second time? Granted that we have gained some very valuable information about the proximity of Messiah; yet this is not exactly what was announced by him, when he appeared, as what he was going to give. It was more understanding of the former vision. And where is it? Was Daniel as much puzzled as we are? We certainly read no more of his mourning and astonishment; no more complaints that no one understood it. Perhaps he got some clue which we do not catch up. Possibly he reasoned somewhat thus: "Since seventy weeks are to be cut off" before Messiah's appearing, from what longer period are they to be cut off? What, but the 2300 evening morning? For no other integral period, no period from which 490 years could be cut off, has been mentioned in the previous vision, or at any other time since. If this be so, then, when once Messiah has appeared, and the concomitant circumstances have happened, the people of God will know that 490 years of the 2300 have lapsed; and thus, having the terminus a quo, will be able to fore-calculate the terminus ad quem, when the sanctuary shall be justified."

The angel says, "seventy weeks are cut off [lit. is cut off: as if en masse] over the people and over the holy city, to restrain apostacy, and to seal [or to bring to the full] sins".... These expressions appear to look onward to the period when the Jewish people and city should be given up by God, and the wrath should come upon them to the uttermost. And this was not till the beginning of the Roman war, when (A. D. 66) the believing Jews fled from Jerusalem; the son of the free-woman was finally separated from the son of the bondwoman; the salt of the nation was taken away, and the mass hastened to corruption.

How the details of the prediction are to be reconciled with this, it is not our purpose here to show. If we have succeeded in proving the connection of chs. 8, 9, and if the two phrases just quoted from 9: 24 carry on the seventy weeks to A. D. 66, it seems to follow (whatever difficulties we may find on other points) that the angel gives this key to the vision: that, whereas 2300 years shall bring the last end of the indignation and 490 years cut off from it bring A. D. 66, the remaining 1810 years must be dated from this point, which gives the year 1876 as the time when the sanctuary shall be justified.—(To be concluded.)

A TALK WITH THE NEW PRESS!

The arrival of the new press in our office was an event of no slight interest. It made us all extra work, and very hard work for some days, handling heavy machinery, and making the changes necessary in taking down and boxing the old servant, and arranging a place for the new one. As I only ate twice a day (and at the office at that), while the rest were away to their meals, I found that the new press could talk, as well as the old one. Though not so well-informed as that—how could it be? it had not yet had time for any impressions to be made—it seemed very willing to learn, and very well satisfied with its place and prospective work.

Its first utterance was as follows:

PRESS. Where am I?

W. Why, you are in the Press Room of the Western Advent Publishing Association.

P. Then I may call myself an Advent press, may I?

W. Yes, I think so.

P. Well, before we go any further, I'd like to know what that means; and what kind of folks these are that I am to work for and among.

W. I think I can tell you. Advent means coming. It is used oftener than any other way of the second coming of Christ. The Association you belong to believe that the Advent is close by, or at hand; and they have reasons for thinking so, and wish to publish these reasons to the world, and you are here to do this work.

P. I would like to know what Christ is coming for. Is it a matter of any great importance?

W. We think it is. Our future life depends upon it.

P. 'Future life!' I thought men always lived—didn't die. That's what I heard.

W. What! have you heard that error taught, so quick?

P. Why, yes! It was in the papers they had around the building that I was made in—something about 'immortal soul,' that was the real man. I didn't understand it very clearly. I think it was something immaterial.

W. Yes, it is taught everywhere—in school-books, dictionaries, papers, tracts, books, preaching, conversation—but for all that, it is not true. You will find the theory thoroughly exploded in the works by Whitmore, Collins, and Sheldon that you will soon be printing. Besides, you will learn a great deal from the weekly paper you are to print, and which, for the sake of the cause, I trust you will print well.

P. I'll try, and I am willing to learn. And if your books and papers teach what is true, I shall be glad that my lot is fallen here rather than in an office that publishes all manner of ungodly trash—novels and nonsense and infidelity of the day. But that kind of publishers have plenty of means to keep their presses running. I hear that some of them run night and day, stopping only for repairs. Can you keep me at work, as steadily as that?

[I confess I was a little ashamed to tell the whole truth just here. So I turned the subject a little.]

W. Oh! we h[illegible]me noble souls among us, alway[illegible] all they can. Within a [illegible] few of them have given a [illegible] ars toward paying for you; and we think other equally noble-hearted ones will make up the balance.

P. Oh! yes, that is good to hear. But who is going to pay for the paper, to print the tracts on; and for wood to feed the boiler; and ink, and type, the services of these young men who have worked so hard, and seem ready to keep doing so, here in the office?

Just here 'the boys' came back from dinner, and our conversation stopped. I leave the close question of our press with the reader. What is your answer?

WILLIAM.

A SUNDAY IN NEW YORK. NO. 3.

DR. J. P. THOMPSON.

In the evening I went to the Broadway Tabernacle to hear Joseph P. Thompson. His church is one of the finest and his congregation one of the most fashionable in New York. A choir, seated back of the pulpit, furnishes the music. On this particular evening the seats were only about one-third filled. As a theologian merely, Dr. Thompson has a reputation second, perhaps, to that of no other man in the city. His text on this occasion was in 1 Cor. 13: 13: "Now remain faith, hope, and charity these three and the greatest of these is charity." He gave a rapid but interesting review of the entire chapter; then separately examined each of the virtues mentioned and its claim upon us, and finally give the reason for the apostle's conclusion that charity was the greatest of all virtues. His pronunciation and articulation were almost faultless, though he never seemed to choose a word for its rhetorical effect. Unlike many fluent speakers, Dr. Thompson is remarkably clear in expression. His sentences are never so involved and complicated as to render his meaning obscure or uncertain. He has a hearty dislike to all circumlocution, or talking round about a thing. His distinctness of statement, method, and clearness in illustration make interesting and instructive whatever subject he undertakes. He abhors "sensational" preaching, and relies upon the merit of what he says for the desired effect. Rant, bombast and affectation are at a serious discount at the Broadway Tabernacle, if I might judge by the single sermon I heard. Dr. Thompson seeks to instruct rather than amuse, to convince than to please. Unlike Dr. Hall, he never once seemed to blend himself with his subject. Unlike Mr. Beecher he seemed impervious to the magnetism of his audience. He had no digressions, no relaxations. From the moment he announced his subject until he took his seat his course was right onward and undeviating. Ever calm and self-possessed, all the powers of his mind appeared to concentrate upon the point under discussion. If he lacked Dr. Hall's tenderness and pathos, and Mr. Beecher's wealth of illustration and felicities of speech, he had what neither possessed in the same degree, the art of keeping his subject clearly before his audience from first to last. If he did not cause his hearers to weep or laugh, he did what was perhaps better, he caused them to think.

J. H. WHITMORE.

THE BANES AND THE ANTIDOTES.—The banes of domestic life are littleness, falsity, vulgarity, harshness, scolding, vociferation, an incessant issuing of superfluous prohibitions and orders, which are regarded as impertinent interferences with the general liberty and repose, and are provocative of wrangling or exploding resentments. The blessed antidotes that sweeten and enrich domestic life are refinements, good tempers, forbearance from all unnecessary commands or dictation, and generous allowances of mutual freedom. Love makes obedience lighter than liberty. Man wears a noble allegiance, not as a collar, but as a garland. The graces are never so lovely as where they thus dwell together; they make a heavenly home.

Withdraw thyself, and I forsake thee!
My hand lies fallow: Master till me!
My heart lies empty; Master fill me!
It plays the traitor; Master, win me!
It faints: it dies! Put new life in me!
It goes astray. Good shepherd, lead me!
It sighs for hunger; Come and feed me!
It is so poor! Give riches to me!
It is corrupt. O Lord, renew me!
So ignorant! Oh! wilt thou teach me?
Has wandered far! But thou canst reach me!
Is sore diseased: Physician, heal me!
Exposed to danger: oh, conceal me!
It trembles! In thine arms, oh, fold me!
Begins to sink! O Savior, hold me!
Is sinking fast! Lord, look upon me!
So cold and dark! O! shine upon me!
A poor, lost sinner! Come and find me!
A rebel! May thy love now bind me!
A prodigal! Wilt thou receive me?
A beggar! Oh! wilt thou receive me?
A backslider! Wilt thou restore me?
Unholy! May thy presence awe me!
Unfit to die! O God, prepare me!
So weak! On eagles' wings oh, bear me!
So comfortless! Lord Jesus, cheer me!
So lonely! God of love, acquit me!
Unfit for heaven's pure service! Fit me!
A suppliant! Do not refuse me!
Oh! come and fill the hungry with good things:
For thou hast all I need thou king of kings!

A SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

BEING

A RELIGIOUS AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

BY GREY QUILL.

CHAPTER V.

After a long time a prominent member of the church died. I watched with him often during his sickness and saw him breathe his last. I had known him from my earliest recollection, and though, during all that time, he had been a member of the church, I knew his shortcomings were as numerous as were his neighbors, who made no profession. You may well imagine my surprise, then, when I heard the panegyric pronounced over him at his funeral; for I assure you, if I had not positively known better, I should have been led to believe he had never committed a wrong act in his life.

Is was said of him in this discourse (besides many other things) that he had gone to his reward—a home in heaven where Jesus was, ever more there to abide. Happy man! thought I. Election has proved an excellent doctrine in your case; for if it had not been for that, your prospect would hardly have been as good as that of a poor man who died some time ago, who, according to the opinion of those who ought to know, went immediately to hell. The death of this member seemed to stir up the minister to duty, and to my great joy he gave notice that he would preach a revival sermon the next Sabbath. He did so; and I was present and heard every word of it, but can now recollect but one thing, which was this: that in order to go to heaven at death, as Mr. A. had done, we must make ourselves a new heart; or, rather (as he afterwards added), the Lord must make one for us, or we should never get there. This was all useless talk to me, for I had no correct idea of his real meaning.[1] And as I felt the old heart pumping away regularly at the fountain of my natural life I could not see how it could be stone (as he declared), and do its work so well.

However as he had appointed an "inquiry" meeting at his house the coming week, and invited all who desired their soul's salvation to attend, and as I considered myself one of that number, I went, hoping to obtain a solution to the enigma of salvation from the election stand-point. Some half dozen others attended for the same purpose, also; and being invited into his study we waited with interest for the reverend gentleman to dispel the cloud which so completely obscured our spiritual vision. Judge then our disappointment, when, instead of explaining to us how to get rid of our stony hearts and get better ones, he quietly remarked that his object in appointing this meeting was to ascertain how many there were among the unconverted in his congregation who felt an interest in their soul's eternal welfare; and without further remark immediately dismissed us.

Thus ended my first direct effort to get religion, and you will readily perceive it was an utter failure. My next one was not much better, but such as it was you shall have it. The Methodists were at that time quite a different people in many important respects from what they are now; for they were humble, devoted and dressed very plainly. They were in fact estimated, viewed and despised by the Calvinists, in very much the same way that Adventists now are by them, and I have often thought the truthfulness of the old adage, "Abuse a child if you want to make a hard master," has had a literal verification in their case. For no Methodist was allowed under any circumstances to preach in their churches, and, I might truly add, if they could prevent it, out of them either.

This being the case they had never, up to that period, had meetings in our town; and as I had never lived any where else, I had never heard them preach. I had heard of them, however, for they had held campmeetings around the country in various localities, and their fame for making converts was notorious, and not calculated to elevate them much in the esteem of the staid Calvinists; for it was reported that they believed and taught men could get their kind of religion themselves, which convinced them it must be a spurious article. Not so with me however. At least, as the Calvinistic was entirely out of my reach, so far as my experience went, and as the Methodist kind, by report, was so easily attainable, I resolved to try the latter at a venture.

Learning there was to be a campmeeting in an adjoining town I walked the twelve miles that intervened and found myself one bright autumn morning about eleven o'clock in the beautiful grove devoted to the purpose. The novelty of the thing struck my fancy, and the circle of tents, with the preachers' stand in the center certainly presented a beautifully picturesque and inviting appearance.

Soon the bell sounded, the people gathered to the seats in front of the stand, and the services commenced. But the sermon I cannot tell much about, I had so many new things to look at, except that it was a very noisy one, which was so great a contrast to the quiet, monotonous tone to which I was accustomed, that so far as that part of it is concerned, it was vividly impressed on my memory.

After the public meeting closed, the people gathered into and around the various tents, and private services commenced in each. I do not mean private in an absolute sense, for such a bedlam of noise never saluted my ears before. I mean no disrespect by this. I have since learned that some people are so constituted that it is a great relief to them to give vent to their feelings in that way, and the more noise they make the better they feel, and, consequently, the more they enjoy! But to me, who had never seen or heard any thing of the sort, but had ever been accustomed to quietness in worship, their unusual hubbub crowded all serious thoughts (if I had any) entirely out of my head.

Drawing near to a large tent around which a goodly number of spectators were assembled, and learning by inquiry that the intense racket from that particular locality was, according to the belief of that people, engendered by the Spirit in its efforts (by the aid of the lungs of the brethren) to relieve some "seekers" after religion from their load of sin, I listened with wrapt attention, and watched the movements with eager interest. I will not give the details of what I saw and heard in the full hour and a half I remained a spectator of their proceedings, lest it might be supposed I design (which I certainly do not) to ridicule them. Suffice it to say that at the close of the exercises I turned away from the tent, and instead of staying, as I intended to when I came, through the day and over night, I immediately set my face homeward, well satisfied if the salvation of my soul depended on entering into that arrangement in order to get religion, its damnation was certain and sure.

[1] These men always selected their texts from the Old Testament, but never explained them; so their preaching was truly an "incomprehensible mystery" to their hearers. If they had given a right explanation it would have been a benefit to those interested. But in the course they saw fit to take, the more they said the less we understood their real meaning.

ELD. LAMB'S LECTURE ON THE SOUL.

On the 11th inst, I attended the Baptist church in this city, and heard according to previous arrangement, the pastor open a monstrous theological field-piece in full range with Adventism, on the distinctiveness of the soul from the body. There was considerable rhetoric in the lecture, and some good grammar. It was pretty well seasoned with sarcastic allusions to Adventists. Unfair reasoning and unjust interpretations abounded quite plentifully. In short the "lecture" was about what I anticipated it would be—a rehash of old, defunct and long exploded objections to man's unit nature.

The premise from which he tried to argue was this: "The Bible takes it for granted that the soul is distinct from the body." In the statement of this proposition he evidently endeavored to befog the minds of his hearers and misrepresent his opponents. Do we not all believe that the soul of a being is distinct from the being itself? Certainly we do. And he knows it, or at least he ought to before he begins to talk about us and misrepresent us. He labors to make the impression that if he can prove the "soul to be distinct from the body," he will by this demolish Adventism and establish "immortal-soul-ism."

But the Adventists of Amboy are not to be captured by such vain sophisms and futile attempts to cover up the main issue. And if Eld. Lamb is a fair man and wishes to treat his subject with candor, he will hereafter abandon vain refuges and take the open field. The question is: "Does man possess by nature a deathless entity commonly called the immortal soul?"

His text was Gen. 2: 7. He very meekly remarked that with regard to the "sleep of the dead," he felt no interest. He regarded it of little consequence, and hence concluded to let it pass! A most sensible conclusion, indeed. He regarded Adventist as sadly in error, and that error of such a nature that it stands directly in the way of the conversion of sinners! Yet he respected their earnestness and diligence in teaching what they believed to be the truth.

The whole world he said had from time immemorial believed that the soul and body are distinct (his way of saying the soul is immortal), with three slight exceptions, viz: some Greek philosophers, a Jewish sect called Sadducees, and a small party in modern times called Materialists. Surely this shows that the Elder has a vast deal of knowledge on the history of the "immortal soul," that is if we are allowed to treat his erudition on this subject wholly ironically.

Even the most degraded heathen have believed it, he says. And because every body for all time has believed it, therefore the Bible must flatly deny it or else its silence will be interpreted as an argument in its favor. Query: Does not the Bible deny it? Please read Job 4: 17, and Paul's discourse on the resurrection in 1 Cor. ch. 15.

The words in the original translated soul were used by the sacred writers in the same sense as they were by profane writers, who believed in the immortality of the soul; hence the sacred writers believed in the immortality of the soul: therefore the Bible teaches that man's soul is distinct from his body, or is immortal. This was one of his powerful arguments. Such syllogistic reasoning as this is about on a par with the following:

A cow is an animal:
But, a hog is an animal, also:
Therefore, a hog is a cow.

He spoke of Abraham's giving up the ghost and being gathered to his people. He claimed this was incontrovertible evidence that Abraham has a soul capable of existing after death of the body, from the fact that it was gathered to his fathers. One of the unqualified assertions that he made was that "Abraham's spirit went off and joined the church of the first-born at the death of his body." I wanted to ask the brother what kind of people Abraham's fathers were. Joshua says they were idolaters! According to Br. Lamb's theory such people go to hell when they die: so Abraham must have joined his fathers in the dark abode of the dammed.

All men are gathered to their fathers at death in the gloomy chambers of sheol, and all shall "sleep" together until the resurrection separates them. This is so abundantly proved in the Scriptures that a school-boy ought to understand it.

Br. Lamb felt very confident that the account of Elijah raising the widow's son shows that man has a soul. He said the soul came into the child. He forgot to think however that if he is right Elijah prayed the child out of heaven; also, that the word translated soul is often translated life.

I reviewed the lecture Sunday eve., June 18. Had a full house of attentive listeners. The Lord gave us much liberty in dispensing his truth and exposing error. There was deep interest manifested by the audience. Br. Lamb dismissed his meeting and many of his members were present. We expect to continue the review as long as he continues his lectures. May the Lord give success to his own truth is my prayer.

C. C. MARSTON.

A DIALOGUE.

BETWEEN TWO METHODISTS AND AN ADVENTIST.

Methodist. You Adventists say that when a man dies, he dies just like a horse or dog: he is dead all over—no soul to save.

Adventist. Yes, we believe when a man dies he is dead: not that he is more alive than he was before. And we believe he has got more soul to save than you do. Man is a soul. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul"—not a part of him, but man himself.

Meth. But what do you do with what David said—the soul goes to God, and the body to dust.

Ad. David never said any such thing.

Meth. Yes he did, or else some of the other prophets did.

Ad. No: it is not in the Bible. You cannot find it. Neither can you palm off your home made Bible on Adventist.

Meth. Look here. I want to ask you one question: If the soul dies, and we all go to dust, what will be left to represent you in eternity? Say.

Ad. God bless you, I expect to be there to represent myself. Job said he should see God for himself, and not another. How would an immortal soul look representing me? Send nothing "beyond the bounds of time and space to represent something!

Meth. I say God can't raise a mass of dead clay to life: it would only be a new creation.

Ad. I will tell you something God cannot do: he cannot raise to life again that which never died. But Jesus says "the hour is coming when all they which are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth." Are immortal souls in the grave? Daniel says that "many that sleep in the dust shall awake."

Meth. Hold on. Sleep does not mean death: only asleep.

Ad. Yes: but look here. "Some to shame and everlasting contempt." Not all "asleep in Jesus," I think.

Meth. Well I want to ask you another question. Suppose my brother here lives a good life here, and is honest, and suffers along through this life, and finally dies; and I live an ungodly life, and murder and steal and am killed by a stroke of lightning—when do we get our reward?

Ad. Jesus says: "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give unto every man according as his work shall be." You will never get your reward till he does come.

Meth. There is nothing in heathenism nor infidellity nor any thing else, that equals this wild Adventism. It is ahead of it all. You may go out of Illinois and you can't find an Adventist.

Ad. Amen. That is partly so. There is "nothing ahead of Adventism. It is as old as the Bible. It is the eternal truth of God. But you are mistaken about Adventists. They are all over the United States, and the old world, too. And you can't find men to meet their arguments either.

Meth. Oh! we don't believe in arguing. It don't do any good. We don't want to debate with you. Did not Jesus say, the best thing, when he went away in the clouds, that he was going to prepare mansions for us in heaven? Now what is to hinder a good man from going to heaven?

Ad. No sir. Jesus did not say any such thing, "when he was going away in the clouds," nor any where else. In John ch. 14 we read that he said—"In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you. If I go away I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

Meth. Why, we believe he is coming, just as much as you do.

Ad. What is he coming for, if we die and go to him, and get our reward then and there?

Meth. Oh! we don't get our final reward at death. We only get part of it—just go into a state of happiness; that's all.

Ad. You must have had a late revelation. I don't read of any such reward in the Bible. I read when we get our reward we get it: we don't get a piece at a time; a little when we die, and more when we see Jesus coming. We do not go into a state of happiness at death. Solomon says we "have no more a reward." And our "hatred, our envy, our love, are perished."

Meth. Oh! you believe the soul dies. We don't! I tell you a dead man knows more after he dies than he did before he died, or his immortal soul does.

Ad. Bible. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The dead know not any thing." "There is no knowledge nor device or wisdom in the grave whither thou goest."

Meth. He meant a spiritual death.

Ad. You are better at telling what the Bible means than what it says. I thought the spirit could not die.

Meth. Oh! he meant "dead to sin." But what is meant where it says—Behold! he cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to judge the world, if good folks don't go to heaven at death? He had not raised any from the grave yet. You can't tell. I can tell you who they are. They were Isaac and Jacob, and Abraham, and the old prophets, and that innumerable cloud of witnesses, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Ad. I am sorry you and the eleventh chapter of Hebrews do not agree.

Meth. I don't remember what is there, now.

Ad. Well, I can soon tell you. "These all died in faith not, having received the promises." That is the difference between you and the Bible. You have them in heaven, or somewhere where God is, you do not know where; but yet you say God is everywhere, and no where in particular.

Meth. Don't you know the Bible says God is an uncreated spirit. We don't believe God has got any body or person.

Ad. No sir. I do not know of any such scripture. It is not in the Bible. But I read—"Those that come to God must believe that he is."

Meth. Oh! all you have to prove the personality of God is, that he says he "made man in his own image." And he meant his moral image: that was all.

Ad. Jesus, Paul says, was made in the express image of his Father's person. And you say he has no person.

THE HERESY OF HYMENÆUS.[1]

BY JAMES H. WHITMORE.

"Their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some. Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." (2 Tim. 2: 17-19.)

The race of skeptics still lives. Hymeneus and Philetus have their representatives in the nineteenth century. Their word now as then doth eat like a canker. They still overthrow the faith of some, "nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his."

I. It is probable that Hymeneus and Philetus belonged to the Gnostics a sect of philosophers that arose in the first century who claimed to be the only true expositors of Christianity. They formed for themselves a system of theology, agreeable to the philosophy of Pythagoras, and Plato, to which, out of deference to Greek culture, they accommodated their interpretations of Scripture. They professed to believe that matter was external and the source of all evil, and this belief would not allow them to accept the doctrine of a future resurrection of the body. The Greek philosophers regarded the body as the prison of the soul, and professed to look forward with joy to the time when death should relieve them from the bondage of corruption. They, therefore, hated and ridiculed the notion of a physical resurrection. To render the Gospel acceptable to this powerful and cultured class it was necessary to deny a corporeal resurrection as neither desirable nor possible, and to affirm that the only resurrection promised by Christ, was the resurrection of the soul from ignorance and vice to knowledge and virtue. Thus the advocates of this theory could say "our resurrection is past already," and by this means overthrow the faith of some. The same view is entertained by not a few in our day. It is thought that a large portion of the Friends or Quakers believe only in a spiritual resurrection, while it is certain that the doctrine finds advocates in other denominations such as the Unitarian and Universalist Societies, most of whom utterly deny the resurrection of the body. A discourse delivered by O. B. Frothingham in Lyric Hall, New York, last April, has the following remarkable passage: "Fairly considered, the New Testament does not record the physical resurrection of Jesus as a body, but his spiritual resurrection as a power of life in the soul." To him who accepts the Scriptures as inspired, such words must appear as a hollow mockery of human faith, and as a hardy denial of all testimony, human as well as divine. Like the Greek philosophers and Gnostic Christians of the first century, Mr. Frothingham affirms his belief in the immortality of the soul as the basis of his theological faith. "When often asked," said he "if I believe in the immortality of the soul, I am tempted to reply: 'It is precisely in that I do believe. It is the sum of all my convictions.' Believing that, it is hardly necessary to say what else I cling to. I believe not so much in the soul's immortality as in the soul's immortalities." This is out-Platoing Plato, and shows the advanced state of the philosophy of the nineteenth century. The Greek believed in the immortality of the soul, and the American says this doctrine "is the sum of all his convictions." The Athenian, professed to believe in the immortality of the soul as a substance, the New York philosopher goes much further than this and professes to believe in the "immortalities" of the soul, four of which he is kind enough to mention in his discourse on "The immortalities of man." In view of the havoc which philosophy has made and is making with the word of God how necessary and appropriate seems the solemn warning of the apostle Paul to the Colossians: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy!" The New Yorkers of the nineteenth century are in quite as much danger of being spoiled through philosophy, as were the Colossians of the first century.

II. The advocates of a spiritual resurrection only, cite but a few passages of Scripture to sustain their view. Among them are the following: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." (Eph. 5: 14) "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." (Col. 3: 1.) We might allow that these passages teach a 'Spiritual resurrection' in the same sense that Eph. 2: 1, teaches a spiritual death; but it would by no means follow that no other resurrection is taught in the Scriptures. I ought to say, perhaps, that our 'orthodox' brethren quote for the same purpose, though with less reason, Ezekiel's vision of dry bones (Ezk. ch. 37), and our Lord's words in John 5: 25.

THE DOCTRINE DISPROVED.

III. The theory that a spiritual resurrection is the only one taught in the Bible is easily shown to be erroneous.

1. From the language of Christ and his apostles.

In the fifth chapter of John's Gospel our Lord is said to have uttered these weighty words: "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." This passage alone is sufficient to prove a physical resurrection. The doctrine that we are reviewing only allows of the resurrection of one class—the righteous. But in the passage here cited two classes are plainly mentioned as experiencing a resurrection. Nothing short of an utter disregard of all laws of interpretation can make this text teach any other than a corporeal resurrection.

Again our Lord told the Sadducees, that "they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." (Lk. 20: 35, 36.) Against the teaching of this celebrated passage the Gnostic heresy cannot stand. Four results attend subjects of the resurrection mentioned in the text. (a) Through it or by means of it they obtain another world. (b) In the world they neither marry nor are given in marriage. (c) "Neither can they die any more" (d) "They are equal unto the angels." Let us see if any of these results attend the subjects of a spiritual resurrection. (a) Do they obtain another world by means of it? Or, in other words, do they really and literally live in another world, the moment they are converted? (b) Is it true that they neither marry nor are given in marriage? (c) Is it true that they can not die any more? (d) Are they equal unto the angels? The obvious and straightforward answers to be given to these questions will carry with them the assured conviction of a certain defeat to the theory under review.

2. The apostles, not less plainly than their Master, taught the same great doctrine of a physical resurrection. Matthew records the fact that at our Lord's crucifixion, "the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection." (Mat. 27: 52, 53.) Surely this was a bodily resurrection—the subjects of it came from the graves. The passage has already been noticed where our Lord says "all that are in the graves shall come forth." Will they not come forth bodily? Paul taught that the resurrection would take place at the sounding of the last trump; that the natural body would be raised a spiritual body; that when Christ should come the second time he would change the body of our humiliation, that it might be fashioned like unto his glorious body; that those Christians who should be alive at our Lord's second advent should not go before them which slept in Jesus, but that the Lord himself should descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God, and that the dead in Christ should rise first. Long after his conversion or 'spiritual resurrection,' the great apostle expresses a fervent wish that he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead, not as though he had already attained. It is certain, therefore, that the apostle Paul looked forward with ardent hopes for the resurrection of the dead, as to the time when he expected to enter upon his everlasting reward.

3. A second line of argument may be brought forward based upon the resurrection of Christ, which throughout the New Testament is made both the proof and the pattern of our own resurrection. Surely no one will say that the sinless Jesus experienced a spiritual resurrection; yet his resurrection is made the model of our own. He was the first fruits; and if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Paul thus recapitulates the gospel that he had preached to the Corinthians: "I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." Any person who can read the chapter in which this passage is found and understand it to teach only a 'spiritual resurrection,' or a conversion from sin to righteousness, must do a wholesale spiritualizing business, and is quite too far gone in mysticism to learn anything through the medium of plain words, or to be influenced by any arguments addressed to the human understanding.

4. The constant allusion to material things, and to the places from which the dead are to come, indicates in the clearest manner the fact that a physical resurrection is the one referred to. Such expressions as 'the dust of the earth' 'the graves,' and 'the sea,' cannot refer to a spiritual resurrection, unless, indeed, they represent the evil propensities of human nature—an exegesis that would be extremely dangerous for any expositor to adopt.

5. Finally, the very fact that the figure of a spiritual resurrection is used in Scripture, of itself presupposes a literal resurrection of the body. For all figures used to illustrate spiritual things must have a physical basis.

We conclude therefore, that this theory of a resurrection is without the support of Scripture, and can only be established at the expense of violating every principle of sound interpretation.

THE NEW CHURCH THEORY.

Another, and much more plausible theory, intended, like that of the Gnostics, to render the doctrine of a resurrection acceptable to philosophy, is that the resurrection takes place at the death of the body. This doctrine appears to be of modern origin. It was first formally taught by Emmanuel Swedenborg, a Swedish baron, about the middle of the last century. In the American edition of his work entitled "Heaven and Hell," Baron Swedenborg states the doctrine in these words: "By resuscitation is meant the drawing forth of the spirit from the body, and its introduction into the spirit-world, which is commonly called resurrection." He professes to have died, and returned to life, and by this means to have put the theory to the practical test of a personal demonstration. "How resuscitation (or resurrection) is effected, has not only been told me, but also shown by living experience. The experiment itself was made with me, in order that I might fully know how it was done."

Prof. George Bush, of New York, teaches the same doctrine. In his elaborate work on the resurrection he says: "The resurrection body, is that part of our present being to which the essential life of man pertains. We may not be able to see it, to handle it, to analyze it, to describe it. But we know that it exists, because we know that we ourselves exist. It constitutes the inner essential vitality of our present bodies, and it lives again in another state, because it never dies. It is immortal in its own nature, and it is called a body—a spiritual body—because the poverty of the human language, or perhaps the weakness of the human mind, forbids the adoption of any more fitting term to express it. It is, however, a body which has nothing to do with the gross material particles which enter into the composition of our present earthly tenements." (Anastasis, p. 70.)

Again he says: "The true doctrine of the resurrection, is the doctrine of the development of a spiritual body at death, from the bodies we now inhabit... "The true resurrection takes place at the death of every individual believer, when he emerges from a material into a spiritual body."

In Fore Gleams of Immortality a work written by Edmund H. Sears, and published by the American Unitarian Association, the same theory is stated in these words: "Man's resurrection is the putting forth at death of a new existence, just as the decaying seed puts forth the blade. Its decay is necessary in order to release the life and the beauty that were imprisoned within its foldings.... The spiritual body is included elementally in our present mode of existence, with its perceptive powers all ready for the enlargement. The soul is not a metaphysical nothing, but a heavenly substance and organism, fold within fold. The material falls off, and the spiritual stands forth and fronts the objects and breathes the ethers of immortality. The future is wrapped up within us, and waiting to be unrolled. Death will not transfer us; it will only remove a hindrance and a vail. We receive with our present being the germ of all we are to become hereafter."

The advocates of this theory of the resurrection are found not only in the "New Church" the Unitarian and the Universalist churches, but are more or less numerous in all orthodox Protestant denominations. The doctrine itself like most other theological heresies, is built upon the essentially heathen notion that man is composed of two antagonistic substances or entities—a natural body and an immaterial soul. The body is the prison, and the soul a prisoner. Death is that happy event which sets the prisoner free. He rises from the dead body or decaying prison, it to a higher state of existence, and this is called the resurrection from the dead.

To many this theory may seem too audacious and absurd ever to become a formidable belief. But the truth is, orthodoxy is too heavily weighted with its own absurdities to successfully resist the innovation. Orthodoxy from its own premises can show no good reason whatever for the resurrection of the body, and in claiming it should be raised, it shoulders all the alleged philosophical difficulties, without receiving any compensation therefor. Thus burdened it can make but feeble headway against its lighter armed but more 'spiritual' opponent.

THE NEW CHURCH THEORY DISPROVED.

1. It contradicts those scriptures that teach that Christ was the first to rise from the dead. The apostle Paul claimed before King Agrippa that it was a saying of Moses and the prophets: "That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead. (Acts 26: 23.) Again, to the Corinthians he writes—"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.... But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor 15: 20-23.) Others had been raised, but not with "the power of an endless life." Christ was the first who arose "to die no more." But according to the New Church theory, Abel and not Christ, was the first who rose from the dead. This theory requires us to believe that many millions had risen from the dead "to die no more," before Christ's first advent. But in Luke 14: 14 our Lord taught "the resurrection of the just" was a future event. Therefore the New Church theory cannot be true.

2. According to Prof. Bush's theory our Lord's resurrection must have taken place on Thursday afternoon, instead of Sunday morning; he must have risen from the cross of Calvary, and not as currently reported from Joseph's tomb in the garden. The mere statement of such absurdities carries with it their complete refutation.

3. Jesus said to Martha, "Thy brother shall rise again." But according to Prof. Bush's theory he had already experienced a resurrection at his death four days before. Is it not plain that our Lord spoke of a physical resurrection? The sequel proves that he did, for he called Lazarus from the grave, and thus was Martha's brother raised.

4. This theory is opposed to Christ's resurrection as the proof and pattern of our own.

5. The Swedenborgian theory is opposed to a general and future resurrection of the dead. Such a resurrection is plainly taught in the following Scriptures: "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall come forth, etc. (John 5: 28.) "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." (Dan. 12: 2.) "Thy dead men shall live together with my dead body shall they arise." (Is 26: 19.) "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." (Acts 24: 15.) "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thess. 4: 16.) "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it: and death and the grave delivered up the dead that were in them." (Rev. 20: 13.)

6. Finally this theory is opposed to the teachings of Moses and the prophets, to the express assertions of Christ and his apostles, and generally to the whole spirit and tenor of Scripture. We can not, therefore, accept it as true.

Let us build our faith upon the word of God rather than upon the metaphysical subtleties of human reason. Pagan philosophy will not eventually triumph, advocate who may.

"Truth though crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers.
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshipers."

The words of those who deny a future resurrection of the dead have caused much mischief in the world, and have overthrown the faith of some. "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." How comforting this assurance ought to be to us all! The foundation of God is sure. Nothing can disturb it. Christ is the foundation of the Christian Church. He is the resurrection and the life. The assurance that he has given his disciples is, "Because I live ye shall live also." He knows who are his. He is the Good Shepherd. He knows his sheep and they know him. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Sacred is their dust. Blessed is their memory.

"Those bodies that corrupted fell,
Shall incorrupt arise,
And mortal forms shall spring to life
Immortal in the skies."

Acknowledging this blessed hope, let us live worthy of it. Let us love and reverence the Holy Scriptures, that through faith in Jesus Christ, are able to make us wise unto salvation. Error shall not triumph. Truth shall be victorious.

"Faith sees the bright eternal doors
Unfold to make his children way;
They shall be clothed with endless life
And shine in everlasting day.

The trump shall sound, the dead shall awake,
From the cold tomb the slumberers spring,
Though heaven with joy their myriads rise,
And hail their Savior and their King."

Translations and Notes by Gilbert Wakefield B. A.

Mat 16: 26. Or to redeem his life: i. e. when once it is lost; for, as Homer says, there is no equivalent of life.—Wakefield, who thus translated the verse: "For what will a man be profited, though he gain the whole world, and lose his life. And what can a man propose as the redemption of his life."

Mat. 20: 18, 19. "The Son of man will be delivered up to the chief priests and scribes, who will sentence him to death, and deliver him up to the Gentiles to mock and to scourge and to crucify: and on the third day he will return to life."

Luke 16: 23. In the grave; and conformably to this, he is spoken of as having a body. (v. 24.) It must be remembered that hades nowhere means hell, gehenna, in any author whatsoever [ancient] sacred or profane: and also, our Lord is giving his hearers a parable (Mat. 13: 34), and not a piece of real history. To them who regard the narrative as exhibiting a reality, it must stand as an unanswerable argument for the purgatory of the papists. The universal meaning of hades is the state of the dead; because the term sepulcher, or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire, etc.

John 6: 63. "It is the truth that giveth life. The body is of no use without it. The declarations which I am speaking to you, are the breath of life." The scrupulous and unlearned may consult, for their satisfaction, Gen. 2: 7; 6: 17; 2 Ki. 17: 17, 21, and the margin of the common version, James 2: 26. And there is not one place in the Scriptures, where the original word [pneuma] would not more properly and intelligently be so translated: and I take an opportunity to say this now as my apology for conforming in so many instances to unconquerable prejudice. The energy of the supreme Being could not be more plainly represented than by the term, to which the Scriptures attribute all the powers of living men.

Jno. 14: 1-3. "Let not your heart be troubled. Put your trust in God; put your trust, also, in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. Behold, I tell you; I am going to prepare a place for you; and when I have been to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, ye may be also."

Acts 5: 16-20. "The high priest rose up, and all his company (being of the sect of the Sadducees), full of spirit and energy, and laid hands on the apostles, and put them in a common prison. But an angel of the Lord, in the night opened the door of the prison; and when he had brought them out, said: Go, present yourselves in the temple, and declare unto the people all this doctrine of eternal life."

Jas. 1: 21. "Which is able to save your souls." I should prefer,—which is able to save your lives: viz. to secure for you everlasting life; and so in all instances of this. But we cannot bear these things yet.

The word soul, from the above terms occurs in the Scriptures 828 times. It means, primarily, breath. 2. Life or the vital principle. 3. The mind—inclusive of its appetites, affections, passions. 4. A creature or being. It never in the Holy Scriptures, means an immaterial entity, or our immortal being; is never called immortal, nor undying, nor by any equivalent expression; nor does the context in any sense demand any similar sense.

As but few persons are able to possess the Hebrew Concordance, we have conceived the idea of republishing its valuable testimony on the use of several words; and if our scheme meets the approbation of our readers, we will carry it out fully.

Soul [Heb. nephesh] occurs for the first time in Gen. 1: 20. And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, soul, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

And what creatures these were that had a soul, appears from the verse following: And God created great whales, and every living creature, living soul, that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

Again we read, v. 24: And God said let the earth bring forth the living creature, living soul, after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so.

We learn from these passages that great whales, cattle and creeping things, and beasts of the earth in short every thing that breathes—and all souls, living souls. And not only so, but they all possess a soul. for in v. 30 we read: And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, soul, I have given every green herb for meat: and it was so.

The next reference to soul is in Gen, 2: 7. And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.

The Hebrew word here rendered soul, includes all beings that have animal life; and hence is applied to animals of the sea and land. The English word soul originally had this extent of meaning.—Am. Bible Union.

"Some have supposed that the account of the creation of the soul, Gen. 2: 7, contains an intimation of its immortality. If there be in this verse such an intimation, it must be found either in the expression, 'the Lord God....breathed into his nostrils,' or in the phrase, 'breath of life,' and 'man became a living soul.' If it be in the former phrase, then the idea is that God infused a portion of HIMSELF, of his own divinity, into the human body at that time But few will admit this idea Most of us think there is more poetry than truth in the line of one of our hymns:

"Our souls are his immortal breath"

"If the proof is sought in the phrases, 'breath of life,' and 'living soul,' these do not prove anything, for both of them are applied, in the first chapters of Genesis, to brutes, and prove the same things concerning them. Thus the words in Gen. 7: 15, and Gen. 1: 30, rendered life, are the same with those rendered in Gen. 2: 7, 'a living soul.'" —Dr. Bagnall, Methodist Quarterly Review for April, 1852.

It seems as if the most proper idea resulting from these words is, that Adam became a living person.—Union Bible Dictionary (art. Adam.)

Adam became a living soul—that is a living man. —Columbian Bible.

It denotes the man in his totality as a living soul. J. P. Lange.

A general term to express all creatures endowed with animal life. A. Clarke, on Gen. 1: 24.

The phrase 'a living soul' is put in express contrast with 'a quickening [life-giving] spirit,' in 1 Cor. 15: 45....It manifestly denotes simply a living creature.—C. F. Hudson Debt and Grace. p 166.

It would seem to mean the same when spoken of man that it does when spoken of beasts, an animated being, a creature possessed of life and sensation, and capable of performing all the physical functions by which animals are distinguished, as eating, drinking, walking etc.—Prof. G. Bush.

'Soul' is sometimes used for a human creature, or the whole person....When soul and spirit are spoken of together, spirit probably means the temper.—Malcom's Bible Dictionary.

There are good interpreters and teachers, who confiding in the common translation, living soul, have maintained that here is intimated the distinctive pre-eminence of man above the inferior animals, as possessed of an immaterial and immortal spirit. But, however true that doctrine is, and supported by abundant argument from both philosophy and the Scriptures, we should be acting unfaithfully if we were to affirm its being contained in this passage....The meaning of the phrase will be apparent to the English reader, when he knows that our version renders it in Gen. 1: 20—creature that hath life; v. 24—living creature; and so in ch. 2: 19; 9: 12, 15, 16; and in ch. 1: 30—wherein is life.—Kitto.

The next occurrence of 'living soul' is in Gen. 2: 19: And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them; and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, living soul, that was the name thereof.

We have a multitude of souls included here, but not one of them of the 'never dying' order. Nor shall we find them in the following passages, Gen. 9: 4, 5, 10, 12, 15, 16, where we find 'soul' applied indiscriminately to man and beast, even every creature of earth. So we read:

But flesh with the life, soul, thereof which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat. And surely your blood of your lives, soul, will I require: at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man, at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life, soul, of man.

And with every living creature, living soul, that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you, from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth.

And God said, This is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature, living soul, that is with you, for perpetual generations.

And I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you, and every living creature, living soul, of all flesh; and the waters shall no more become a flood to destroy all flesh. And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature, living soul, of all flesh that is upon the earth.

In these last quoted passages, nephesh is used in its second and fourth senses. And we here indulge the remark, that if the inspired writers were immaterialists, they are the only authors of that school that have ever failed in all their uses of the words soul and spirit, to somewhere apply to them the term 'immortal,' or a word, or phrase of like import. The fact that they have never done this, and that every other immaterialist (we know of no exception), who has used the words has done so, furnishes an overwhelming inference, amounting almost, some think quite, to a demonstration, that they did not belong to that school of philosophy; that they repudiate immaterialism. This we shall see as we proceed.

We now turn to Gen. 12: 5. And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan.

These souls, according to a standard commentary were male and female—consequently not immortal. Lange says they are the persons of the households—bondservants and others. Some think it includes the idea of the conversion of the souls, also.

Soul occurs again in v. 13: Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee.

Here we have an alternative presented, that more than intimates that the soul spoken of is mortal To say 'my soul shall live' if a certain course is pursued, is to assert that if the conditions are not complied with, 'the soul' spoken of will die. In this instance the word soul comes under the fourth head, and indeed might well be designated as a fifth usage, stated thus: Soul is sometimes used by a person or of a person instead of the personal pronouns. This is a common Hebrew idiom. The simple sense of the passage before us is—'Say this....and I shall live.' The person is spoken of.

Gen. 14: 21. And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, give me the persons, souls, and take the goods to thyself.

It is understood this king acted the noble part: yet it will be seen that he desired something substantial—these were not immortal souls.

Gen. 17: 14. And the uncircumcised man-child, whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant.

Of this soul Lange says: In the typical sense the cutting off denotes the endless destruction, the total ruin of the man who despises the covenant of God. And he tells more truth than he imagines when he says this 'cutting off' means the death penalty. We have, then, another instance of a mortal soul.

When the angel brought Lot out of Sodom they said (Gen. 19: 17): Escape for thy life, soul: look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain lest thou be consumed. And Lot said unto them, O, not so my Lord! Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight, and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast shewed unto me in saving my life, soul: and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die: Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one: Oh, let me escape thither! (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live.

Here is a soul that is saved from death by fire, and so continues to live. Would we not naturally suppose that the souls left behind died in the flames? If not, why not? And if they died, then there are, or were mortal souls.

Gen 23: 8. And he [Abram] communed with them, saying, If it be your mind, soul, that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me, and entreat for me to Ephron the son of Zohar.

This is the first instance of the term in its third sense. It would seem to mean—If you are heartily willing to sell me a burial place among you. He would not intrude. This was all the real estate Abram ever owned—a family burial place! Truly a striking thought in this connection.

Gen. ch. 27. In the story of the deception Rebecca and Jacob practised upon Isaac, the expression 'that my soul may bless thee' occurs twice (vv. 4, 25); and 'Thy soul may bless me, twice, also (vv. 19, 31.) This is the fifth use of the term. We understand simply 'I may bless thee, and 'thou mayest bless me.'

Gen. 32: 30. And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life, soul is preserved.

'Soul' is here rendered life. By what rule. Alex. Campbell says, and every scholar will admit that the principle enunciated is perfectly sound— "When words have according to testimony, more meanings than one, whether literal or figurative, the scope, the context, or parallel passages, [we may add and the analogy] must decide the meaning." And he adds, if these fail, there can be no certainty in the interpretation of language. (Chris System, p. 17.) He, also affirms, that common usage must decide the sense of words with but one signification. And it will be universally admitted, that wherever the primary sense of a term makes good sense in the connection in which it occurs, that that very fact is prima facie evidence that the author or speaker intended that the primary sense should be taken. With these almost self-evident principles of interpretation, let us continue our examination of the Bible use of the term soul; and no, not once, shall we find the context requiring us to affix to it the idea of deathlessness, this side of the resurrection.

Gen. 34: 3, 8. And his soul clave unto Dinah the daughter of Jacob.....And Hamor communed with them, saying, the soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter: I pray you give her him to wife.

Here soul refers to the affections, as a portion of the mind. Very literally, it would read, 'My son Shechem, he longeth,' etc.

Gen. 35: 18. And it came to pass as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she called him Ben-oni: but his father called him Benjamin.

The immaterialist claims this passage, declaring that an entity departed in this case. But that is a point to be proved, not assumed. We have no right to attack an unnatural sense when a natural rendering answers the context. We may read it —It came to pass as her life was departing (for she died.)

The American Editor of Lange, coolly says: "Soul departing. This denotes not the annihilation of the soul, but the change of place and state. It presupposes, of course, its perpetual existence; or, at least, [let us be thankful for this touch of modesty amid such errant dogmatism] its existence after death."

Dr. Clark inquires: 'Is not this a proof that there is an immortal spirit in man, which can exist separate from and independent of the body? Of Rachel's death it is said, In the going away of her soul—her body did not go away, therefore her soul and body must have been distinct.'

We remark that this logic is as lame as the dogmatism of the first quotation is absurd. We have already found that soul as life is one thing and the body another: but the soul in such case is not an intelligent entity, but the vital principle—no more intelligent than is electicity or gravity. It operates alike in the idiot, and in a Paul. So granting that soul and body are distinct ideas—which we fully admit—the immaterialist gains nothing.

Further, if for sake of argument we grant that an intelligent entity survives the body, it by no means follows that it is immortal. The word is still out that sinful souls shall die—be destroyed in Gehenna. But on this we must not anticipate.

The passage before us affirms unequivocally that Rachel 'died.' As to the word soul, we have found already (and shall find a multitude more) precedents of two usages (the second and fourth) which make good sense and gracefully harmonize with the spirit of the context. We may read—as she was departing, or as her life was departing. Why then should we lug in an unnatural sense—and as im-mortal soul was departing—unwarranted by the analogy of the context, unsustained by precedent, and which introduces a flat contradiction into the passage. For if the soul is the intelligent conscious being and it departed, then, contrary to the statement made, Rachel did not die. For it is a rule that admits of no exception that when we address or speak of persons by name, or by the use of the personal pronouns, we invariably include the whole person, as an intelligent individual. The exception to this rule has yet to be pointed out.

And if it be insisted still that Rachel died' means only that soul and body were separated, we insist equally as imperatively and with much more show of reason that the soul was not an entity—the real Rachel, but the word is used in the same sense we have already found it mentioned no less than eight times out of the twenty-six it has occurred—life. If her life 'departed, of course Rachel died.'

It is in the hymn book that immaterialism finds its support. Here for instance, are a few lines from 'Rev. Dr. Bethune.'

DYING NOT DEATH.

It is not death to die,
To leave this weary road,
And mid the brotherhood on high
To be at home with God.

It is not death to close
The eye long dimmed with tears,
And wake, in glorious repose,
To spend eternal years.

It is not death to fling
Aside this sinful dust,
And rise on strong exulting wing,
To live among the just.

Jesus, thou Prince of Life!
Thy chosen cannot die.
Like thee, they conquer in the strife,
To reign with thee on high.

This is a very different view of the of the case from that taken by Rachel. She named her son whose life cost her own existence 'Ben-oni—Son of my sorrow—with direct reference to the fact that his birth caused the departure of her soul. If she had known that dying is not death, but entrance to a higher, better life, she would very likely have called her son Hillel, or praise. Evidently she would have endorsed Congreve's sentiment, rather than Bethune's. The former says:

"Death, grim death,
Will fold me in his leaden arms, and press
Me close in his cold clayey breast."

And every Scriptural character who mentions death takes just this view of it.

THE union which exists in too many churches is described by a late writer in the words— 'frozen together.' The figure would amuse were it not so sadly appropriate.

REV. H. A. BARCLAY is giving some articles in the Interior upon the coming and kingdom of Christ, whose simple, direct statements of plain truths might well make the 'Professor' who lately aired his sophistry upon those topics in the same journal, ashamed of his utterances. Mr. Barclay indulges no less rhetoric, but his logic, thus far, is quite invincible.

'A WORD to the wise,' etc.:

Among the afflictions of editors lies their inability to meet the demand of contributors for the prompt insertion of their articles. It is not kept in mind that to reach this end it is often needful to lay over editorials as well as other material. The estimate of those who write for the press so commonly demand that their articles appear "this week," or "next week," as to embarrass rather than help the editor, that is when the injunction is put on strictly. The truth is, we editors are just like other men, no better, certainly; and no worse, perhaps. Most of us try to do our duty and serve our readers just about as well as we can—with mistakes and failures, of course.—Watchman & Reflector.

SOME foolish enthusiast has published the following request:

"It is asked of all newspapers desiring the spread of truth, and the destruction of error, that they publish this request and prayer to Almighty power, that on the three first Sunday nights in October, 1871 there shall appear in the heavens a distinct light in the shape of a great cross."

—In the parable, Abraham said to Dives, 'If they hear not Moses, neither would they believe though one arose from the dead.' So we say, if this generation will not heed the signs in the religious, moral, political and physical world during its time, a cross of light in the heavens of a Sunday evening would in no wise affect them, save as a new theme for speculation.

QUERIES.

If the seventy weeks are cut off from the 2,300 years to "restrain iniquity," etc. they would bring us to A. D. 66, and the end of the longer period would be in 1873. Is the investment of Jerusalem at that time well authenticated by history?

2. If it be true that Christ was born five years before the Christian era, or the time we call A. D., will it not make that much difference in the time of the close of the prophetic periods. In other words, would not the years have run out in 1868, instead of ending in 1873.

P. W. S.

The date of the siege of Jerusalem is as well established as any ancient date possibly can be. It is proven, by the year of the ruling Emperor, by the table of consuls, and by astronomy.

2. Christ was born in the fifth year before the era styled Anno Domini, or the year of our Lord. But this does not affect the reckoning of the periods, as the era itself is an abitrary date. When fixed, it was supposed to have been actually assigned to the year of our Lord's birth. Whether our Lord was actually born A. D. 1 or B. C. 5 can make no difference as to the termination of the 490 years or seventy weeks of Dan. ch. 9. they commence with the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, by Cyrus, which the best chronology places in the year of the world 3,700. The birth of Christ, occured in 4121. The year A. D. 1 was arbitrarily fixed to 4126. The commencement of the siege of Jerusalem occured in the year of the world 4190. Now it is clear that the length of time from the year of the world 3,700 to 4190, is just 490 years, regardless of the time of Christ's birth.

The confusion of thought on this point arises from associating the idea of the actual birth of Christ with the notion of an era, or fixed point of time, established for convenience of reckoning. A. D. or Anno Domini is a name give to the year of the world (according to the chronology quoted) 4126. Whether Christ was born that year or not makes no difference in the measurement of periods of time by that era.

As I never saw a paper of your denomination, I concluded I would find what new arrangements your church is making for the Millennium: as I understand that the Adventists claim that the second coming of Christ is close at hand. Where are any passages of Scripture going to show that the second coming of Christ is a personal coming?

Did not Christ inform his disciples when alluding to his second coming, that that generation should not pass away until all these things should be fulfilled? How do you explain that passage?

It is also said that you have discovered the time when Christ will come. Did not Christ say that the hour and the time no man knoweth, not even the angels in heaven?

Excuse my inquisitiveness. I write only for information: for I will admit that many parts of the Bible seem to carry out your belief. If you could give a satisfactory explanation of Mat. 24: 1-36, the way would seem clearer.

B. U. W.

We think 1 Thes. 4: 16 (And the Lord himself shall descend), and Acts 1: 11 (this same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go), read very much like personal coming. It is a universally admitted rule, never to interpret any intelligent author or speaker, so as to involve him in contradiction or absurdity. Now inasmuch as the generation living when Christ came did not see the sun and moon darkened, did not see the stars fall, and the powers of heaven shaken; did not see the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and all the tribes of earth mourning, did not see the Son of man coming with power and great glory; did not see his angels gathering his elect, nor hear the trumpet's sound, we therefore conclude that Jesus did not refer to them. If he did, his predictions failed to come to pass. We have not space for a full exposition of Mat. 24. (You can get Wellcome's, for sale at this office, for 25c only.) It is a prophecy covering the time to his parousia—personal presence, in his glory on earth. Like other prophecies, while addressed in the utterance to individuals, it was intended for the church at large—to be written out, preserved, and handed down from generation to generation. The auditors, therefore, are addressed as the representatives of the church: and when he says—"When ye see these things, know it is near," he means whoever of his church shall be living when 'these things' should occur; and the generation seeing the sign of the Advent, would also see the advent itself.

Others think the passage a prediction of the almost miraculous preservation of the Jewish people. It may be they are right. The word does not say that no one knoweth the time, on the contrary, Paul says (1 Thes. 5: 4) We are not in darkness that that day should overtake us as a thief. True Jesus said that no man, or angel, knoweth the 'day or the hour;' but he, also, included the Son himself in the same list of ignorant ones. Are we then, really to believe that Jesus will never know the time of his advent until he gets here. Is he to be like the passenger who leaves Detroit in a sleeping car, ignorant of the time it will arrive in Chicago, who only finds out the time when he gets up in the morning and finds himself there? We think not. We understand him to say that God had put the times and seasons in his own power; and he alone could reveal the time, whether by his word, Spirit or providence.

No; we have not discovered the time. We are seeking to know all we may about it. Why not? It is in God's letter written to us for our information. Hence it is a legitimate subject for investigation. True some have used it unwisely, and some have made mistakes; but what doctrine of Scripture has not been allied to blunders. Can one be named?

We trust our correspondent, who is taking THE TIMES three months, on trial, will find in it evidences that we have correct views of the Word of God.

HOW ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY IS MADE.

It is very probable that if some of the sects severely maligned in ecclesiastical history had had the privilege of telling their own story, we should form very different of opinions of them than those we now hold. We thought of this, when, on taking up McClintock and Strong's Cyclopædia, we found the account of Adventists, which we quote below. These two gentlemen are standard Methodist authors (The first named is now dead); and their work is issued from the great publishing house of the Harpers in New York. People will believe the record a true one, because of the source from which it emanates; and yet it is calculated to give an entirely false impression as to facts in the case. And we have no doubt this was intentional. The authors wished to cast a slur upon us. Else, why did they take an account of us from one of our bitterest and most bigoted opposers, when they could have had all the facts they wished, from, to say the least a more impartial source.

To illustrate the untruthfulness of this record. One would infer from it, at 'Messrs. Himes and Miller' set veral 'dates' for 'the coming of the ord' with great positiveness. Now e fact is, that father Miller never ad but one time—'about 1843,' and as never dogmatic on that point. Ve agreed with him; and have never ged any 'time argument' since, except at for 1868.

As to the charge that Adventists are hiefly of the ignorant," it may be so. As we read it we thought of 1 or. 1: 26—that "not many wise, according to the flesh, are called;" and at even apostles were derided as gnorant and unlearned men," and it thankful we are in so good com- ny. If we are ignorant, we are not t so sunken in the ruts of sectarian- m that we can learn nothing more an is contained in an arbitrary creed. We assert the dearest right the hristian possesses: the right of private dgment in reading the revelation of od's will to man. And if we may st the testimony of our Methodist ends themselves, in other days, when ey had less of the knowledge that uffeth up," and were accounted as hiefly f the ignorant,' they had more spirituality and power with God, an they possess since they have be- me more respectable, and begun to d upon their brethren of more un- pular sects.

We are, also, sorry for our genteel is is a new term, securely applied to class of Christians—quite expressive) illennarian brethren, who are so named of us, and sensitive of being ssed with Adventists that they take ery convenient (and sometimes incon- nient) occasion to repudiate sympathy th, that we should be set down as of em, in so respectable a work. It s not our fault—we are willing to ar our own burdens. Yes, more; are willing to be misrepresented, digned, have our names cast out as il, and all manner of evil falsely ported of us. For we expect Jesus l come again; and he says, "My ward is with me." We with tience wait for it.

ADVENTISTS, the name of a recent ct of Millennarians, which owes its gin to Wm. Miller, from whom they frequently called Millerites. bout 1833 Miller began to teach that e second Advent" of the Lord would cur in 1843. He soon found disciples nong whom was Joseph [?] V. mes, a member of the "Disciples of rist" who had a great deal of ergy and proselyting spirit. He mmenced a journal called The signs the Times, and later, the Advent erald, to dissenimate the doctrine of e sect. Multitudes of people, chiefly the ignorant, became believers; d at the time appointed, it is said, at thousands were out all night, wait- g in anxiety for 'the coming of the rd,' according to the prediction of e leaders of the sect. They were sappointed, of course, but many still ve credit to new predictions, fixing e time at new periods. As these ccessive times arrived, the predictions ll failed, and many of the believers l off. There is still in existence, wever, a sect bearing the name of lventists, who look for the coming the Lord," but who do not fix dates definitely as Messrs. Miller and Himes ed to do. A large camp-meeting of lventists has for many years been nually held at Wilbraham.

As to the doctrine, they differ from e evangelical churches generally, only their peculiar belief in the personal ming of Christ, and his bodily reign th the saints on the earth. They ve no regular creed or form of scipline. It is a common belief nong the Adventists that the wicked ll be annihilated. Their numbers e estimated at 20,000.—(Am. Chris. ecord, p. 21.)

LETTER FROM EUROPE.

MUNICH, BAVARIA, GERMANY,
July 12, 1771.

Dear Br. William: Pardon me for y long silence. Since I landed at iverpool my time has been so much ccupied in sight-seeing, that little as left for anything else, aside from usiness.

We had a favorable passage across the Atlantic, and I was on deck so much that my "sunburnt nose" became evidence "prima facie," of my love for the bottle. I am willing to admit the conclusion while here in Europe, as bottles are used instead of pitchers for my favorite beverage, water. At every reception I am invited to take wine, and when I refuse, they offer beer. I have tasted their "beer" and "wine," but bitter beer and strong wine are as unpalatable to me as was the medicine I took in my youthful days. (Of course I do not take medicine now; health reformers believe that what will make a well man sick, will not make a sick man well.) Thank the Lord. I am in the enjoyment of excellent health. Change of climate, freedom from study, and varied exercise, add, if possible, to my usual vigor.

To me, the most interesting sights, thus far, have been, (1) the variegated landscape. Not mountains and valleys, for we see them in America, but the hundred fields at one view, of yellow rye, ripening barley, heading wheat, oats less advanced, potatoes of darker green, fields of young turnips, where more of the naked soil is seen; peas and beans in bloom. The fields are so small, so narrow, so variegated in color, many of each kind, but seldom two of the same kind together, and as there are no fences here, all appear as one field. I have made diligent search for a landscape painting of these scenes, but without success.

(2) Castles, towers, cathedrals, etc. I have found no difficulty in obtaining photographs, paintings, etc., of the many ancient castles, cathedrals and fortresses, which I have visited. Pictures and trinkets are forced upon the traveler in such numbers, that the most he can do is to make a few selections, and then utterly refuse to give any further attention to entreaties.

THE TOWER OF LONDON.

could not be even briefly described in a single article. It is a fortress and an armory, as well as a depository of ancient relics, many of them identified with the romantic but melancholy history of the tower. I saw the block upon which the necks of many nobles rested, and the terrible ax which severed their heads from their bodies. The tower is situated on the banks of the Thames, and is surrounded by a broad deep ditch, over which there is a drawbridge. The island formed by the ditch contains several acres, in the center of which is the tower itself, surrounded by a motly pile of buildings, from huts to palaces. The tower consists of three or four distinct structures, and is not so remarkable in its appearance as its contents or history. All readers of English history are familiar with the fate of poor Anne Boleyn, the Earl of Essex, Lady Jane Gray, and a host of kings and nobles who were imprisoned here.

The collection of objects of interest in the British Museum is almost endless in variety and numbers. My visit was hasty; I shall try to visit it again on my return, and will then describe the most interesting objects. At the

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION

I saw a magnificent display of fine paintings. The productions of each nation are grouped by themselves. That of Belgium occupies an entire hall. Here I saw the famous type-setting machine, and a few other objects of interest, but the affair (like many similar ones in America, of late years), is gotten up to make money. It is to last ten years; only a few classes of objects to be exhibited each year. Napoleon III. visited the exhibition while I was there. I saw only a rush of people when he was first identified, but he had disappeared before I learned the cause of the commotion. My disappointment was somewhat relieved, however, by a sight of his son the Prince Imperial, and Queen Victoria, at the Grand Review of troops at Bushby Park.

I had a pleasant visit with Dr Leask the editor of the Rainbow, and had the satisfaction of hearing him preach. Although connected with the Independent, or Congregational society, he is free to preach against eternal torment. The membership of his church having been sifted when he came cut on the "Life and Death" question. American Adventists should help sustain the Rainbow. There is an advantage in making converts in the ministry of the Congregational church, over many others. Cautious, persevering and faithful ministers who carry their membership with them, also retain the church buildings, which are so necessary to permanent success. I went to and heard him twice. It was sad to hear the doctor repeat the stale argument on the original word for eternal, in Mat. 26: 46, without a remark on the meaning of the original word for punishment. But in pleasing contrast, he spoke of the coming of Christ as an event that must occur; and he did not add "sooner or later," as many do, for he does not believe in the "later."

had just recovered from a severe spell of sickness, and was fortunately able to resume pulpit duties in time for me to hear him before I left London. Like Dr. Cumming, he has no organ or instrumental music, but the people worship God in hymns and spiritual songs, making melody in their hearts singing with the spirit and the understanding also. I could not even follow the chanting in St. Pauls', though I had an open Bible before me and started in with my finger on the place when they commenced.

There is as great a contrast between the two buildings as in the worship. St. Paul's stands in the very heart of London, in the midst of the busiest portion of the city. Exteriorly the building presents an appearance much like the capital at Washington. The greater portion of the interior is one vast space extending into four wings and up to the very dome. On the walls and in the niches and corners are statuary and monuments of kings, nobles, military and naval personages. Each of the narrow parts of this cruciform place of worship, is seated with chairs.

The exterior of Spurgeon's Tabernacle is adorned only by massive columns in front, the interior is a commodious hall encircled by two large inclined galleries, the lower projecting at one end a little, forming an open place for the speakers stand. Here every eye in the vast assembly can rest upon him, not his head and shoulders only, for there is only a railing in front. His preaching is of the popular style, and I should have little hopes of finding an opening large enough for the most invincible arguments to gain an entrance through the wall of popularity and influences by which he is surrounded.
H. A. KING.

WILL ADAM HAVE A RESURRECTION?

Everything relating to the origin, nature and destiny of man, must be of vital importance and interest to every intelligent mind.

Adam is the only man who ever died the penalty death. It is true our Savior died the same kind of death, but then he died as a substitue for others, and not for any sin of his own. Did not Adam stand on the same ground before his Maker that the fallen angels did? Each sinned, and consequently fell upon his own responsibility; then is not this the reason why God has made no arrangement for their redemption? There was no Savior promised to Adam before his fall. He was placed in the garden of Eden on trial fo immortality, and had he and his seed lived out their probation, multiplying, and subduing the earth, and extending their dominion over it, thus by degrees spreading Paradise over the world according to the pattern which God gave them; in the course of time, after the earth had been sufficiently populated, and God's purposes in man's probation ended, would not the whole race have been changed in a moment—in the twinkling of an eye, from mortality to immortality? Thus would not all have learned good and evil, not by sinning, but by obeying God's holy law? But Adam sinned, and was driven from his home, and from the tree of life, "lest he should put forth his hand and eat also of it, and live forever," thus becoming an immortal sinner,—a being which God has determined should never exist in the universe. Now the question arises could Adam have received pardon at the hands of his Maker, and yet have died? Was not death the penalty of his sin, and does not pardon not only take away the guilt, but also the consequence of sin? Now if Adam died without forgiveness (and where is evidence to contrary?) did he not die outside the atonement? If so will he ever have a resurrection?

It may be asked if these views are correct, why was not Adam cut off as soon as he transgressed the law of God? The answer to this may be, that he was spared so that his seed might be placed upon a new probation, in order that the mystery of godliness should be made known to the intelligent universe through the redemptive administration of our Lord Jesus Christ; and that the being, the attributes, the perfection, and the jurisprudence of the Almighty Father of love might be known, and understood by his intelligent creatures. No other plan could have accomplished this end.
PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

Lydia, S. C.

The question of Adam's relations has been quite thoroughly discussed, in some of its departments, of late in our columns. But the question propounded above has been only referred to. We have often thought of the case of Adam, and wondered why it was that in reckoning up the long list of worthies, no inspired writer ever goes back of Abel. We are left to conjecture whether he heartily repented and taught his children righteousness, or whether the tremendous corruption of the antediluvian age, was fostered by his example. Our conclusion in the matter is, that he is probably among the all men for whom Christ died; and that during his long life he had the same opportunity for repentance and faith, that his posterity have enjoyed. Yet, we confess that the opinion that Adam is forever dead has quite strong inferential arguments for its support.

JESUS COMING.

There is no thought more sacred to the Christian,—specially those like the Thessalonians, whom Paul commended —than that of Jesus coming. Around it gathers a halo of glory which no cloud is allowed to conceal from their view. Connected with it are all the brightest anticipations of the church of Christ. Beyond it, faith sees the eternal weight of glory kept in store for faithful souls. With that coming, comes life from the dead for all our sleeping loved ones, and the everlasting kingdom of God into which we, with them shall be ushered amid the harpings of angelic attendants, and the shouts of joy that rise from the redeemed host as they enter the celestial chambers to celebrate the long anticipated feast with the King of kings and Lord of lords. That day is near! Glory to God. The day that ends all the strife and confusion of earth is near. It is at the door. Now is the time to watch and be sober. Let your mind be fixed on Jesus whose coming closes earthly probation. Those who are ready will enter the wedding-chamber and the door will be shut. The cry "Outside!" "Too late!" "Lost!" will burst from the despairing lips of those whose lamps were not supplied with oil. Oh! Christian, be wakeful! keep your eye on the light in the light-house. Rocks are on every hand. The harbor is in sight, and soon—if faithful—we shall reach the evergreen shore.

Wrapt in glowing visions of the eternal future, our hearts leap for joy, and we only wait for Jesus to come and lift the veil that hides from us the untold glories of Paradise restored. O Savior! Tarry not! Hasten the blessed coronation day. Come Lord Jesus.

IOWA.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Iowa: the time of the gathering of the saints, and of a feast of fat things in the Lord is just at hand, to be enjoyed at Cascade. See notice. Come with warm hearts, filled with love, zeal, faith and the Holy Spirit. Let us one and all rally to the work before us. The Lord is soon, very soon coming. Sinners are rapidly pressing to destruction, and shall we sit down and fold our arms in lazy lock, and say not a word, and do not a thing for their rescue? God forbid!

The blessed Master says; "Go work in my vineyard" he also says "Occupy till I come." Shall we do it? If we do, we shall soon hear him say, "Come ye blessed of my Father; inherit the kingdom." Or shall we dishonor him with our idleness, and he have to say to us, "Ye are cursed with a curse; depart from me." How great is the responsibility resting upon us. The Lord help us to realize it, I pray; and then act accordingly.

Terrible Accident.

The boiler of the Ferry boat Westfield exploded July 30, while leaving the landing in New York city. About 100 were killed and 127 injured; some of the latter so badly that it is thought impossible for them to recover.

The boiler was low presure, and carried, at the time, or five minutes before the explosion twenty-seven pounds of steam, at which point the steam safety guage had been set and locked. According to the fireman's statements there was plenty of water in the boiler, and no indication wharever that there was anything wrong. The first premonition of the explosion was a hissing noise at the back end of the boiler, which lasted for a moment, when the boiler exploded with terrific power, tearing out the whole end of the boat, on which most of the passengers were quartered. Throwing, tearing and mangling them in a most horrible manner. The explosion was caused by what is called "unequal expansion." That is, the steam, being much hotter than the water below it, expands the shell of the boiler in proportion. In starting up, the moving of the boat causes the water to oscillate in the boiler and touch that portion which had been previously heated by the steam to a much higher temperature, causing it to contract. These unequal expansions and contractions continue until the boiler is so weakened that a complete fracture takes place.

It is said the fracture of the exploded boiler could be distinctly traced for two or three feet. How long it had been in that condition is not known. One thing is known however, and that is that the boiler was very old, and should have been condemned by the proper authorities long ago, and until these are more rigid in the discharge of their duties there will be no end to such unhappy accidents.

WAITING.

I'm weary, oh! I'm weary
Of sorrow, sin and strife;
My heart is pressed and aching,
With the ills of mortal life.

The joys of earth are fleeting,
And earthly hopes are crushed;
The brightest buds of promise
Lie withered in the dust.

I've seen beloved ones dying,
And living friends grow cold;
And homesick I am sighing
For the Shepherd and the fold.

I've scanned the sky above me,
For signs of his return;
I've looked the world all over,
To learn when he will come.

I've heard creation groaning
For redemption's glorious morn;
And with it I am waiting,
And looking for the dawn.

Thank God I've seen the omens
Of my absent Lord's return;
I see the stars arising
That usher in the morn.

The mountain tops are gilded;
Ye hills break forth and sing,
For soon the earth with glory filled
Will welcome back her King.

What though the breakers round us
May war and dash and foam,
I see just yonder o'er the tide,
My own eternal home.

I see the crystal river,
And tree of life so fair,
The city's pearly portals,
Soon, soon we shall be there.

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

TUESDAY, July 25. Left Topeka in the p. m. with Brn. Corey and Linville, and rode fifteen miles west over the prairie, to Middle Creek, which is their place of residence. The land is diversified, with rolling prairie, creeks, and bluffs, with occasional groves along the creeks. We are two miles from the Kaw, or really the Kansas River. As usual in the vicinity of rivers the country is uneven. But the land is very rich, and the bottoms yield from seventy-five to a hundred bushels of corn to the acre, and other grains in proportion.

We passed through the Indian Reserve, a tract of land thirty miles square, given to the Pottawattamies. There are about 1,200 of this tribe left. They are fast melting away, under the influence of whisky, and effeminate habits. Their land is fast going into the hands of the white people, and they will soon be "as though they had not been." Poor Indian! All attempts to civilize, and elevate him have failed. The blame is laid at the door of both the whites and of the Indians. There is blame no doubt on both sides; but we as a civilized and professedly Christian nation will have to meet heavy responsibilities ere long, as the "judge of all the earth will do right."

We arrived at the pleasant homes of Brn. Corey and Linville about dark. They live near neighbors, and are very pleasantly situated. The location is well wooded, and resembles some parts of New England. There is no prairie within some miles. The land is rich, and they are making themselves valuable homes, are contented and happy, and what is better still they "let their light shine." They sustain a Sabbath-school and meeting, and now desire the organization of an Advent church.

I had not seen Br. Corey for about twenty years. We met last in Worcester Mass. He has attended the Methodist church mostly since he came West; but has been always known as a believer in the Advent faith. And now, with his family, including a faithful and gifted companion, will be with the new Advent church. It is pleasant to meet those old believers in re-union in the faith and work of Christ.

WEDNESDAY, July 26. We had a meeting on the Blacksmith Creek, at the house of Br. Thomas White. Just before the time of meeting a terrific thunder storm came up, which kept some away. But I had freedom in opening the Scriptures to the people, on the "blessed hope." The storm was so severe that many were unable to get home. Before retiring to our beds—and some had to take the floor—we had a good time singing many of our beautiful songs which were new to most present.

Br. White is a Congregationalist, but is in sympathy with many things we teach. He is interested to hear fully on the Advent. He has a Sabbath school in his neighborhood, and works for Christ. He pointed out the residence of Prof. Bateman (late of our public schools in Michigan), who is a neighbor and frequents their meetings. Why he, with such rare abilities for doing good in public stations, should thus isolate himself, I do not know. But here he is, in his little cottage where he has retirement and rest from the perplexities of public life.

We returned to Middle Creek this a. m. and prepared for the night service at Dover, some seven miles away. On the way we called upon a number of families, and had interesting conversations. One man told us of the preaching they had on practical and doctrinal matters. The practical was good. It was leveled against the evil habits of society, which are growing worse and worse. And yet these same preachers teach that the world is growing better, and is yet to be converted, before the judgment day! What "blindness has happened to Israel?" I had a good hearing at the large stone school-house, on the inheritance of the saints, and I did not speak in vain. We returned home at midnight, a part of the way in the rain.

My health is good; yet I feel the effect of this continual exposure and toil. But the rest comes soon.

FRIDAY, July 27. Spoke at Br. Linville's, on unfulfilled prophecy, to show that nearly all the great events to take place before the Advent, have been fulfilled, and that we may now wait and watch for the coming of the "Son of man" in his kingdom. There is a deep interest to hear on this question on the part of some, but with others, there is not only no interest, but a feeling of repugnance to the topic. This will always be so, to the end. We must speak to those "who have an ear to hear," and so gather some out of the multitude for eternal life. How true it is that broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go thereat, while narrow is the way that leadeth to life, and few there be who find it. The few are widely scattered even in Kansas and on the frontier; and the calls for the gospel of the kingdom are such that I could be occupied all the time and then not supply them all. Indeed if I should attempt to supply them, I should not be able to return East any more. I must do what I can and then return home for duties elsewhere.

Here is a specimen of the calls for help; from a town in Missouri.

Eld. J. V. Himes, Dear Sir: I have read THE TIMES about six months. I like it. It seems like a lamp to light up the dark corners of the Bible, that have been darkened by modern preaching. There are some here who can see some light through the clouds of prejudice. We want to understand the teachings of the gospel. If it overthrows our former belief that may have been founded on error—let us have the truth, and we will risk the consequences.

We have a sad condition of things here, in a moral sense. Whisky, profanity and vulgarity—predominate. We have too much india rubber preaching—stretched to suit every body; and one thing after another is tolerated until a man may be a member of a church and follow his own inclinations, whether good or bad. We need some good sound doctrine. Can we have it?

On the subject of helping our young ministers I have received among others, the following communication from one of them:

I am greatly pleased with your remarks in your Journal, on our young men. I think you have struck a very important "key note." Young men who are called to preach ought to avail themselves of every advantage in their reach to help them in the great work. I do not pass a day without feeling keenly the need of more education. True I have a fair English education, and a good start in Latin. But I need the Greek and Hebrew and history. And I have been seriously considering the subject since reading your remarks.

This is well. If God opens the way for you to have help in this direction, follow the light. Otherwise dig away in the "chimney corner." There are many self-made men, that are not behind the graduates of the best schools.

SATURDAY, July 28. For the last month I have been laboring in new fields, on the frontier and elsewhere, planting the standard of the cross. I have satisfaction in knowing that I do not labor in vain in the Lord. But this pioneer work is all outgo, as we get little or nothing to pay expenses. But somebody must bear the burden; and as long as I have means to go I shall do so. But when I fail I can retire and rest. There are some excellent brethren who have embraced the truth, who in one form or another, are giving their support to those who do not believe in or receive, but oppose the truth. It seems to me that such brethren, should consider the wants of the cause they profess to love, and look to it that their material aid is wisely given, and at least in part, to help those who are proclaiming the truth in missionary fields.

A friend has just written us something of his experience on this point, he says:

We feel now that we not paying our money for that which is not "bread." Heretofore in paying $——per year for the sake of Christ, so much darkness has been thrown around the gospel, that the light has been in a great measure hid, and but a little fruit is the result. You are doing a noble work. The world feels the light.

This dear brother acting on his own convictions, is doing a noble thing to help in spreading the truth. The Lord increase the number of such. This p. m. I went with Brn. Corey and Linville, to the grove on Mission Creek, to prepare for the meeting to-morrow. It is on the land of Mr. Moon, a large stock raiser. There are but few settlements in the vicinity, Mr. M possessing a large tract of the land for his stock. The people come from three to ten, and even more miles to the meetings. The "dog-days," make it rather uncertain about clear weather. Showers come up quickly, and we have no tent, or place of shelter for miles; hence many stay away when the weather signs are unfavorable. Still we hope for a good day on the morrow, as a large number are interested to hear the Advent message.

Our camp prepared we took up our journey to the White school-house on Blacksmith Creek, where I preached at night. Among my audience were some of the best educated and most intelligent people from the East. I spoke on the time of reward, on which some were inquiring. The labors of the week then closed by a ride over the prairie, of seven miles; and at midnight I found rest for the weary body and brain.

SABBATH, July 29. Hot, sultry "dog-day." And things look quite discouraging for a grove meeting. But some of us will go and risk it. I hear a voice crying "teams ready." And so we are off. Many for the first time heard preaching upon the vision of the kingdom. (Dan. 2: 31–34.) The subject being new to them was of absorbing interest. "Now," said one, "I see how you know that the kingdom of God is at hand." I gave liberty for any to speak at the close, when a full half hour was spent in asking and answering questions, the whole assembly giving the closest attention to my replies, to "Where is heaven?" "Did not the thief go to Paradise the day he died?" etc. Assent as given to most of my replies, and the truth was received to-day into many hearts.

I had some talk with Eld. Miller, a straight-out "Ironside" Baptist, he wanted to hear me on the "immortal soul," and on the "souls under the altar," and on life and death, and I don't know what else. His mind did not seem to be clear on anything except baptism. He said I ought to see Br. Graves reply to our review of his twelve syllogism. I told him I had not seen it, but would look after it soon. Glad to hear he had at length noticed our review. [Have not since been able to learn that he has made any reply. We have never seen it, and cannot find it.]

In the p. m. I spoke on the signs of Christ's near coming; one of which was the fall of the temporal power of the Papacy. I read the following and last testimony of Pius IX. to show that his dominion is gone, and the next thing to come is Christ and his kingdom:

On the 28th ult., at Rome, the Pope held a consistory, at which he preconised several bishops and announced the nominations he had recently made, after which he announced his decision in these words: "We are, my very dear brothers, in the hands of divine providence. We have nothing to expect from human aid, for man has abandoned us. Why dissemble? It is better I should tell you that kings and governments, forgetting their promises, leave us to our fate. They have addressed us, sent us the warmest congratulations on the day of our jubilee, but they are far from taking any steps in support of their messages. We can hope for no help from any quarter. King Victor Emanuel will be here in a few days, and will be attended by the ministers of the catholic states. We have done all that was in our power, but our efforts have failed. All is lost. You will tell me to hope—therefore I have still hope in France; but France can do nothing; she is going through a frightful crisis, which may be succeeded by others yet more dreadful I repeat that all is lost and only a miracle can save us. Pray, then, to the Almighty, and seek his interposition from ruin."

At night had a meeting at Br. John F. Linville's, Middle Creek. I spoke on church organization, the officers, their duties and the ordinances. We gathered nine souls, seven of whom were present. Br. A. G. Corey was ordained elder, and J. F. Linville deacon, and Sr. M. E. Linville appointed deaconess, after which we had our first communion season. It was one of great interest to those hitherto isolated ones. Thus closed our meetings with this dear people.

We have nothing great to report, though the truth is being received with many. If I had time to devote, I could place the ADVENT TIMES in one hundred families. But I am confined at home by the sickness of my wife and son. The latter has now been sick for nine years. My prayer is that the kingdom of God may come, and his will be done in the earth, as it is in heaven. My heart is often made glad by the Editor's Journal, and letters from brethren and sisters of the same faith.

We desire to open communication with the ministering brethren in Missouri, that we may organize into a conference. Without a commencement there can be nothing done or accomplished. Let us hear from you all.

We have preaching once a month, by Br. William Snow.

From S F Johnson Allston Mass.

You yourself know the chilling doubt and disbelief, which almost universally obtain, and where not these, a cheerless indifference, which to me is infinitely sadder. The insensibility to all questions relating to the creature's duty to his Creator, which I occasionally meet with is shocking. It fills me with an instinctive horror. The world's asleep, and 'tis a heavy, leaden sleep, from which they are with difficulty awakened, even although you shout the intelligence of the impending danger in their very ears. "Let us alone. A little more sleep, a little more slumber, a little more folding of the hands, to rest." There will be an awaking, however; for "every eye shall see him," and those who wallow in the mire of wilfull ignorance will [illegible] dly "wail because of him." God [illegible] t that we who are not in ignorance [illegible] y find means to set up to the w[illegible] vouchsafed us, and prove that wisd[illegible] to be "sound" and "to salvation." "The wise shall understand," [illegible] man clothed in linen, which [illegible] the waters of the river, an[illegible] understanding which shall [illegible] wise, let us earnestly p[illegible] be accounted worthy t[illegible] all these things which sh[illegible] pass, and to stand before the [illegible] an."

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Br. Wm. [illegible]rphy, Atlantic, Iowa: I had almost a discussion with a Mr. Lyle, Methodist minister of Grove City. He preached at Troublesome Creek, on the "Soul." I got permission to reply, and had the opportunity of testifying to the truth to him and the presiding elder, and some other prominent Methodists. God gave me liberty of speech. I gave Mr. Lyle one of Whitmore's Immortality to-day. I hope it will be blessed to him. He is a capable man, but on the wrong side——Br. John R. Turner, Frederick, Mo. July 4: How can people deny so plain a truth. It does look to me that it is so plain that a way-faring man, though a fool, need not err therein. But the people are educated to believe the falsehood told in the Garden of Eden. Plenty of old grey-headed men here never heard the immortality of the soul doubted. Oh! that there was some one here that could do as Paul was commanded to do, when the Lord said, "I now send thee to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me." (Acts 26: 18.)——Mary Patterson, Utica, Minn: It is now nine years since I first embraced this precious faith. God has been pleased to give me manifestations of his kind love, in answer to my prayers, in converting my dear husband and son, and some of my neighbors; who were brought to see the light through our beloved Sr. Rowell's labors. We are living in a grand and awful time. The Lord is sifting the hearts of men against that great day. I pray all who profess to love Jesus' appearing may be found ready in that day. Every one of us may find a hiding place in the clefts of that Rock, which no weapon, storm, or fire can reach.————Br. B. Judson: I give my paper a wide circulation among my Methodist friends, as I travel and preach. There would be no trouble in obtaining subscribers, if there was money in circulation here in the woods; but the scarcity of funds makes it difficult to do any thing in this direction. I find quite an interest awakened in my field of labor this summer, having adopted the plan of preaching thirty minutes, then having a lively prayer and conference meeting. I can see no good reason why revivals of religion should be confined to the winter season. May the Lord help us to be faithful to the end of the race.——————Br. C. B. Hudson, Park City, Kas. We have an interesting Sabbath-school, in which I have a Bible class to whom I tell all the truth, as I understand it. And, as yet, there have been no D. D.'s along to prejudice their minds. The tracts you gave us have mostly been distributed, some of them as we journeyed, and some of them here. And they were gladly received. We like our new home, but are trying to live for the kingdom. We often think of the precious seasons enjoyed at Buchanan; and long for the King in his beauty and gather his scattered people home. May the blessing of the Lord attend all who labor in his cause.——Br. C. Pike, St. Charles, Ill: Some times when I talk with people on the coming judgment, and see how they put it far off, it makes me almost think if Jesus should come they would reject him altogether. But, nevertheless, he will come, and fulfill his promises. Yes, that great and last promise, in which he said, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." I would like to be one to claim that promise, and get into the kingdom, and never taste death. Many use this passage to prove the immortality of man, but our Savior never preached that doctrine. There will be a few that will be waiting and watching for Jesus to come, who will never taste death. May we be of the number——————Br. A. A. Votaw, Amboy, Ind: I have distributed some copies of THE TIMES amongst those I thought might read and examine for themselves, because I feel it my duty (whenever the way opens) to let the people know ıe close proximity in which we stand › the coming of our blessed Redeemer, ıd the establishing of the glorious ıngdom that will never pass away. Oh! lorious theme to dwell upon! To ıink that Jesus has the keys of death, ıd the grave, and that in his own ppointed time he will burst asunder ıe bands of the grave, and let the ıptives come forth, exclaiming "O eath, where is thy sting! O grave, here is thy victory!" What a grand ısplay of the power of the Almighty od will be exhibited when the "living ıall be changed, the dead raised in- ›rruptible," and the kingdom of God tablished forever more. How I ng to be one of the number that will ıngregate around the throne of God d sing praises to his most excellent ıme.

Now that this image in which man as made, was a physical image I ıve somewhat to offer. For instance us examine Gen. 9: 5, 6. "At the ıd of every man's brother will I quire the life of man. Who sheddeth ın's blood, by man shall his blood be ed." This must be the physical ın, for surely, spirits that are simple ›ence, can have no blood. But this ın who sheds his fellow's blood, is to ve his blood shed, "for," says God, the image of God, made he man." is man then (1) is one that is 'made;') is made of 'dust;' (3) when made found to have 'blood;' (4) is in the rm' 'image' or 'shape' of God.

Let me ask (1) Are spirits (who are d to be uncompounded) made? (2) e they made of dust? (3) Have y blood? (4) Have they form, or ıpe? Whatever has form, or shape, st be material, and have parts; and ıatever has parts, is compounded, l can be divided.

Let us now look at another passage ich is in the words of an eminent ıentator, found in his first letter to Corinthians, ch. 11: 8. He is ructing them how to conduct their yer-meeting, that a woman should e her head covered but adds,— r a man indeed ought not to have head covered, for as much as he is image, and glory of God." No who is unbiased can doubt for a nent that this is spoken of the sical form and structure of the . Therefore it is this, that is the , and this that is in God's image, hape.

Let us look at another testimony. ist "was made flesh and dwelt ng us," of whom it is said, "Who he image of the invisible God." ist certainly had the form or image ıan; so if he had that of God also, is man and God in the same form, image. Query. Is it not the tual image of God that Christ was First let me ask, has a spirit a onal form, or image? or has it a ? Paul says of God, that Christ he express image of his person." od is a person, and persons have a as well as other "parts." The l said to John "His servants shall him, and they shall see his [God's] —Said Jesus: "Blessed are the in heart for they shall see God." od who is now invisible to mortals, has been ever since they became al, is to become visible when men ne immortal, which they will n of God as a gift through ence to Jesus Christ.

COME TO CAMP.

thren and sisters of other States have attended the camp-meeting aboy, need not suppose that they leprived of the privilege of at- ng this year, because it is not a ral Western camp-meeting. You e as welcome as ever in the past. to all within the State, we say come mp. Let there be a general rally. with hearts of love for God and use and to labor for souls. Time ting fast. Brethren in the ministry, do not have appointments away, but come, to do the people good, and receive encouragement from them, and from the Lord, to labor on. Bring tents, those who can, and prepare to live not to feast, but rather to fast and pray.

Come any way, so that you come, and come early.

ORIGINAL SIN.

The Independent says of a late work by Dr. Shedd, the eminent 'orthodox' theologian:

The sentimental theology of the period is doing its best to obliterate conscience; and sermons like these should serve as a wholesome tonic for the debilitated moral sense. But, if this be the purpose of the preacher, he must take care not to present any truth that does not commend itself to men's consciences. To drag into his sermons speculations that confound the moral judgment and outrage all our feelings of justice is to defeat the very object he has in view. This is precisely what Dr. Shedd has done. The exigencies of his theology require him to present a view of human responsibility that no mortal with an unperverted conscience ever can or will except. A note upon page 272 illustrates the point to which we refer:

"The Augustinian doctrine that the entire human species was created on the sixth day, existed as a nature (not as individuals) in the first human pair, acted in and fell with them in the first transgression, and as thus fallen and vitiated by an act of self-will has been procreated or individualized, permits the theologian to say that all men are equally concerned in the origin of sin and to charge the guilt of its origin upon all alike."

The sermon to which this note is appended is entitled "The sinfulness of original sin," and is a strenuous attempt to show that every man is guilty because he lacks the original righteousness in which (not he but) the first man was created. To make this out the author has recourse to the art of logical jumbling, of which he is not a master and which he manages in this case very poorly. Take this passage for a sample; "What man has omitted to do, what man is destitute of—this is a species of sin which he does not sufficiently consider and which is weighing him down to perdition." Here two things which are radically different are put in apposition, and are referred to by the same relative. "What man has omitted to do" he may well be blamed for, if he could have done it; but "what man is destitute of," if it be something that he never had, and could by no possibility have obtained, will never weigh him down to perdition. Yet Dr. Shedd, perhaps unconsciously, seeks to gain the consent of the understanding for the last statement by joining it with the first. It is a species of argumentation which does no logician much credit.

The fundamental proposition of this discourse, that "the faculties of intelligence and will, as unfallen, and not as fallen, determine the amount of holiness and of service that may be demanded, upon principles of strict justice, of every individual," Dr. Shedd attempts to illustrate. He refers to the Parable of the Talents, and says that "at the settlement each and every one of the parties was righteously summoned to account for all that had originally been entrusted to him.... If any one of the servants had been found to have 'lacked' a part or the whole of the original treasure, because he had culpably lost it, think you that the fact that it was now gone from his possession and was past recovery would have been accepted as a valid excuse from the original obligations imposed upon him?" What manner of logic is this? The very question at issue is whether the servant has culpably lost his talent. If he had it, and has lost it, let him suffer; but, if he never had it, what sort of justice is that which holds him responsible for its equivalent? The master requires the servant to account for what was given to him, not for what his grandfather might have had and lost. Dr. Shedd might as well abandon all hope of finding illustrations of his doctrine in the relations of men. Men never deal with each other upon the principles which he ascribes to God. Human courts of law never punish men for not paying taxes on property that was squandered by their ancestors; and it would be a slander upon the average heathen to accuse him of doing what Dr. Shedd charges upon the Judge of all the Earth.

Dr. Shedd insists that we must repent of our lack of original righteousness. It is possible that some persons may bring themselves to [illegible] but the strain upon their ethical jud[illegible] ments must be very hard. All of [illegible] will recognize with sorrow the [illegible] that our natures are depraved; [illegible] we are born into this world with [illegible] eased bodies and unbalanced [illegible] that we inherit from those who have gone before us certain physical and moral disabilities. All of us will admit that we are to blame for cherishing these evil tendencies in our own natures, and for yielding to their solicitations; but for the fact that we were born with them we are not to blame. We are to blame for nothing that happened before we were born. We are ready to repent of every evil act of our own; but of that in which we had neither part nor lot we have not repented and cannot repent. And, to apply a famous saying of John Stuart Mill, which Dr. Shedd quotes, if for the lack of this repentance God will send us to hell, to hell we will go.

NOTES OF A DISCUSSION.

FIFTH SESSION. FENN'S FIRST SPEECH.

My opponent says, God "inflicted the penalty of moral death upon Adam Let us carefully examine the assertion. Man was created or formed of the dust of the ground. (Gen. 2: 7.) By the breath of life he is made to live; not the breath of life to live in him. It is not the breath of life that lives, but the breath lets the man live. Take that away and he dies, not the breath. Life is a result, a state, a condition. Life is not an entity, a creature nor a thing. It is a state of animate existence. Life is not an abstract principle.

The breath of life is not life, but that which enables the creature to which it is given to develop life. Life is the result of organized matter placed in the proper state to become animate, or active. Death is the reverse of this. Life is the state in which the organism is rendered vital and active. Death is the state in which the organism is dispossessed of vitality from some obstruction in the wheels of our being. He who formed the wonderful machinery of nature, has so adjusted it that it must be kept running to keep living. Stop it, and it dies. Render motionless the heart, and soon the whole machine is dormant. Stop the lungs, and forbid respiration, and the whole being is soon still in death.

The constant inhalation and expulsion of air to and from the lungs, is indispensable to the life. The breath gives the life, but is not of itself the life.

This is the condition we find man in when God said, "in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." We can only judge of the meaning of this language, by watching carefully the course pursued by man, and the result of this course. The acts performed in the execution of the penalty, and the result, are a better interpretation of the language "thou shalt surely die," than all the metaphysics under heaven can furnish.

Man is left to follow his own inclinations, after receiving his charge to let the tree of knowledge, of good and evil alone. The result is that he disobeys God and eats. Faithful to his word, God comes into Eden, and reckons with the man. In pronouncing the sentence embraced in the decree—"Thou shalt surely die," he gives us unmistakable knowledge of the result of dying: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return....And the Lord God said: Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever, therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the Garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man, and he placed at the east of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life (Gen. 3: 19–24.)

When we get the charge of the judge in this case we understand what awaits the criminal. We learn he is to be placed back where he came from. The expression "in the day," is explained to represent the lifetime of Adam, and cannot be made to mean a day of twenty-four hours. The pro[illegible] returning back to dust began [illegible] forfeited the right to live [illegible] when that process was [illegible] he was dead. "And all the days that Adam lived was nine hundred and thirty years and he died." (Gen. 5: 5.)

Why cannot men accept this reasonable record, and forsake the idea of man being dead, literally, and alive at the same time. If this death was moral death, universal salvation is the lot of man: "For as in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (1 Cor. 15: 22.) Whatever life is lost to the race, by the Adamic transgression, is restored to the race, by the righteousness of Jesus Christ. "Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Rom. 5: 18.)

Br. Burgess says all this is moral death. Let us see how he will get away from universal salvation. If physical death is not taught in the passages I have cited, then there is no such thing intimated in the Bible. Moral death is no part of the penalty of God's law. Man has the full control of moral life and death, himself, and the state of moral life, and death, is entered by the voluntary act of the creature, and is not enforced by the Creator.

Mr. Burgess' 1st speech.

The gentleman has given us a very eloquent declamation on the garden of Eden; but what has that to do with this question? He tries to make out the death inflicted was literal. He refers you to Rom. ch. 5, and charges me with aiding Universalism. Well I prefer universal salvation, to his view of the particular point under dispute. Paul in Rom. ch. 5 shows plainly that moral death comes through transgression, and moral life comes through obedience.

I showed you last night that pneuma was applied to God [illegible] well as beasts. Now if spirit is not [illegible] rationality, God is a brute. If, as [illegible] ponent argues, life and consciousne[illegible] the result of organized matter, pla[illegible] under the condition of animation, [illegible] God himself is but a creature, for he has life and consciousness. I despise dust in application to mind.

When Adam violated the law he did not die a natural death, as the gentleman's doctrine requires. If "dying thou shalt die," means physical death, Adam must have died that very day. But he did not. "Penalty can't be enforced till after transgression," says Fenn: "hence returning to dust was the penalty." Returning to dust has reference to the body; but "the spirit returns to God who gave it," according to the wise man, and all the gentleman's rhetoric, and adroit turns cannot cover up that precious truth If the gentleman's theory is true, there is no nucleus upon which man's continued existence depends; hence there must be a new creation at the resurrection, which is absurd.

Fenn says he "prefers to sleep in death rather than go into the darkness of hades." Nonentity would be very fine and pleasant. What kind of a victory would that be over death? I have now swept away Fenn's opening argument, and now I begin a positive argument. [Reads from pamphlet. Says the infant can't have immortality, if none has it but those who seek for it.]

Obituary.

HOUSE. In New Buffalo, Sauk Co. Wis., July 22, 1871, Rozanna, wife of Frederick House; aged about 67 years.

My wife, with myself, embraced the doctrine of the personal and speedy coming of Christ, in 1843, and we let our light shine for a season, but, like others, we afterward grew cold. But when the doctrine of life only through Christ was preached, she was one of the first to embrace it, and since that time she has tried to live for God in every place, ever ready to an answer of the reason of her hope.

She conversed freely concerning her death, and was ready for the event, willing to go at any time; but she did not expect to sleep a great while. She fully believed that Jesus would soon come. We have laid her away in the cold grave, to await his summons, which will call her from the land of the enemy. By the assisting grace of God, I am determined to meet her in the sweet bye and bye, on the beautiful shores of the land of rest. Pray for me.

BLISS. In Nashville, Mich., July 24, 1871, Francella, daughter of Joseph H. Bliss, of Charlotte, Mich., and Sarah Bliss, deceased; aged 14 years.

Francella was visiting at Nashville, Mich. After dinner on Monday, Mrs. Roe not being well, Francella told her to lie down, and she would do up the work. She then went to the stove, put in some fuel, and taking the kerosene can, commenced pouring in oil. Immediately the can burst, and threw the burning oil all over her person, and before aid arrived, her clothes, except shoes, were completely burned off. She survived about three hours. Said she did not know what made her use the kerosene—she had never done it before.

Her father and mother were sent for directly, but could not reach Nashville before she was placed in her coffin. The corpse was brought to Charlotte for burial. Words of comfort on Sunday, the 30th, from 1 Cor. 15: 14, by the writer. JAMES FENNER.

ABROAD.

England.

The Rock says of the horrors we mentioned last week: One of the noblest of the many noble works of the ever active Earl of Shaftesbury, was his manly and exhaustive denunciation in the House of Lords, on Tuesday, of the horrors attendant in the employment of females in brickfields. Our contemporary, the Graphic, in some of its masterly sketches, recently pictured, with an eloquence needing no words, the mischief that was being wrought. What country are we in? Why do we talk of missions to heathens? These are questions that force themselves upon us after reading the horrifying narrative of the noble Earl. Little girls of the age of three years and a-half "working" in a brick-field! A child of eight years carrying forty three pounds of clay on its head an average distance of fifteen miles a day—and working seventy-hours a week! A child of ten required to move three tons and a-half of clay daily to a distance of forty yards—thus traversing fourteen miles in the task! Is it at all surprising that the worst forms of moral degradation are the accompaniments of the practice? Some of the worst features of this slavery the Bishop of London tells us is carried on within his diocese. Whatever Parliamentary measure is shelved, some enactment for remedying this disgraceful state of affairs should be passed this session. Better that Ballot Bill, Army Bill, and every other measure should wait, than that the remedy for this crying evil should be longer deferred.

From another source we learn that Mr. Elihu Burritt, speaking of a little girl about thirteen years of age, said: "She first took up a mass of the cold clay, weighing about twenty-five pounds, upon her head, and while balancing it there, she squatted to the heap without bending her body, and took up a mass of equal weight with both hands against her stomach, and with the two burdens walked about a rod and deposited them on the molding bench. No wonder, we thought, that the color in her cheeks was an unhealthy flush. With a mass of cold clay held against her stomach, and bending under another on her head for ten or twelve hours in a day, it seemed a marvel that there could be any red blood in her veins at all. How such a child could ever grow an inch in any direction after being put to this occupation was another mystery. Certainly not an inch could be added to her stature in all the working days of her life. She could only grow at nights and on Sundays." Now this was not exaggerated by a hairsbreadth. Indeed, from his own personal observation he could state that it was under the mark in regard to the abominations which were practiced. The moral results were such as might be expected. Let them again hear Mr. Smith: "Of course, the natural results ensue. Ignorance and immorality prevail to a fearful extent among the workmen and children so employed. How could it be otherwise? All goodness and purity seems to become stamped out of these people, and were I to relate what could be related, the whole country would become sickened and horrified."

The master brickmason bore the same testimony in equally strong language. These were his words: "But there are often phases of evil connected with work in brickyards and clay yards generally which I must not overlook, especially the demoralizing effects ever accruing from the mixed employment of the sexes. A flippancy and familiarity of manners with boys and men grow daily on the young girls. Then the want of respect and delicacy toward females exhibits itself in every act, word, and look, for the lads grow so precocious, and the girls so coarse in their language and manners from close companionship at work, that in most cases the modesty of female life gradually becomes a byword instead of a reality, and they sing unblushingly before all while at work the lewdest and most disgusting songs, till oftentimes stopped short by the entrance of the master or foreman. The overtime work is still more objectionable, because boys and girls, men and women are less under the watchful eye of the master, nor looked upon by the eye of day. All these things—the criminality, levity, coarse phrases, sinful oaths, lewd gestures, and conduct of the adults and youths, exercise a terrible influence for evil on the young children." The whole might be summed up in the words of Mr. Inspector Baker, who had so judiciously and calmly carried the present Act into operation, and who, after visiting these grounds, deeply regretted their exclusion from the provisions of the Act: "I consider the employment of children in brickyards absolutely cruel, and that the degradation of the female character in them is most complete. I have known parents in receipt of two, three, and four pounds a week send their children out to work at clay works, for a few shillings per week, hung in rags, while the parents themselves rioted at home in luxuries and drink."

Italy.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—A dispatch dated Rome, July 31, says: "There is great excitement here over the vote in the French Assembly on the position of the Pope. The journals regard war with France as probable and accuse the Ministry of betraying the country. The Gazette says the Government should not have gone to Rome, but having gone, must stay though dark clouds should envelop the horizon."

The Sick Man.

The Ex-Emperor Napoleon continues to live in England, in spite of the prognostications of eminent physicians and surgeons for the last year or eighteen months of his reign that he must soon die; and what is still more singular, since Sedan, the eminent physicians and surgeons seem to have left him alone; we hear nothing more of his ill-health; and, indeed, Mr. Jenkins reports that "his Majesty" looks well.

Naturally, the joker of small jokes will reply that Napoleon is well because the doctors leave him alone; but it may also be true that his health has improved because he has lived since he began the war against Germany in a much simpler style than for years before. That he was able to bear the excitement of the campaign up to Sedan certainly proved that he had more stamina than the world gave him credit for. Long-continued excesses were believed to have worn out his constitution, and to have left him too weak to endure either great hardships or extraordinary excitements and disappointments. But even Sedan, whose awful, and to him disgraceful, end might have killed a more vigorous man, did not appear seriously to affect his health. He seemed cheerful and well at Wilhelmshoehe, and ate, and drank, and saw company, and drove out, and even, as his queer, cold-blooded way is, wrote a little pamphlet, in which he attempted to fix the blame for his misfortunes on fate and his enemies.

And now he threatens to live on—we suspect because he is a cast-iron person; whose craving for notoriety has received extraordinary gratification, even in his misfortunes, and who solaces himself, perhaps, with the reflection that his old age is well provided for, and that after all, the Leicester street adventurer of other days, who was poor and friendless, and proscribed at forty, has driven with a triumphant hand to a very high eminence since then.

Napoleon is now sixty-three. It is no great age for a man who has lived a good, or even a careful and clean life. Not a few men have conquered fortune after sixty. But to him whose life has been neither clean nor good, probably there remains little in the future but to nourish the little spark of life that remains by judicious discipline, and to conquer as he may the evil passions which have so long been his masters.—N. Y. Times.

The Impending Papal Election.

The collapse of the temporal power has sorely damped the spirits of the Infallibilists, and has greatly raised the courage of those who, with varying degrees of frankness and vigor, were opposed to the last Papal move. Cardinals and Monsignori, whose opposition was of a mitigated character, while the strong current of Ultramontane passion ran in full tide, and whose opposition was mitigated by the supposed necessity of sinking minor differences in the interests of the temporal power, take now another view of the question with the Italian Government definitely established in Rome. These Cardinals and Monsignori having no longer any reason to be silent, are speaking out. The temporal power is gone. What if the spiritual authority in Bavaria and Austria, in the Rhine Provinces, in many a French diocese, should share the same fate? The Liberal party in the Vatican are desirous of warding off this mischief. They are at present doing everything in their power to make Pius IX., if not absolutely retrace his steps—that would be too great, too public, too signal a humiliation—at least slacken speed, and no longer hurry downward on the steep and dangerous path which he has been lately treading. Should their efforts prove altogether unsuccessful they will openly side with Dollinger and Father Hyacinthe. These are no vague and idle dreams—they are the plain, straightforward assurances of great Catholic churchmen, by whom such a course is regarded as the sole means capable, if not of saving St. Peter's bark, at least of constructing such a raft or life-boat as may enable them to reach the shore in safety. Nor must it be forgotten that these men have their own personal jealousies and vanity and ambition, of which the hopes and aims are menaced by the attitude of the Pope, and by the new administrative instruments at his disposal for giving effect to his schemes, his desires, or it may be his mere caprice. It is well known that he proposes by a special bull, possessing the sanction of his newly assumed personal infallibility, to overrule and override the ancient usages of the Sacred College. By the exercise of this new authority he will nominate his successor. Cardinal Patrizi is designated as such, and the Cardinal will be authorized to assume at once the Papal tiara without the regular summoning and legal formalities of a conclave. Cardinal Patrizi is also associated by the Pope in the cares of the present, as preparatory to those of his own future Government. It may perhaps interest the author of "Sartor Resartus" to be informed that among the most pressing anxieties of the future Pontiff at the present moment is the idea of so completely remodeling the dress of the clergy, both secular and regular, that it shall no longer associate the persons of the wearers with the memories of medieval times, but place them, in outward garb at least, on a footing not greatly different from the rest of their fellow-citizens.—Rome (July 14) Cor. of the London News.

Items.

The cholera is again raging in the eastern part of Europe, and as usual, is making its way westward as fast as it can overcome the resistance it meets in passing quarantine.

The figures show that in England during the four years ending with 1869, the home consumption of cotton goods diminished from £17,980,686 to £8,501,789 this last amount being the total value of goods retained for home consumption in that year. In the same four years £450, 308,301 was expended for wines, spirits and malt liquors. Thus it seems that while English people spend about eight dollars for cotton goods for each man woman and child of the United Kingdom in four years, they also spend about seventy dollars for drink.

The British Charge d' Affaire at Teheran telegraphs to the Foreign Office that the famine in Persia is over, but provisions are selling at exorbitant prices.

The British iron-clad frigate warrior, and an American frigate, are ashore near Leghorn. A number of small vessels, and two Italian war steamers, are engaged in rendering assistance to the disabled men-of-war, and it is hoped they will all be got off without serious injury.

Advent Christian Times.

BUCHANAN, - - - - - MICHIGAN

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 15, 1871.

The Prophetic Times.

THE SABBATH-REST.

[Concluded.]

There remains to be considered one period more; that august Week of mundane history, already alluded to, of which each unit stretches over a thousand years. This grand era differs, indeed, from all those with which we have been occupied, in that it has no direct word of God on which to rest; and therefore it cannot strictly be called a prophetic period. But it is sanctioned by the belief of a very venerable antiquity, both Jewish and Christian; the former dating from before the birth of Christ; the latter including the earliest fathers, as Barnabus, Irenæus, Cyprian, Lactantius, Ambrose, etc. And, indirectly, it seems to have even inspired sanction; "for the apostle Paul's use of the word sabbatismos, to designate the saints' expected glorious rest with Christ (Heb. 4: 9), may be not unreasonably considered as almost an apostolic recognition of the early and well-known Jewish opinion, that Messiah's kingdom of blessedness would occupy the seventh millennium of the world, agreeably with the type of the seventh day's sabbatism of rest after the six days of creation; especially seeing that it was Hebrew Christians whom he was then addressing, and that by them the word thus chosen could not but be almost necessarily associated, alike from its etymology and its use with some chronological septenary."[1]

The belief may thus be expressed: —The six days, during which the world was created, typically represent each a thousand years, during which its work-day life should last; and the seventh day, of God's rest, the seventh millennium, when Christ and his risen Saints shall reign over it.

Let us now examine this grand period, in order to ascertain whither it will land us in the range of time, the course of human history? Has it passed by, and disappointed the venerable expectation, by making no sign? Or is its termination still future? If the latter, how near, or how remote? And how does its close agree with that of the other periods which have just come under our examination? An inquiry this, surely of deep interest.

Happily, we approach it under far more auspicious conditions than our fathers could. For, as was just observed, our present times are now linked with those of the kings of Judah with a most reliable precision; and, for the rest of the grand Calendar we need not go beyond the letter of the inspired Word.

The first year of Hezekiah is fixed (by the eclipse which caused the recession of the shadow in his fourteenth year) to B. C. 702. From this date to the first year of Saul are 375 years. The judicature of Samuel is an unknown period, which we will call x. The apostle Paul (Acts 13: 20), gives 450 years as reaching from the division of the land to Samuel. And that this was 2559 years from the creation, may be easily computed from the Pentateuch; simply noting that—(1.) the Exodus was 430 years (Gal. 3: 17) after the call of Abram (Gen. 13: 15); and (2.) That Abram was born (cf. Gen. 11: 32, and 12: 4, with Acts 7: 4) when Terah was 130 years old.

	YEARS.
From Adam to the division of the land,	2559
Thence to Samuel	450
Samuel's judicature	x
From Saul to Hezekiah	375
" Hezekiah to Christ	702
To the present year,	1871

Thus there have elapsed, since the creation, 5957 years and the unknown period occupied by Samuel between the death of Eli and the election of Saul. This interval we have no means of precisely determining; but the Scripture seems to settle it very nearly. Samuel was "a child" when Eli was "very old" (1 Sam. 2: 18 22); he was still "a child" when Eli's "eyes began to wax dim that he could not see" (3: 1, 2, 8); and that this word "child" must be understood literally, appears from the statement that after this he "grew." (3: 19.) Samuel, then, could scarcely have passed his vigorous manhood at the death of Eli: yet at the election of Saul (12: 2), he was "old and gray-headed;" and, some time before this, he had deputed his office to his sons, on account (8. 1) of his own incapacity from old age.

Nearer than this we cannot go; but how notably this computation agrees in its results with those of the prophetic periods already evolved, may be left to the observation of our intelligent readers.

Now let us glance back for a moment, and review our results. Here are seven distinct periods, varying in range from 6000 to 360 years; some of them independent, others having complex relations with each other, the failure of one of which[2] would be quite fatal to it and to its fellows; every one of them having its starting-point and its termination (so far as this can be at present traced) marked by some momentous epoch, and momentous, too, in the most direct and manifest relation to the several events marked out for the periods; all of them periods of divine ordination, and their events not such as man might arbitrarily select from the ample page of history, but determined and severely limited beforehand by the Spirit of God. Yet their terminations, as with one concurrent harmonious voice, point to an era embraced by half a dozen years at most, either way, from the moment in which this page was written.

We must, however, avoid estimating this evidence more highly than it really deserves. The data, the premises, are divine, and therefore infallible: the conclusions are merely human inferences, and therefore liable to error. If the present epoch should (which may God avert!) pass by without the personal appearing of the Lord Jesus, or any grand crisis of prophetic accomplishment, we will not for a moment say that the truth of God has failed; but only that, through our ignorance, we had misread his premonitions. In every department of human knowledge (mathematical science excepted) our nearest approach to absolute certainty is but a balancing of probabilities. God's word is, indeed, Truth, without any admixture of error; but, in man's reception and application of this Truth, a thousand sources of possible error are at once opened.

Let us exemplify this. We cannot be absolutely certain that in the term "seven times," announced to Nebuchadnezzar, a typical meaning was couched. If there was, we are not absolutely certain that a "time" signifies 360 years. If it does, we are not absolutely certain that the divine commencement and termination are two-fold; nor that the former was at the events indicated in 2 Kings 15: 29, and Isa. 7: 8. Yet, how high a probability attaches to all these assumptions we have endeavored to show; and our readers must weigh it for themselves.

Again:—in marking the incipient rise of the Papacy by the favoring edict of the great lawgiver Justinian, it must not be overlooked that, in A. D. 378, an edict of Gratian and Valentinian II. had conferred on the Bishop of Rome the right of finally determining appeals throughout the whole Western Empire. And, in 445, an edict of Theodosius II. and Valentinian III. had assigned the primacy to the See of Peter, and had forbidden anything to be attempted against the authority of that See. "For then, at length, the peace of the churches shall everywhere be preserved, if the universe acknowledge its Ruler.' This language approaches the force of that employed by Justinian, "Head of all the Churches;" yet it does not reach its blasphemous hight, nor will these dates point to any events of importance, if 1260 years be computed from them either forward or backward. To Katechon, moreover, had not yet been removed.

Once more:—if we examine the coincidences enumerated, as it with a microscope, we might say, since the events of 1870 (as the consummation of Papal blasphemy, the blotting out of the Temporal Power, and the crushing of the Eldest Son of the Church) exceed in apparent magnitude the events of 1868; so the events of 538, of 610, and of 1795, ought respectively to have exceeded those of 533, of 608, and of 1793, in like proportion; but, that they did, does not clearly appear from history, according to our power of estimating their importance. Yet the weight of the concurrence of these groups of years among themselves, and with those assigned to the beginning of the Seven Times, immensely preponderates over this slight discrepancy, which, too, may be only apparent.

There is such a thing as the credulity of scepticism; and he who obstinately refuses to accept as true any conclusion in which ingenuity can succeed in picking a hole, must remain all his life in painful doubt upon subjects of the gravest importance.

Before he quite dismisses the subject, the writer would fain present a loving caveat to his readers. God forbid that this article should be no more than an intellectual exercise, an attempt to solve a curious chronological problem, an arena for the display of mere mental acumen. The occupation of the mind about the Word of God, while the conscience is dormant, is a dangerous thing. Has not this subject a voice to the conscience, to the heart?

The coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him, is the great hope of the Church, ever vividly presented to her by the Holy Ghost and by Jesus himself. It is the very close connection of this most blessed consummation with the termini of the prophetic epochs herein discussed, that gives to them their absorbing interest. On it are intently bent the longing eyes of "all them that love his appearing." Whatever adds an iota of probability to the ever-expectant hope of beholding Jesus quickly, is precious. "My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning; I say, more than they that watch for the morning" (Ps. 130: 6.) To see him as he is, to see himself, is our hope. He said to his sorrowing, orphaned disciples, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." (Jno. 14: 3.) Glorious beyond our poor imagining as may be the lustre and magnificence of the Holy City which is to be our residence,—"the Lamb is the light thereof" (Rev. 21: 23.) We earnestly desire, by these investigations, to quicken the heart-hopes of his own; of those who know his love; who can say, in rapturous thanksgiving, "he loved me, and gave himself for me;" to elicit the cry for his personal presence as their chief joy. What will it be to be with him! What will it be to be for ever with the Lord! The least dim indication, the feeblest additional evidence, that he is near, ought to send a joyful thrill through our hearts. It ought; but, alas! it does not. The day we speak of is "the day of his espousals, the day of the gladness of his heart" (Song 3: 11; Rev. 19: 7), and he has abundantly shown how his own loving heart is set upon it. O that our cold hearts were so warmed with respondent love, that from the whole Church one strong irresistible cry should ascend, "Come Lord Jesus!"

The New Testament, to one who reads with an opened eye and an obedient heart, abounds with instructions how we should regard the approaching Advent. Love towards it (2 Tim. 4: 8); ardent hope (Lk. 21: 28; Rom. 8: 23; Col. 3: 4; 1 Thes. 4: 13–17; Rev. 22: 12); earnest expectation (Phil. 3: 20; Titus 2: 13; Heb. 10: 28; 2 Peter 3: 12, "hasting unto" it); godly fear, and jealousy of being disapproved (2 Cor. 5: 10); patient endurance of trial (Heb. 10: 36, 37; James 5: 7); separation from the world, and looseness to entanglements (Lk. 21: 34); all holy conversation and godliness (2 Peter 3: 11); purity modelled on Jesus's purity (1 Jno. 3: 3); finally, not a sentimental indifferentism which folds its hands and idly waits, but loving, active, self-denying service for the Church and the world while there is time (Matt. 24: 45; Mk. 13: 34; Lk. 12: 35–48);—such are the conditions of mind and heart which the signs of the coming of Jesus should awaken and maintain.

O that writer and reader, "seeing that we look for such things, may be diligent that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless!"—P. H. G., in London Quar. Journal of Prophecy.

Two Signs of The Times.

1. Is it not evident to the most casual observer, that these are times of excessive worldliness? Gain and gaiety are the two grand idols of the age. Together they enthral the hearts, absorb the energies, and command the homage of the multitude. Everywhere men are in haste to be rich, and utterly unscrupulous as to the means used to secure the boon. Health is imperilled, physical and mental powers are overtaxed, conscience stifled, character and reputation sacrificed, and most of all to be deplored, the eternal welfare of the soul neglected, in order to gratify a towering ambition, or an insatiable avarice. This spirit is seen in the unseemly scramble for office, in the shameless abuse of power, in the eager pursuit of pleasure, in the prevalence of reckless speculation and grasping selfishness, and in extravagant expenditures of money on costly furniture, needless luxuries and superfluous dress—in the latter instance not only despising Christian simplicity, but in many cases outraging all propriety and good taste, and displaying complete disregard to health and comfort, so that homage may be rendered at the shrine of fashion. This evil saps the very foundations of society, and awakens suspicion and distrust. It often sunders the dearest and tenderest ties, while it perverts and degrades the the noblest gifts. It is especially fraught with peril to man's spiritual welfare. Its very essence is forgetfulness of God, and of eternity. Of it comes science without faith, politics without principle, business without conscience, literature without holiness, pleasure without purity, in short, man without God. It invades even the sanctity of the Christian church, to tarnish its purity and impair its strength. It produces among professing Christians a regard for talent, rather than piety; for costly church edifices, wealthy congregations, and showy forms, rather than the simplicity of Christ, the spirituality of the believer, and the rescue of sinners from eternal perdition. T[illegible] Christian mind such a spect[illegible] painful. To note its c[illegible] effects, and apply its r[illegible]e aim of all who desir[illegible]ue prosperity of our country, [illegible] the eternal well-being of souls.

2. Are not these, also, time of wide-spread immortality? This may be inferred from what we have already observed. For where there is excess in worldliness, there will invariably be laxity in morals. If, instead of immutable truth, high-toned principle, and a regard for the general weal, society is governed by time-serving expediency, self-interest and sensual gratification, then it must become essentially corrupt; evil of every grade must flourish and prevail. Is it not even so in our midst? We appeal to the state of things around us for proof. What do we see? Wickedness in high places and in low places, in legislative halls and in judicial courts, in stately mansions and in wretched hovels, in educated and refined society, among the ignorant and debased. What do we see? Suicide treading in the steps of murder; drunkenness, profanity and Sabbath desecration jostling each other; the innocent and unwary decoyed from the paths of virtue and honor to a course of infamy and shame; life and property constantly imperilled; and crime following crime in quick and alarming succession. What do we see? Speculation tampering with dishonesty, and bribery catering to theft; the public purse rifled for private or party ends, or for sectarian purposes; the press, designed to be the fount of knowledge, the exponent of truth and the guardian of virtue, too often used to gratify a vitiated taste, or disseminate a vile and godless literature. In view of such scenes the true patriot will mourn, and the Christian will take shelter in the pavilion of Divine sympathy and care. How to grapple with these evils, and if possible eradicate them, is a great and grave question, well deserving the attention of every Christian thinker and philanthropist.—Henry Angell.

QUARTERLY MEETING.

This meeting commenced on Friday evening July 28, and from the begining was characterized by spirituality and earnestness for the salvation of perishing ones. Two started in the good way Saturday eve, spoke in Love feast Sunday morn, and after preaching in the forenoon, one more started in the path of the Christian, after the two o'clock service four were baptised.

One thing is worthy of note. At the close of the afternoon service notice was given that if any wanted to be baptised it could be attended to at six o'clock before the evening service. But one of the converts spoke and said, "Why not now?" the now was responded to, and four were buried with the dear Redeemer, and came up to lead a new life, while songs of praise and shouts of joy gladdened the hearts of the children of God.

The Lord's supper in the evening was a precious season. We had our social meeting around the table. It was good to be there. The closing scene was excellent, while we sung the farewell (p. 420, Harp), and gave each other the Christian hand of love, all hearts seemed moved with love indeed. Death has taken four of their number since the tent meeting last year, yet they do not mourn as those that have no hope. P. W. Hough.

[2] For example. Suppose the inception of the Seven Times had fallen at the beginning of the 5th century or at the end of the 7th, what could we have found to mark the commencement of the time, times, and a half? Or, suppose the complete rise of the Papacy had been manifestly 50 or 100 years after its incipient rise (i. e., suppose Phocas' grant and the concomitant events had been about A. D. 580 or 630), whereas the mature breaking of Israel had been 75 years after the incipient, the parallelism would have utterly failed. So with the other coincidences.

Thy Kingdom Come.

"Thy kingdom come,"
I heard a seer cry: "The wilderness,
The solitary place,
Shall yet be glad for him, and he shall bless
(Thy kingdom come) with his revealed face
The forests: they shall drop their precious gum,
And shed for him their balm; and he shall yield
The grandeur of his speech to charm the field.

Then all the soothed winds shall drop to listen
(Thy kingdom come;)
Comforted waters waxen calm shall glisten
With bashful tremblement beneath his smile;
And Echo ever the while
Shall take, and in her awful joy repeat,
The laughter of his lips—(Thy kingdom come;)
And hills that sit apart shall be no longer dumb;
No, they shall shout and shout,
Raining their lovely loyalty along the dewy plain,
And valleys round about.

And all the well contented land, made sweet
With flowers she opened at his feet,
Shall answer; shout and make the welkin ring,
And tell it to the stars, shout, shout, and sing;
Her cup being full to the brim,
Her poverty made rich with him.

Her yearning satisfied to the utmost sum—
Lift up thy voice, O earth, prepare thy song,
It shall not yet be long;
Lift up, O earth, for he shall come again,
Thy Lord, and he shall reign, and he SHALL reign
Thy kingdom come."

A SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

BEING

BY GREY QUILL.

CHAPTER VI.

Some time after this an event occurred which thoroughly awoke me from my stupor, and in its ultimate effect prompted me to seek a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. It was the death of a young man—a dear friend of mine whose probationary season closed at the early age of twenty-two years. We had been intimate for years, followed the same avocation, attended the same church, and had been instructed in the same theological school. He was strictly moral, was generous and kind. But, alas! though he had for years lived with one of the deacons of the church and had strictly attended all the meetings, he had not been able to learn what he must do to be saved, but had invariably been taught (as all were), that he could do nothing. During his long sickness I cared for him, so far as his temporal wants were concerned, like a brother; and he had other friends equally kind.

But concerning his spiritual condition what could I do? What could I say? What could you have said, dear reader, if you had been in my place? If ministers called of God to watch for souls; if members of the church—followers of Jesus who ought to know about these things, could do nothing, what could I, a poor sinner do? And I confess I never so keenly felt I was a sinner as I did then. But that did not help the matter at all, for I was bound with the same fetters he was. I could not help myself—much less him. So I did not try. I never as I recollect spoke to him of the future, nor did any other person, to my knowledge, either priest or layman. So he died and we buried him.

The minister was cautious in his remarks at the funeral, but I was satisfied he believed he had gone to hell. I did not believe it, however; I could not, I would not believe it. The thought that he who had never injured any one in his life, but had acted on the principle of love and good will to all men—that he was being tormented in hell; while others who had died who were in life dishonest, selfish and mean, had gone to heaven, was a dose my mental stomach positively rebelled against, and in its severe retchings disburdened itself of all the foul matter it had from time to time received. In other words I repudiated the whole arrangement.

Like a vessel without a compass, chart, rudder, or sail, ready to be wafted whither the changing winds may list, so I, having cut loose from all religious moorings, save one little thread, was afloat on the treacherous sea of uncertainty and doubt, and ready to be wafted in whatever direction the winds and gales of circumstance, or the waves of fate might carry me.

And I had not long to wait, for so true is it that when a person gets into the quick-sands of unbelief, the devil is ever ready to stretch forth a hand to help you out; but, mark it! if you lay hold of him, instead of lifting you up, he will surely sink you deeper, and if possible send you to the bottom.

There were then two men in our vicinity who styled themselves "Freethinkers"—men apparently with negative minds; for while it was extremely difficult to ascertain what they did believe, they were ever ready to inform you what they did not allow. They had often voluntarily given me their opinion that the Christian religion was a humbug, and the Bible of no more use than a last year's almanac. I had thus far paid little attention to their insinuations; but now the time had arrived when I was not only ready to listen to what they had to say, but read their books, also. I was readily supplied with a goodly assortment, consisting of the writings of "Tom" Paine, Voltaire, Volney, etc., not omiting the Boston Investigator. I went into an investigation of their contents with energy and determination, and the poison took readily: and I honestly believe if they had not given me so enormous a dose at once, but had diluted it with truth, and administered it in smaller quantities, my faith in the Bible would have been effectually upset.

But they over did the thing entirely. Their merciless ridicule of every thing pertaining to the Christian religion, not even sparing its Author, without giving a satisfactory reason for their course; and their utter disregard, and manifest dislike of every thing sacred, at first astonished and alarmed, and finally disgusted me. For I had to that hour, notwithstanding all my mental struggles, in my heart of hearts (so to speak), believed, faintly I know, in the same Deity I revered in childhood's happy hour. It was all the religion I had—I may truly say my only hope; and to have that taken from me by dividing up the Creator of all things with universal nature, and thus practically reducing him, as an individuality to nothing—my soul rebelled against it. I could bear to hear the Bible ridiculed, for I practically knew nothing about it; could bear much, but not that. I flung their books aside immediately with the firm conviction, that however bad my religious condition might be, I should not be morally or spiritually elevated by adopting their theories; but on the contrary their influence would tend to the opposite, and sink me in the lowest depths of infidelity.

There were a few citizens of our town, good, moral, upright men, who seldom went to meeting on Sunday or any other time even, except to attend funerals; yet, in cases of sickness or distress, none were more willing and ready to help than they. In a chance conversation with one of them at a certain time, the subject of future life became our theme; and he inquired of me if I had ever read the Bible with reference to that subject. I replied I had not, but had been instructed to believe it taught the endless torment of a large majority of the race. He then quietly remarked, that was a great mistake; and, on the contrary, it affirmed the opposite. "Our Maker" said he, "is a God of love, whose tender mercy and kind watchfulness and care, are over all his works." He then took his Bible and showed me it taught Jesus was "the Savior of all men"—that he "would have all men to be saved," etc., and went on to inform me the plain teachings of the Scriptures were that all would finally be saved, whatever their characters might be here; though, he admitted, all ought to do right.

He saw I was interested, and offered to lend me some ably written works throwing light on this subject, and calculated to aid me in coming to a right conclusion. I received them thankfully and promised to read them.

Materialism as taught by Science and revealed in God's Word.

If "spirit" means in the Bible something intelligent, immaterial and immortal, then the beasts of the field, the the birds of the air, and the inhabitants of the sea are endued with an intelligent immaterial and immortal entity: for, says the Psalmist, speaking of these—"Thou takest away their breath; they die and return unto the dust. Thou sendest forth thy spirit they are created." (Ps. 104: 29, 30.) Of man he says: "His "breath" goeth forth; he returneth to his earth [not to heaven] in that very day his thoughts perish if his mind still lived? Could this be said of a person possessed of our intelligent, immortal, immaterial entity?

Turning now to the creation of man we find the account as given by Moses to be—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2: 7.) We are, of course, to suppose Adam to be a full grown man. The whole human machinery is in order, awaiting vitalization.

Suppose a man in this condition, every thing ready for the impartation of life. That life might be imparted, one thing is necessary, viz.: that the lungs be inflated, and respiration effected. The result of this would be motion, or life, within the body. Thus a synopsis of man's creation would be —Man is formed; God introduces air into his lungs; and the result is that man becomes a living soul through the medium of respiration.

Let us consider the idea of immaterialists, viz.: that at creation God gave to man two natures—a spiritual nature, the soul; and a carnal nature, the body—and the conclusion drawn from this, that the soul is a personal entity capable of conscious existence after the death of the body. "The Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground." Then before God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, he was wholly material, even on their hypothesis.

After this, man the same material being spoken of before, became a living soul. Now they claim that man becomes possessed of two natures—the spiritual, immaterial, immortal, conscious nature, and the carnal, animal, mortal and unconscious nature. How is this? Certainly if the breath of life, as they claim, is the soul, this is is breathed into man, merely adding to him another nature. If this is the soul, and is to be conscious after death it must have been conscious before it was imparted to the body. If we are to remember the scenes of this life in the spirit world, as they say, on the same line of reasoning our souls ought to be mindful of their previous lives in the spirit world before they were united to our bodies. In short we ought to remember back in the past to to a point earlier than the existence of our bodies.

This is the reasoning of immaterialist reversed. "It is a poor rule that will not work," and prove, "both ways." If immaterialists deny the soul to have have had a previous conscioius existence, still claiming for it personal entireness and consciousness during life and after death, then they must yield to the conclusion that matter, the man from the dust, into whom this soul was breathed, effected this change upon its nature. This conclusion will clash severely with their notion of the separateness and distinctiveness of soul and body. These are their only two alternatives: either is fatal to their theory.

In the new Testament we find that Christ breathed upon his disciples when imparting to them the Holy Spirit. (Jno 20: 22.) These references are introduced to show how intimate is the relation between spirit and its literal meaning breath, as the terms occur in the Bible. It is not necessary however, to consider the breath of man his spirit; for serious objections might be raised to such an understanding. But that spirit means the result of breath in the body, life, we can see no objection to, and many reasons why it should mean so.

That the cause is often used synonymously with the effect, in the Bible, does not in the least affect this idea. Then, according to Bible teaching, the spirit of man is not what orthodoxy says it is; but is, rather, unconscious, neither mortal nor immortal; and being the direct product of matter and found only in matter, we claim that the probabilities are in favor of its materiality.

Let us pass on now to the consideration of the word soul. The most frequent meaning of the term soul is person. Next to this is life. Sometimes it is used to denote the mind, but not often enough to warrant immaterialism in claiming that the mind is the soul.

As to the soul being immortal and immaterial, in no instance does the Bible assert nor imply it; but the contrary is strongly asserted. "Hungry and thirsty their soul fainted in them" (Ps. 78: 50.) How could this be, if the soul of man is immaterial and perfectly independent of the call of the body for matter?

The Lord will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish." (Prov. 10: 3.) Comforting consolation to a being possessed of an immaterial entity that has nothing to do with the necessities of this tabernacle of flesh."

All her people sigh; they seek bread: they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul." (Jer. 1: 11.) What foolish people. Had they only had "the perfectly consistent (?) theory" of immaterialism, they would not have given away "pleasant things" to no purpose.

But "the soul is immortal." Let us see. "The eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, to deliver their soul from DEATH, and to keep them alive in famine." (Ps. 33: 19.) This, although true in David's day, is perhaps not (?) so now, since the Lord has frequently been told by immaterialists that man was immortal, and could not die. Hence this divine surveilance is unnecessary. The All-wise having been enlightened (?) and having progressed with the age (?) sees the needlessness of watching those who are immortal, and, more than that, have preceded himself in making the discovery! Hence this is not true to-day, although truth itself in David's day.

God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." (Ps. 49: 15.) Why, David: your popularity would be jeopardy were you to make such statements as these at the present day. "He spared not their soul from death, but gave [what? the same thing logically] their life over to the pestilence." (Ps. 78: 50.) Here according to immaterialism God spares not an immortal soul from death. What injustice to kill that that can "never die." "Hear and your soul shall live." (Is. 55: 3.) How forcible this appears when we consider that the soul is immortal! "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hands of the grave?" (Ps. 89: 48.) If there are any rules in logic, the answers to these questions would be to the first, "None!" to the second, "No!" But though man himself cannot break the bonds of the tombs by the medium of his natural immortality, yet through immortality, granted by a precious Savior, upon the simple conditions of repentance, faith, and baptism, bestowed when Christ comes: then man can be delivered from the hand of the grave.

"He that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death." (Jas. 5: 20.) Thus Scripture plainly and undeniably asserts that the soul of man is mortal and material. Leaving the immaterialist nothing to base his belief upon but his own imagination.

We will not stop to enter into an argument as to whether death means death or life, for any one who builds up his theory upon the flimsy argument that death means life, could not be reasoned out of that absurdity.

If the Bible teaches that the soul is immortal, it, in all probability, says something about it, although this would not be necessary in an orthodox way of reasoning. Immortal, the great word of orthodoxy, can be found in the Bible just once. But once is sufficient to show who has immortality: "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever." (1 Tim. 1: 17.) Does this prove man immortal?

"Immortality" is used five times. Whom does the Bible declare to have immortality? "That thou keep this commandment without spot unrebukable until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light, which no man can approach unto." (1 Tim. 6: 15, 16.) Is this proof of man's immortality, and, also, that at death, or at any other time, we can go to God? Who is said to be without immortality? "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, [he will render] eternal life." (Rom. 2: 7.) How can a reasonable person seek for that already in his possession? "This mortal must put on immortality." (1 Cor. 15: 53.) "When this mortal shall have put on immortality." (1 Cor. 15: 54.) How can an immortal person put on immortality? If Paul had been an immaterialist, he would have written—"This immortal nature must shuffle off its tenement of clay." He would have spoken of putting off instead of putting on.

Through whom do we hope for immortality? Through our own nature, or some other medium? "Through our Savior Jesus Christ who hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." (2 Tim. 1: 10.) This is the Bible answer.

Everything the Bible has to say about immortality has been quoted above. Does this, we ask in candor, does this teach man's natural immortality or mortality?

Shall we look now to everlasting life. "And many of them that sleep in the dust [not in the spirit world] shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." (Dan. 12: 2.) Every one of Christ's true followers shall, not do inherit everlasting life," as shown in Mat. 19: 29. "In the world to come everlasting life." (Lk. 18: 30.) "And this is the will of him that sent me. That any one which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life." When, the remainder of the verse tells, by connection: "And I will raise him up at the last day." (Jno. 6: 40.)

The Scriptures, then, give us no promise of everlasting life until the last day has dawned. In no place does the Bible say that man had an immortal soul, and we have turned its leaves in vain in search for it. But what promise have we of life beyond the grave? Dark and gloomy indeed would the grave be, were it not lit up by the bright and glorious hope of an emancipation from its prison walls, through virtue of the efficacy of Christ's atonement. But did we think that Christ had come the second time, no hope of future life could be ours; for Christ would be an impostor. Let us glance at the promises held out to those who shall merit resurrection and the gift of life eternal.

The Bible promises life. What kind of life? We have no reason to expect any thing different from the present life, with pain, sorrow and mortality removed. Christ says in his reply to the Sadducees upon a question involving man's hereafter. "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more, for they are equal with the angels." (Lk. 20: 35, 36.)

Now what are angels, material or immaterial beings? In all Bible descriptions they have been like men; with this exception, that all things in opposition to immortality were removed. Wings, please notice, were given them by man's imagination. They are said to speak, in many passages, implying that they had the material organs of speech. They have hands. (2 Sam. 24: 16.) They have been seen (c. 1. Jno. 20: 12), and can this be said of an immaterial substance? They have faces. (Acts 6: 15.) They eat, as in the instance of the two that visited Lot at Sodom. They have food in heaven, as well as upon earth. (Ps. 78: 25.) "Man did eat angels' food." They are so much in the form and likeness of men, that they are called men in Gen. 19: 5, 10, 12, 16; and Paul says many have entertained angels unawares. (Heb. 13: 2.)

Or, shall we look to the great antitype, the 'first fruits' of the resurrection (1 Cor. 15: 20); to him "who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. (Phil. 3: 21.) The New Testament plainly and unequivocally teaches that our after-life will be like Christ's after his resurrection. We shall possess the same kind of a body that he ascended to heaven with. Was this a material or an immaterial body? He called for food, and ate it, after his resurrection. (Lk. 24: 43.) He was not a spirit [in the hobgoblin sense that the word is generally used now.] "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself," not another person, as immaterialists say the resurrected body is. "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." (Lk. 24: 39.) And was not the incredulous Thomas satisfied that it was "Christ himself?" (John 20: 29.) How did Christ ascend? With a natural body. (Acts 1: 9.) And he went to heaven. (Acts 1: 11.)

Does not the Bible, then, give a pretty broad basis for belief in "material" life beyond the present one?

The Next Great War.

Are war clouds again gathering in the East? The note of warning is sounded in the Edinburgh Review. "A struggle is impending between Russia and Austria; it is inevitable sooner or later; it cannot be averted." So alarming a prediction, will certainly divert attention from France and Germany, to the movements of those two Eastern Powers. Both have been actively engaged in the reorganization of their armies; and though Russia has had the advantage of time, the declarations made by the Austrian War Minister this week as to the colossal army which, under the new military system, he could place in the field, was not without significance and purpose. Austria, however, clearly meditates no aggression, not ever upon her late assailants, Germany and Italy, still less on Russia. Whence then the danger? "Russia makes no secret of her desire to encroach on her neighbor and expand her influence abroad by force of arms, to make use of a propaganda for this purpose founded on a theory of race, to array the Sclave against the Maygar and the Austrian." Russia, according to the same authority, has resolved upon a campaign wholly different from that which culminated in the Crimean disaster. The opening of the Black Sea to her fleet is a feint, or at most a strategetic operation, to divert attention from the grand fortified quadrilateral in Poland, whence, on the completion of the Russian scheme of military reorganization, Russian Generals are "to advance on Central Europe without risk to the internal peace of the country," thus bringing into practical realization the assertion that "the Eastern question can alone be solved at Vienna in a Russian sense." Are Russia's intentions here belied? Too many facts combine in support of those conclusions to remove all distrust. The Porte, for the moment, is in favor at St. Petersburg, because Turkey is not to be first assailed, and a Turco-Austrian alliance—alliances being the great dread of the Czar—might interpose an impassable barrier to the Russian advance. Germany is soothed by the presence of the Czar at Ems. England is ignored. Yet Russian Generals are unostentatiously maneuvering their 650,000 men on the western border, while Russian statesmen are exerting their utmost to avert a combination of powers against their designs, and to extinguish in the Western States, the embers of an Eastern policy which was doomed by the crowning humiliation of the Black Sea conference.

"Eternity Before Us."

In Messiah's Throne and Millennial Glory, by Josiah Litch, I read on the first page, of the first chapter:

"We exist! and eternity is before us! How shall we spend it? What shall be my destination when I pass from the present state of being?

"Shall I my everlasting days
With fiends or angels spend?"

One leaf farther on, Eld. Litch says: "Secondly: When man had incurred the penalty of the law, which was death, to consummate it (the penalty) it became necessary to drive him forth out of the garden, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and live forever.... Sin had rendered him mortal, but having incurred death, or mortality themselves, they could only give us what they possessed. Hence, it is written, By one man sin entered the world, and death by sin, so death passed upon all men."

This good book of Eld. Litch's ought not to have been marred by those shallow lines of poetry. Shocking! "With fiends" forever dwell!—B. Matthias, in Herald of Life.

Our Pulpit.

On Certainty in Religion.

This address was recently delivered to the students of Hackney college by the Rev. Edward White, of England whom they had invited to meet them, and furnished for publication by the preacher.

One very interesting department of our work in the ministry is that which is described by Luke, in the preface of his gospel, as making the disciples "know the certainty of the things in which they have been instructed." This is an aspect of it, too, which derives a special interest from the psychological condition of the populations among which we are called to labor—populations honeycombed by the spirit of doubt and uncertainty. The north of Europe is the theater of an immense reaction against the errors of the South. In the South for long ages the false pretense to Infallibility in the central seat of power was acquiesced in by nations who gave up body and soul to an authority whose audacity was only equalled by its dishonesty; nations who thus sought a refuge from doubt in the factitious certainty offered by the church and the Popedom. But when it was discovered that this authority was destitute of solid foundation in the word of God, there set in a spirit of reactionary skepticism which has grown with the ages until now at length he seems by many to be thought the wisest in England, France, and Germany, whose doubts go deepest, and whose faith takes the lightest hold on the verities of Revelation. Formerly men anathematize doubt; now they bless it with both hands earnestly, and frequently lay the right hand, like Jacob on Ephraim, upon the head which contains the fewest convictions, and proclaims the most systematic rebellion in the future against the royal authority of Judah. The temper of the South and of the North of Europe alike are foreign to the spirit of that gospel of which we are students and ministers; and I submit that one of our greatest difficulties is to deal with the disbelieving, undecided temper of the people whom we serve; let us add, with our own—for we, too, are the offspring of the same influences. The discovery of the vanity of the old confidences, the diversity of thought and persuasion now prevailing, the cautious, sifting spirit induced by modern habits of experimental study—all tend in one direction, to discourage firm belief in truth revealed on Divine authority, appropriating faith in it, vigorous assertion of it. It is thought to redound to no man's credit if he seems to be very sure of what he affirms to be religion; the almost involuntary commentary is, even if unspoken, "If he knew more, he would affirm less." It is easy to trace the results of this temper throughout the whole era of our religious life. There is a merciless ban upon anything that can anyway be called dogmatism, founded on Scripture study, that is the confident assertion of doctrines even by the best informed men. A man who has reached fixed persuasions, specially of the older sort, has to apologize for them, or to bring them forth with palliating explanations. As for the more ignorant, half of them regard the notion of its being possible to reach doctrinal certainty, and that on the surest grounds, as a mere weakness of enthusiasts, or a professional fancy for sectarians. The long array of distinguished names belonging to all parties in Christendom is looked on as decisive evidence that it is vain to arrogate the knowledge of truth to any party. "Who shall decide when doctors disagree?" Hence, too, much of the indifference of our time, which plumes itself upon a special breadth and liberality, being all the while oftentimes nothing better than ignorance and sloth, affecting the airs of learning and piety. Worst of all the same spirit penetrates to the spiritual life. If it is not thought wise to be too sure of facts, or too sure of doctrines in religion, it cannot be wise to be too sure of a personal interest in the blessings of salvation. Anything like "assurance," or absolute trust in the application of God's mercy to the individual Christian, is too often judged to be presumption of a dangerous complexion, deserving ridicule and exposure. The proper attitude of Christians is thought to be that of sinners sure of nothing as quite true, sure of nothing in the personal enjoyment of the grace of God; only humbly hoping for the best hereafter.

Well, this, which is the attitude of the highest culture of our age, is at least thoroughly unlike the religion of the New Testament.

There we have set before us what is regarded as a most solid and immovable basis of fact, and this is accompanied by explanations of those facts, which at least the writers evidently thought if the reader understood Greek could not be seriously misapprehended. They press these facts upon us as certainly true, and their explanations or doctrines as absolutely and divinely inspired; and building on these they exhort us to an assurance of faith, a certainty of hope, a strong consolation, which strangles skepticism, and builds upon the Rock of Ages. Christianity comes before us not as a set of floating rumors which may wear themselves out in course of succeeding time, not as a series of guesses and tentative theories on things divine, which may be dispelled or set aside by future speculation, but as truth—truth unchanging in its historical bases, unimprovable in its revelations, infallible in its proofs—truth so plain in its outlines, and so luminous in its evidence that opposition, contradiction, denial, are treated as the certain marks of hostility to God. A man who denies the doctrine of salvation by Christ, and teaches that it is by the "works of the law," is smitten with the thunderbolt of the greater anathema; and the man who denies the physical reality of the resurrection or resolves it into a mere moral change which has "passed already" is "delivered over to Satan that he may learn not to blaspheme."

These things are delivered to us in a terminology which may be said to exhaust the language of certainty. There are no books in the world in which words expressing absolute assurance of truth are so freely employed as those of the New Testament. I have only to remind you of the perpetually recurring epignosis, in the apostolic epistles, describing that "thorough knowledge" which is the crown of the spiritual man—of that "riches of full assurance of understanding" which Paul attributes to the faith of the first believers—of the asphaleia, or certainty on which that faith rested—of that parrhesia, confidence, boldness, assurance which describes the posture towards God of a soul so believing in these revealed certainties of grace and truth. Everywhere the New Testament breathes the calm and solemn tone of certainty proper to a revelation from him which is the "faithful and true Witness," the "Amen."

Well, our work is to teach this revelation of certainties in an age of doubts—of doubters whose very faculty of believing is weakened by the skeptical habit, which is a reaction against a false "infallibility." It is the most difficult of all enterprises. But, though the teachers of the gospel are necessarily under the influence which sway all other educated men, there is no reason to shrink from it, if we will go about our work in the spirit of Christ, and govern ourselves only by the conditions of the revelation. There are two or three maxims which appear to be of sovereign value in this warfare. Such as (I.)—first, that we thoroughly vindicate for ourselves, in God's strength, a psychological position, distinct, for example, from the local and transitory onesidedness of both the North and the South of Europe. On the one hand, we must not allow ourselves to go forth as the organs or agents of a historical church, just to repeat its decrees, or to press upon men its fallacious assurances based on "strong delusion." But neither must we profess any sympathy with the reactionary spirit of general uncertainty around us here. The popular skepticism which infects all ranks, from the highest to the lowest, is as truly a spiritual disease as the Popish credulity. We have truth to teach—truth in fact and in dogma—and both given to us by God, with sufficient evidence. It is a sin and a shame for us to approach mankind pretending that we have only guesses to offer for their salvation. No man who shrinks from this position has any call to the ministry of Christ. He may make a very good lecturer on doubtful topics, but a teacher of revealed truth he cannot be. The whole spiritual effect of the ministry of Christ depends on having some definite truth to tell. Characters not built up on definite beliefs are devoid of a backbone, destitute of strength both for suffering and action. The ecclesiastical sea is full of such molluscs, such floating jelly fish, such helpless invertebrates.

II. Next we must be prepared to assert these fixed beliefs against numbers of accomplished men who are undermining or denying them. Compromise with the opposite to truth is fatal. Fighting, therefore, is inevitable; it may be, sometimes, with old friends: the most painful kind of fighting. The notion is far too common that it is possible to live on good terms with almost anybody in religion; and still more, that any deviation from the rule of smiling, and shaking hands, and carousing with, the enemies of the truth is of the nature of bigotry and bad feeling. This, again, is wholly unlike the conduct of Christ and his apostles. They were soldiers of God; they recognized his proper foes in the opponents of truth, whom they attacked with determination, come what might in consequence to themselves. Fighting for truth, the good fight of faith, is the noblest warfare in the world. It brings no titles, stars, orders or pensions—no fame or glory here; it brings generally nothing but disgrace and ill-repute among the million. But it will bring more than man's praise hereafter, for truth is truth, and may be known; and truth alone can bring men to God or God to men.

III. Next we must limit our hope of certainties by the canon of Scripture, and by our knowledge of apostolic Greek. Protestants have their Mishna and Talmud in addition to the Bible, as well as Jews and Roman Catholics, and one of the chief hindrances to the establishment of certainty in men's minds is the power of tradition and custom which leads us to contend for God's truth and man's additions to it, and inferences from it, and scholastic statements of it, all at once. Most rabbinical traditions, including those in New Testament Lexicons, stand upon one leg only, and are easily overthrown. And since these fall easily, the popular opinion springs up that what is taught along with them is of similarly doubtful quality. If we will be contented with the Christian religion as taught in the New Testament, and will adhere to that only, there will not be nearly so much difficulty as is supposed, either in attaining or communicating a solid certainty.

IV. We must remember that certainty, properly speaking, is a subjective thing, produced in the mind by objective truth, and therefore exists in different degrees in different minds, according to their knowledge and capacity. Hence we must limit our expectations of success in producing certainty to those who possess the spiritual faculty necessary for discerning the truth and the evidence which we bring. It is far too common to speak as if the truth of Christianity could be demonstrated to men of all intellectual conditions, as if men could be argued into Paradise. "The animal man discerneth not the things of the Spirit of God." Mere intellect, conversant only with physical nature, or with itself, is destitute of the spiritual perception to which alone God can reveal spiritual certainties. God is Love. Love alone can comprehend God. God is Light. Light, purity, truth in character alone can comprehend it. Love is the eye upon the summit of the soul, looking up towards the Infinite. It is vain to expect to persuade brutish or brazen men of any intellectual rank of the spiritual refinements of the Gospel. But to the spiritual a revelation of God is possible. "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven." "To you it is given," but "to the externs in parables." There is no common measure between the thought of the spiritual and of the animal man in religious concerns. The seeing man does not subject his judgments of form and color to the blind. So the spiritual man is judged of no other man. He has "the mind of Christ."

V. This brings us to the main point. How and by what means does God convey doctrinal and spiritual certainty to the souls whom his Spirit has touched? I answer not by a direct subjective communication of truth, not by the voice of the church, not by individual cogitation or discovery, but by a spiritual indwelling in souls, which can then see what the apostles have written—"Then opened he their understanding." Nearly one third of the writings of Paul are taken up with direct and indirect assertions of his divine commission to teach with authority the true explanations of the facts of our Lord's life, death and resurrection, and to legislate for his churches. Here is no silence as to a direct inspiration, as in the historical books; no simple statement, as in Luke, that he had learned by inquiry of others; no declaration that he had done his best by reflection to build up a theory on the facts of the gospel; but he claims, in words whose strength cannot be exceeded, to teach the doctrine of justification, sanctification, redemption; the "truth" concerning Christ's person as God and man, concerning his work as Redeemer from death by his own death and resurrection; the truth concerning resurrection and immortality; the truth respecting the eternal destruction of the wicked, by inspiration of God. There is no vacillation, no variation in his language during the whole of his apostleship. He declares that God speaks in him and through him, that all other pretended explanations of the facts of Christ's life and death and resurrection are worthless, and of no account. He declares that he speaks and writes the veritable revelations of the eternal—revelations to which every human being is summoned to submit on peril of anathema. It is useless to palter with this fact. No man no prophet in the Bible ever made more overpowering and awful claims than Paul to be the "teacher of the nations in faith and truth." This is the claim with which the nineteenth century must be compelled to make a settlement, on which every teacher of Christianity ought to make up his mind as true or false. If it is false the rest of Christianity may safely be neglected. It cannot possibly stand if Paul's writings are not of authority. But, if true, then many ideas in high favor, or partially tolerated around us, are false, and not only false, but full of peril to the souls of men. I am persuaded that the real battle of doctrinal Christianity will circulate around the claims of [illegible] that the attempt of many to dismiss these claims without thoroughly considering them to a conclusion will be of no avail. The enemy is directing his attention to them as the chief support of the gospel. If the doctrines which Paul teaches, as founded on the facts of the gospel, are got rid of, the facts of Christianity will not long be of much account in the world. There is nothing in the mere facts of Christ's life or death fitted to govern the thought of the world apart from the doctrinal truth respecting them set forth by his apostles, and prominently by Paul. When we misinterpret them the fault must be in our own ignorance, our preconceptions, or our sinful perversions.

I am reminded in this place of a very humble and holy man, whose devotion to this study was the characteristic of his life—I refer to the Rev. George Collinson. One scarcely ever listened to a man who more powerfully enabled you to understand the meaning of being "built upon the foundation of the apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." He was not one of those ingenious professional jugglers with Greek, who seem to be always commenting on Scripture for the purpose of explaining it away, but he allowed the words employed to produce their natural impression upon his mind, and so it was that he was "taught of God." Moreover, he lovingly and quietly preached these things as if they were the certainties he felt them to be. There was no haze around the cross; Jesus Christ was "evidently set forth," and the men who warred against these truths simply ranked with Hymenæus and Philetus, who "concerning the truth have erred." This, of course, was dogmatism; but let us not fear being denounced as dogmatists of that order, nor shrink from a similar firmness of affirmation. It is certainly consistent with love; for it springs from it. Wisdom after all consists in the acknowledgement of the truth, and Christ's Apostles have not written their main gospel in unintelligible terms. Men of a corrupt mind, lettered blasphemers may say it is not there; but the old gospel is there, clear as the sun in the heavens, that God hath made him who knew no sin to be sin for us, and it is the only "power unto salvation." The chief evidence of Christianity is Christianity,—not its miracles, not its prophecies, but its revelation of wonderous love from God to sinners. The Bible is one blaze of light for the anointed eye. It is not, however, the animal or natural mind which discerns this certainty of blessedness for obedient souls. The Grammar of Assent here must be taught by God's own Spirit through the spiritual faculty. "He that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God"—knows for certain God himself, not merely propositions concerning him. "If any man shall wish to do his will he shall know of the doctrine." The purpose of practical obedience and self-sacrifice is the eye to which he reveals himself clearly. All others—notably men who think in the atmosphere of profanity—grope like the blind at noonday. Intellectual certainty in religion depends chiefly on the spiritual condition of the soul. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." God's priests alone have access to the holiest. Such persons pass from opinion into knowledge, from distant vision into communion. Their eye, like a prism, becomes a medium for the passage of a divine beam—which unfolds its glories within the soul. Their portion is "full assurance of faith," "access with confidence," "boldness to enter," a persuasion which conquers evil "principalities and powers, and life and death" itself—a "knowledge" of him who "holds the keys of hades and of death," a "certainty" which is as unaffected by the changing currents of opinion around as the solid continent is unshaken by the winds and waves of the sea.

We can spread around us this spirit of full assurance, and of the joy unspeakable which attends it, only by possessing some of it ourselves. If we are sure of nothing, we cannot teach others to believe, and if the churches are feeble in conviction, and feeble in hope and joy, their work will be feeble, formal, and factitious. Lord! to whom shall we go for this certainty, in an age when the very earth seems reeling under our feet—when the old faiths are passing away, and men's hearts are failing them for fear of a future, in which humanity, grown strong, shall become a terror to itself, and God provoked by ages of blasphemy will seem to have vanished from the world? To thee, the living word! To thee first of all in that direct communion of the Holy Spirit which is granted to earnest prayer; to thee, next, in that written testimony of thy holy apostles which perpetuates for all ages the revelations of Pentecost.

Jonesboro, Ill., Sep. 9 and 10, as Br. Childs may arrange.

Freedmen's Conference, Morgan's Point on the Mississippi River, Ark., Sep. 13-17.

After this meeting I visit Memphis, and then go to Batesville, Ark., and the White River region, to labor for a time with Br. S. Rosebraugh.

A wide door is open in the White River region among the white people. They are poor and have small means; yet the poor must have the gospel. This people lost all by the war, and have not yet recovered. But are making the best of the situation. And best of all, they want the truth on the "blessed hope." The door was opened here providentially by Dr. Fletcher, and the word of the Lord has to some extent had a free course. They have been pleading for help for two years. I shall now visit them.

After this I shall visit the churches in Michigan, as I have promised Br. Wright and others. J. V. H.

A SCRIPTURAL COMMENTARY ON THE SOUL

Gen. 36 : 6 : 'And Esau took his wives, and his sons, and his daughters, and all the persons (souls) of his house....and went into the country from the face of his brother Jacob.'

These are substantial souls—quite material. LIVING souls, also.

Gen. 37 : 21 'And Reuben heard it, and he delivered him [Joseph] out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him.' (the soul.)

Reuben's proposition was, literally—Let us 'not smite him, the SOUL.' Our immaterialist friends do not love to dwell here as they do upon the birth of Ben-oni. Souls that can be smitten, KILLED, are an offense to them. They sometimes ask us, if 'MORTAL SOULS are mentioned in the Scriptures?' Judging from our examination thus far, we should say they were

Gen. 42 : 21 'And they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us.'

Soul is here used in the third sense, we might construe it in the fourth, and read—'we saw his anguish.'

In Gen. 44 : 30, Judah pleads thus with Joseph: 'Now therefore when I come to thy servant my father, and the lad be not with us; seeing that his life (soul) is bound up in the lad's life (soul); it shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that HE WILL DIE, and thy servants shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave (sheol).'

The aged father's love for his darling is such, that his life (soul) depends on his son's life (soul) and fortunes. For his brothers to go home and relate that Benjamin was a slave in Egypt, would kill the gray haired sire.

We have read the story of living souls that were created or 'made.' We now find a record of souls 'born,' in Gen. 46 : 15-26. Note well the terms used: 'These be the sons of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob in Padan-aram, with his daughter Dinah: all the SOULS of his sons and his daughters were thirty and three....The sons of Zilpah, whom Laban gave to Leah his daughter: she bare unto Jacob even sixteen SOULS. The sons of Rachel, which were born to Jacob; all the SOULS were fourteen. And she bare these unto Jacob: all the SOULS were seven. All the SOULS that came with Jacob into Egypt, which CAME OUT OF HIS LOINS, besides Jacob's son's wives,' all the SOULS were three score and six. And the sons of Joseph which were borne him in Egypt, were two SOULS: all the SOULS of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were three score and ten.

Here we clearly prove that souls are persons, and that they are born, not created. In other words, "Traduction" (they 'came out of Jacob's loins.') is the true theory of the origin of souls; and Creationism—the notion that God makes an immaterial man for every human body born (or before it is born), is exploded.

In Gen. 49 : 6, their father says of Simeon and Levi:

'O, my soul, come not thou into their secret;
Unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united.'

This is a parallelism, and soul may be understood directly of the mind, or we may read, 'Let ME not come,' etc.

Ex. 1 : 5 'And all the SOULS that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy SOULS.'

Ex. 4 : 19 'And the LORD said unto Moses in Midian, Go, return into Egypt: for all the men are dead which sought thy life (soul)'—i. e., they sought to kill him.

Moses seems never to have been enamored with the Egyptian theology. His life was dear to him, and he esteemed it, as did the Lord also, a punishment, that he must die instead of passing over into Canaan with the host of Israel. See Deut. 3 : 26, 27, where Moses affirms 'The Lord was wroth with me for your sakes.' And though he begged to go over and see 'the good land,' he was denied. The Psalmist says of the event, that 'it WENT ILL with Moses for their sakes.' How different is such language from that of the theology which declares that death is 'a call from labor to reward,' and affirms of the deceased:

We see thee still!
Thou art not in the grave confined;
Death cannot claim th' immortal mind;
Let earth close o'er its sacred trust,
But goodness dies not in the dust.
Thou to a fairer land art gone;
There let us hope, our journey done,
To see thee still.

But the inspired record says that Moses DIED, and the Lord buried HIM, in the land of Moab. His reward is yet in the future. See Heb. 11 : 26, 39, 40.

Ex. 12 : 4, 'Take it according to the number of the souls: every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.'

This is in the directions concerning the Paschal lamb. 'Souls' and 'every man,' are used interchangeably.

In v. 15, we read of a mortal soul again: 'For whosoever eateth leavened bread, from the first day until the seventh day, that SOUL shall be cut off from Israel.' V. 16 introduces a soul that eats—quite material: 'No manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man (soul) must eat.' And v. 19 again declares that 'Whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even THAT SOUL shall be CUT OFF from the congregation of Israel.'

Ex. 15 : 9 'The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil: my lust (soul) shall be satisfied upon them.' That is, the desire of my mind shall be satisfied.

Ex. 16 : 16 'This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded [concerning the manna]: Gather an omer for every man according to the number of your persons (souls.)

Ex. 21 : 23 'And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life'—(soul for soul.) V. 30, 'He shall give for the ransom of his life (soul) whatsoever is laid upon him.'

Ex. 23 : 9 'Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the heart (soul) of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt;' i. e., ye know by experience the feelings of a stranger—his mind.

Ex. 30 : 12, 'Then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul (i. e., his life, or himself,) unto the LORD, when thou numberest them.

Vv. 15, 16, give directions concerning the half shekel tribute, or 'atonement money,' and twice repeats 'to make an atonement for your souls,' i. e., for yourselves, that ye may live.

Ex. 31 : 14 'Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore: for it is holy unto you. Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that SOUL shall be cut off from among his people.' Here, again, is a soul that may be put to death.

Lev. 2 : 1. When any (soul) will offer a meat-offering.' Literally—and a soul, when he will offer. Ch. 4 : 2. 'If a soul shall sin through ignorance;' v. 27. 'If any one (any soul) of the common people sin; v. 17: 'If a soul commit a trespass; v. 2. 'If a soul touch any unclean thing.' [What becomes of the theological notion, that souls cannot come in contact with matter.] v. 4. 'Or if a soul swear;' v. 15. ch. 5 : 1. 'And if a soul sin;' 'And if a soul sin.' Ch. 6 : 2. 'If a soul sin.' Ch. 7 : 18. 'The soul that eateth;' v. 20. 'The soul that eateth the flesh of the sacrifice....that soul shall be cut off;' v. 21. 'The soul that shall touch any unclean thing,' etc., 'that soul shall be cut off from his people;' v. 25. 'The soul that eateth it shall be cut off;' v. 27. 'Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.'

Lev. 11 : 10. 'Any living thing (living soul) that is in the waters.' [Some souls dwell in the waters, then.] v. 43. 'Ye shall not make yourselves (your souls) abominable [by eating unclean reptiles.] v. 44. 'Neither shall ye defile yourselves (your souls) with creeping things.' v. 46. 'This is the law of every living creature (soul) that moveth in the waters, and of every creature, (soul,) that creepeth on the earth.'

Lev. 16 : 29, 31. 'Ye shall afflict your souls,' i. e. yourselves, in the manner prescribed, by self-denial, etc.

Lev. 17 : 10-15. And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that SOUL that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life (soul) of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your SOULS: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the SOUL. Therefore I said unto the children of Israel. No SOUL of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood. And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust. For it is the life (soul) of all flesh, the blood of it is for the life (soul) thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh; for the life (soul) of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off. And every soul that eateth that which died of itself, etc.

We give this remarkable passage in full. We have NEPHESH here used in its second and fourth senses. And it is expressly declared that the soul or life of all living souls or creatures is in the blood. It is clear, then, that the vital principle is not an immaterial entity. In the case of Rachel, already considered, can we for one moment suppose that a rational entity, previously resident in her blood, took its flight from her body at death? But all is reasonable when we look upon the soul as the principle of life, the animating force. What it is, we know not: but we know that it is not what some say it is, and we know that it is the same in all living creatures or souls.

We have read above that 'the life of all flesh—beast and fowl as well as man—is in the blood.' By this we know what the wise man meant when he said, 'As the one dieth, so dieth the other.' (Eccl. 3 : 19.) But as we write, a religious tract lies before us, published by a great Christian society, in which we find this language:

"Reader: You are an immortal being....you can never cease to exist. You MUST live forever. It is of no avail that you are so debased that you may wish to be at death like the beasts that perish. YOU CAN NOT! You have a certain time appointed you to live here, and THEN....have it decided whether you are to spend eternity in....heaven.... or with the worm that dieth not, and in the fire that never shall be quenched."

Thus 'the Amer[illegible]an Reform Tract and Book Society' asserts th[illegible] CAN NOT perish like the beasts. 'Never[illegible], man being in honor, abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.' (Ps. 49 : 12.)

Reader, which will you believe: God's inspired word, or those who flatly contradict it?

LOST—by the sleepers at church last Sunday—the Sermon. How much good it might have done you will never be known, at least in this life. "Awake! thou that sleepest!"

THE Pope hates all newspapers. The Rock suggests that it is because most of them are so willing to tell the plain truth about him, and his fallen estate.

A WRITER publishes a sermon on the death of "a poor old man," in which he says he 'imagines' said poor man to be 'in heaven.' Never was a word more appropriately used. The idea that men dying go to heaven is pure imagination. Revelation says they await the resurrection.

THE Religio-etc., Spiritist organ, says the deceiving mediums can't help themselves. The spirits make them practice fraud to create an excitement and draw attention to the subject. Moral: Spiritists should not aid in exposing the lying mediums, because it only proves that the spirits themselves are liars—which is just what we have always believed.

WE look upon it as very dirty work when a Pædo-Baptist panders to prejudice by associating Baptists as a people with the fanaticism of Munger and others called Anabaptists. Schmucker, for instance, does this; and it is contemptible. But what is it when Baptists do precisely the same thing with Adventism? Any better? Not a whit. Let Christians have done with such tactics—fit only for the low morals of politics.

AN English publisher inquires, "What calling is there more profitable to souls than that of a hard-working publisher of good books?" The New York Mail aptly replies, "Nothing, we might say, save that of the hard-working editor of a good journal." He often addresses an audience of a hundred thousand—larger than any vocal preacher could possibly reach.

THERE are 'Go-works,' and 'Co-workers.' The former are of two kinds; those who say to others, 'Go!' and do nothing themselves; and those who work zealously but not wisely, and pull down what 'co workers' have built up. The latter are invaluable. There is no end to their usefulness. What one plants, another waters. The cause flourishes where they spend their time and strength.

But we must not forget honorable mention of a class who, in one sense, may be called both 'Go-works,' and 'Co-workers.' They cannot preach, but say to the preacher, 'Go!' and furnish him the means to do so. They cannot print a paper, or write for it; but they send it, pre-paid, to any of whom they believe it will do them good. They cannot write tracts, but they help pay for the paper on which to print them, and to send them freely wherever they are needed—which is everywhere. Reader, which class are you in?

'HAST thou faith?' It is said of the late eminent preacher, T. H. Skinner:

His habit of looking at the hopeful side of every event was wonderful, in a person who had such deep convictions of the evil of sin. This hopefulness, I think, was not so much the reflection of a sanguine temperament as a Christian grace, arising from implicit trust in God. Doubt or despondency seemed to annoy him, as if they impeached the goodness of God.

—This should be a more common experience. God designed the religion he has revealed to be of use to those who received it. Of what use is a nominal faith, without lifting power to keep our heads above the surges of affliction? It is the Christian's privilege to ride upon the waves, enjoy peace in the midst of trial, and hope when everything seems unsettling. Cultivate 'implicit trust in God,' one and all.

SECULAR journals in discoursing of religious matters often make themselves appear ridiculous; but they also frequently tell us wholesome truths. The New York Tribune, talking of the preachers the world needs, says, truly:

In short, the world—all the world—needs the word of God. There are days in every man's life when, carrying the hod, or in bank or office, he longs in his secret soul for some strong, new birth to make straight the things that perplex him—some new basis of power and comfort. The man who can speak this word to him must, in some measure at least, have lived his life and learned his language.

—To be most useful, we must be acquainted with men, and enter into their feelings, know their hearts, as well as know chapter and verse where we may find the basis of doctrine. Many a man has found the word of God a scourge to drive him away, rather than leading strings to guide into salvation, simply because of the manner of its presentation. We need much wisdom in the work of winning souls.

AN APOLOGY.

We are sometimes asked why we say so much upon life and death, upon materialism, upon future punishment.

We have tried to say less; but the subject is pressed upon us. It is a live issue. Men every where are inquiring, and what is told to some to-day has to be told over again to others to-morrow; and while some have heard and became convinced and settled in their minds, others are hungering for, and devouring everything they can lay hold of upon the subject. Correspondents urge us to continue to strike, and strike harder against the popular errors opposed to us—and we must speak.

Our mission relates to these great advent truths—we mean the advent and truths connected with it; what the advent is, what it is for, what is to be accomplished in connection with it; besides the signs relating to its approach, and the evidences that it is near. If these are to be kept subordinate to something else, then let us sink them, and unite with already existing churches, and have one less denomination of Christians. But on the other hand, if these things be neglected truths of God's word, then let us cry aloud, and spare not, but agitate, AGITATE, AGITATE, perseveringly press them upon the attention of the world, and God will care for the consequences, and maintain our cause.

On the other hand, if we dodge responsibility; make entangling alliances—treaties of peace that engage us to hold our tongues where we should speak; if we begin to "water the gospel," instead of watering with it; in short, if we turn aside from our work to pander to more popular elements and doctrines; then God will raise up another people to take our place, for his truth must and will be told in these last days. Yes, and it shall be told. We feel it. Adventists are not to prove unfaithful to their mission; but seeking a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit, and making a new consecration to the service of God, they will "move forward" in the work assigned them, to final victory. Let there be no weakness or flagging. The Lord is at hand!

"AN OLD HERESY REVIVED."

We saw this heading in the New York Observer, and wondered what it could be—something fresh certainly. What is it? Let the Observer speak:

"C. L. Ives, of New Haven, Conn., has introduced to American readers an essay, by Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork, the object of which is to prove that the souls of the wicked are not immortal: that after death they will be judged, sentenced to the realm of hell, where they will suffer due reward for their deeds, and then they will be annihilated."

The Observer appears to be willingly ignorant of the fact that about 22,000 copies of journals teaching this same 'heresy,' are published weekly in this country. And, also, that nearly a thousand copies of Mr. Constable's work have been already put in circulation by us, besides reprints of numerous other able articles from his pen upon the same topic. And these are but a drop in the bucket compared with the mass of tracts and books upon the same subject, circulated during thirty years past, resulting in a multiplication of converts to the theory: and now one publication out of the mass is republished, and the Observer thinks 'an old heresy' is 'reviving.'

But we thank Mr. Ives. We have hoped that Constable's masterly work might be published by some house that could get it before a class of readers we cannot readily reach. And our desire is gratified. But says the Observer:

"This heresy is nearly as old as time itself:"

True enough—only in those days it was not called 'heresy.'

"It has always had teachers, and probably more teachers than believers."

It was first taught by him who said, "Thou shalt surely die." The Observer's nescience alone, can shield it from the charge of blasphemy. The opposite doctrine was taught by him who said, "Ye shall not surely die!" That he taught without believing is generally admitted. The Scriptures, at least, brand him a liar.

"The necessary immortality of the soul is acknowledged by sound philosophy outside of the Bible:"

Is it, though? Really. We were so far from being aware of the fact, that we must doubt, until something like proof is offered to back up the declaration.

"And in the Bible the doctrine [the necessary immortality of the soul] is so clearly taught that one stands amazed when a New England sane man comes out with a serious argument to prove that good men will live forever, and bad men will not."

Dr. Olshausen, the learned German expositor, is esteemed "sane," and is an immaterialist; but he candidly declares that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the name, are alike unknown to the entire Bible. Was Whately crazy, and Luther? Are P[illegible] Rothe and Dr. True insane. [illegible]t we forbear. The reckless as[illegible]ion of the Observer is of a piece [illegible] its characteristic dogmatism. It has yet to learn that saying a thing does not make it true.

"The mind of Mr. Ives and of his essayist, Dr. Constable, is staggered with the idea of everlasting punishment: eternal evil."

This passage shows that the Observer has not read Mr. Constable. He is a decided believer in eternal punishment—but not in eternal evil. He shows that the former does not necessarily involve the latter.

"But there is no greater difficulty in admitting that as a certainty in the future, than that evil is a certain present existence."

If this sentence was written candidly, after due consideration, we must say we do not envy the man who wrote it either his head or his heart. He should bethink himself of his condition.

"Yet good men, and perhaps great men, have been bothered to reconcile everlasting evil with Infinite power and love, forgetting that any evil at all in a world governed by Infinite power and love is a problem just as hard to be solved as the other.

"Bothered!" What a word to use in this connection. "Bothered!" That writer manifestly believes not only in election, but in the election of all he loves.

"Bothered!" Has a son, a father, a daughter, a friend of his, died, passed to hell, to dwell with fiends forever? If so, he might be "bothered" to some extent, if his heart has not been seared over with scholastic, dogmatic theology.

"Bothered!" What a word to express the anguish that noble souls and intellects have endured in contemplation of this subject. Albert Barnes, Foster, Butler, Charles and Edward Beecher, Pascal, Ellicott were "bothered." Such trifling with so momentous a theme should

"Should stir a fever in the blood of age."

"A child is born, and suffers pain intensely for a year, and then dies; yet there is a God, infinite in power and love. When Mr. Ives will tell us why the child was made and let to suffer so, we will tell him why Judas shall suffer forever."

What relation has the illustration to the topic in hand? Let the Observer

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

Camp-meeting, Amboy, Ill., Aug. 19-24.

Camp-meeting, Cascade, Iowa, Aug. 26 to Sep. 3.

Jonesboro, Ill., Sep. 9 and 10, as Br. Childs may arrange.

Freedmen's Conference, Morgan's Point on the Mississippi River, Ark., Sep. 13-17.

After this meeting I visit Memphis, and then go to Batesville, Ark., and the White River region, to labor for a time with Br. S. Rosebraugh.

A wide door is open in the White River region among the white people. They are poor and have small means; yet the poor must have the gospel. This people lost all by the war, and have not yet recovered. But are making the best of the situation. And best of all, they want the truth on the "blessed hope." The door was opened here providentially by Dr. Fletcher, and the word of the Lord has to some extent had a free course. They have been pleading for help for two years. I shall now visit them.

After this I shall visit the churches in Michigan, as I have promised Br. Wright and others. J. V. H.

Gen. 36 : 6 : 'And Esau took his wives, and his sons, and his daughters, and all the persons (souls) of his house....and went into the country from the face of his brother Jacob.'

These are substantial souls—quite material. LIVING souls, also.

Gen. 37 : 21 'And Reuben heard it, and he delivered him [Joseph] out of their hands; and said, Let us not kill him.' (the soul.)

Reuben's proposition was, literally—Let us 'not smite him, the SOUL.' Our immaterialist friends do not love to dwell here as they do upon the birth of Ben-oni. Souls that can be smitten, KILLED, are an offense to them. They sometimes ask us, if 'MORTAL SOULS are mentioned in the Scriptures?' Judging from our examination thus far, we should say they were

Gen. 42 : 21 'And they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us.'

Soul is here used in the third sense, we might construe it in the fourth, and read—'we saw his anguish.'

In Gen. 44 : 30, Judah pleads thus with Joseph: 'Now therefore when I come to thy servant my father, and the lad be not with us; seeing that his life (soul) is bound up in the lad's life (soul); it shall come to pass, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that HE will DIE: and thy servants shall bring down the gray hairs of thy servant our father with sorrow to the grave (sheol).'

The aged father's love for his darling is such, that his life (soul) depends on his son's life (soul) and fortunes. For his brothers to go home and relate that Benjamin was a slave in Egypt, would kill the gray haired sire.

We have read the story of living souls that were created or 'made.' We now find a record of souls 'born,' in Gen. 46 : 15-26. Note well the terms used: 'These be the sons of Leah, which she bare unto Jacob in Padan-aram, with his daughter Dinah: all the SOULS of his sons and his daughters were thirty and three....The sons of Zilpah, whom Laban gave to Leah his daughter: she bare unto Jacob even sixteen SOULS. The sons of Rachel, which were born to Jacob; all the SOULS were fourteen. And she bare these unto Jacob: all the SOULS were seven. All the SOULS that came with Jacob into Egypt, which CAME OUT OF HIS LOINS, besides Jacob's son's wives,' all the SOULS were three score and six. And the sons of Joseph which were borne him in Egypt, were two SOULS: all the SOULS of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were three score and ten.

Here we clearly prove that souls are persons, and that they are born, not created. In other words, "Traduction" (they 'came out of Jacob's loins.') is the true theory of the origin of souls; and Creationism—the notion that God makes an immaterial man for every human body born (or before it is born), is exploded.

In Gen. 49 : 6, their father says of Simeon and Levi:

'O, my soul, come not thou into their secret;
Unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united.'

This is a parallelism, and soul may be understood directly of the mind, or we may read, 'Let ME not come,' etc.

Ex. 1 : 5 'And all the SOULS that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy SOULS.'

Ex. 4 : 19 'And the LORD said unto Moses in Midian, Go, return into Egypt: for all the men are dead which sought thy life (soul)'—i. e., they sought to kill him.

Moses seems never to have been enamored with the Egyptian theology. His life was dear to him, and he esteemed it, as did the Lord also, a punishment, that he must die instead of passing over into Canaan with the host of Israel. See Deut. 3 : 23, 27, where Moses affirms 'The Lord was wroth with me for your sakes.' And though he begged to go over and see 'the good land,' he was denied. The Psalmist says of the event, that 'it WENT ILL with Moses for their sakes.' How different is such language from that of the theology which declares that death is 'a call from labor to reward,' and affirms of the deceased:

We see thee still!
Thou art not in the grave confined;
Death cannot claim th' immortal mind;
Let earth close o'er its sacred trust,
But goodness dies not in the dust;
Thou to a fairer land art gone;
There let us hope, our journey done,
To see thee still.

But the inspired record says that Moses DIED, and the Lord buried HIM, in the land of Moab. His reward is yet in the future. See Heb. 11 : 26, 39, 40.

Ex. 12 : 4, 'Take it according to the number of the souls: every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb.'

This is in the directions concerning the Paschal lamb. 'Souls' and 'every man,' are used interchangeably.

In v. 15, we read of a mortal soul again: 'For whosoever eateth leavened bread, from the first day until the seventh day, that SOUL shall be cut off from Israel.' V. 16 introduces a soul that eats—quite material: 'No manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man (soul) must eat.' And v. 19 again declares that 'Whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even THAT SOUL shall be CUT OFF from the congregation of Israel.'

Ex. 15 : 9 'The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil: my lust (soul) shall be satisfied upon them.' That is, the desire of my mind shall be satisfied.

Ex. 6 : 16 'This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded [concerning the manna]: Gather an omer for every man according to the number of your persons (souls.)

Ex. 21 : 23 'And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life'—(soul for soul.) V. 30, 'He shall give for the ransom of his life (soul) whatsoever is laid upon him.'

Ex. 23 : 9 'Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger: for ye know the heart (soul) of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt;' i. e., ye know by experience the feelings of a stranger—his mind.

Ex. 30 : 12, 'Then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul, (i. e., his life, or himself,) unto the LORD, when thou numberest them.

Vr. 15, 16, give directions concerning the half shekel tribute, or 'atonement money,' and twice repeats 'to make an atonement for your souls,' i. e., for yourselves, that ye may live.

Ex. 31 : 14 'Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore: for it is holy unto you. Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that SOUL shall be cut off from among his people.' Here, again, is a soul that may be put to death.

Lev. 2 : 1. When any (soul) will offer a meat-offering.' Literally—and a soul, when he will offer.' Ch. 4 : 2. 'If a soul shall sin through ignorance;' v. 27. 'If any one (any soul) of the common people sin; v. 17: 'If a soul commit a trespass; v. 2. 'If a soul touch any unclean thing.' [What becomes of the theological notion, that souls cannot come in contact with matter.] v. 4. 'Or if a soul swear;' v. 15. ch. 5 : 1. 'And if a soul sin;' 'And if a soul sin.' Ch. 6 : 2. 'If a soul sin.' Ch. 7 : 18. 'The soul that eateth;' v. 20. 'The soul that eateth the flesh of the sacrifice....that soul shall be cut off;' v. 21. 'The soul that shall touch any unclean thing,' etc., 'that soul shall be cut off from his people;' v. 25. 'The soul that eateth it shall be cut off;' v. 27. 'Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.'

Lev. 11 : 10. 'Any living thing (living soul) that is in the waters.' [Some souls dwell in the waters, then] v. 43. 'Ye shall not make yourselves (your souls) abominable [by eating unclean reptiles.] v. 44. 'Neither shall ye defile yourselves (your souls) with creeping things.' v. 46. 'This is the law of every living creature (soul) that moveth in the waters, and of every creature, (soul,) that creepeth on the earth.'

Lev. 16 : 29, 31. 'Ye shall afflict your souls,' i. e. yourselves, in the manner prescribed, by self-denial, etc.

Lev. 17 : 10-15. And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that SOUL that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life (soul) of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your SOULS: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the SOUL. Therefore I said unto the children of Israel. No SOUL of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood. And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust. For it is the life (soul) of all flesh, the blood of it is for the life (soul) thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh; for the life (soul) of all flesh is the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off. And every soul that eateth that which died of itself, etc.

We give this remarkable passage in full. We have NEPHESH here used in its second and fourth senses. Reader, which will you believe: God's inspired word, or those who flatly contradict it?

LOST—by the sleepers at church last Sunday—the Sermon. How much good it might have done you will never be known, at least in this life. "Awake! thou that sleepest!"

THE Pope hates all newspapers. The Rock suggests that it is because most of them are so willing to tell the plain truth about him, and his fallen estate.

A WRITER publishes a sermon on the death of "a poor old man," in which he says he 'imagines' said poor man to be 'in heaven.' Never was a word more appropriately used. The idea that men dying go to heaven is pure imagination. Revelation says they await the resurrection.

THE Religio-etc., Spiritist organ, says the deceiving mediums can't help themselves. The spirits make them practice fraud to create an excitement and draw attention to the subject. Moral: Spiritists should not aid in exposing the lying mediums, because it only proves that the spirits themselves are liars—which is just what we have always believed.

WE look upon it as very dirty work when a Pædo-Baptist panders to prejudice by associating Baptists as a people with the fanaticism of Munger and others called Anabaptists. Schmucker, for instance, does this; and it is contemptible. But what is it when Baptists do precisely the same thing with Adventism? Any better? Not a whit. Let Christians have done with such tactics—fit only for the low morals of politics.

AN English publisher inquires, "What calling is there more profitable to souls than that of a hard-working publisher of good books?" The New York Mail aptly replies, "Nothing, we might say, save that of the hard-working editor of a good journal." He often addresses an audience of a hundred thousand—larger than any vocal preacher could possibly reach.

THERE are 'Go-works,' and 'Co-workers.' The former are of two kinds; those who say to others, 'Go!' and do nothing themselves; and those who work zealously but not wisely, and pull down what 'co workers' have built up. The latter are invaluable. There is no end to their usefulness. What one plants, another waters. The cause flourishes where they spend their time and strength.

But we must not forget honorable mention of a class who, in one sense, may be called both 'Go-works,' and 'Co-workers.' They cannot preach, but say to the preacher, 'Go!' and furnish him the means to do so. They cannot print a paper, or write for it; but they send it, pre-paid, to any of whom they believe it will do them good. They cannot write tracts, but they help pay for the paper on which to print them, and to send them freely wherever they are needed—which is everywhere. Reader, which class are you in?

'HAST thou faith?' It is said of the late eminent preacher, T. H. Skinner:

His habit of looking at the hopeful side of every event was wonderful, in a person who had such deep convictions of the evil of sin. This hopefulness, I think, was not so much the reflection of a sanguine temperament as a Christian grace, arising from implicit trust in God. Doubt or despondency seemed to annoy him, as if they impeached the goodness of God.

—This should be a more common experience. God designed the religion he has revealed to be of use to those who received it. Of what use is a nominal faith, without lifting power to keep our heads above the surges of affliction? It is the Christian's privilege to ride upon the waves, enjoy peace in the midst of trial, and hope when everything seems unsettling. Cultivate 'implicit trust in God,' one and all.

SECULAR journals in discoursing of religious matters often make themselves appear ridiculous; but they also frequently tell us wholesome truths. The New York Tribune, talking of the preachers the world needs, says, truly:

In short, the world—all the world—needs the word of God. There are days in every man's life when, carrying the hod, or in bank or office, he longs in his secret soul for some strong, new birth to make straight the things that perplex him—some new basis of power and comfort. The man who can speak this word to him must, in some measure at least, have lived his life and learned his language.

—To be most useful, we must be acquainted with men, and enter into their feelings, know their hearts, as well as know chapter and verse where we may find the basis of doctrine. Many a man has found the word of God a scourge to drive him away, rather than leading strings to guide into salvation, simply because of the manner of its presentation. We need much wisdom in the work of winning souls.

AN APOLOGY.

We are sometimes asked why we say so much upon life and death, upon materialism, upon future punishment.

We have tried to say less; but the subject is pressed upon us. It is a live issue. Men every where are inquiring, and what is told to some to-day has to be told over again to others to-morrow; and while some have heard and became convinced and settled in their minds, others are hungering for, and devouring everything they can lay hold of upon the subject. Correspondents urge us to continue to strike, and strike harder against the popular errors opposed to us—and we must speak.

Our mission relates to these great advent truths—we mean the advent and truths connected with it; what the advent is, what it is for, what is to be accomplished in connection with it; besides the signs relating to its approach, and the evidences that it is near. If these are to be kept subordinate to something else, then let us sink them, and unite with already existing churches, and have one less denomination of Christians. But on the other hand, if these things be neglected truths of God's word, then let us cry aloud, and spare not, but agitate, AGITATE, AGITATE, perseveringly press them upon the attention of the world, and God will care for the consequences, and maintain our cause.

On the other hand, if we dodge responsibility; make entangling alliances—treaties of peace that engage us to hold our tongues where we should speak; if we begin to "water the gospel," instead of watering with it; in short, if we turn aside from our work to pander to more popular elements and doctrines; then God will raise up another people to take our place, for his truth must and will be told in these last days. Yes, and it shall be told. We feel it. Adventists are not to prove unfaithful to their mission; but seeking a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit, and making a new consecration to the service of God, they will "move forward" in the work assigned them, to final victory. Let there be no weakness or flagging. The Lord is at hand!

"AN OLD HERESY REVIVED."

We saw this heading in the New York Observer, and wondered what it could be—something fresh certainly. What is it? Let the Observer speak:

"C. L. Ives, of New Haven, Conn., has introduced to American readers an essay, by Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork, the object of which is to prove that the souls of the wicked are not immortal: that after death they will be judged, sentenced to the realm of hell, where they will suffer due reward for their deeds, and then they will be annihilated."

The Observer appears to be willingly ignorant of the fact that about 22,000 copies of journals teaching this same 'heresy,' are published weekly in this country. And, also, that nearly a thousand copies of Mr. Constable's work have been already put in circulation by us, besides reprints of numerous other able articles from his pen upon the same topic. And these are but a drop in the bucket compared with the mass of tracts and books upon the same subject, circulated during thirty years past, resulting in a multiplication of converts to the theory: and now one publication out of the mass is republished, and the Observer thinks 'an old heresy' is 'reviving.'

But we thank Mr. Ives. We have hoped that Constable's masterly work might be published by some house that could get it before a class of readers we cannot readily reach. And our desire is gratified. But says the Observer:

"This heresy is nearly as old as time itself:"

True enough—only in those days it was not called 'heresy.'

"It has always had teachers, and probably more teachers than believers."

It was first taught by him who said, "Thou shalt surely die." The Observer's nescience alone, can shield it from the charge of blasphemy. The opposite doctrine was taught by him who said, "Ye shall not surely die!" That he taught without believing is generally admitted. The Scriptures, at least, brand him a liar.

"The necessary immortality of the soul is acknowledged by sound philosophy outside of the Bible:"

Is it, though? Really. We were so far from being aware of the fact, that we must doubt, until something like proof is offered to back up the declaration.

"And in the Bible the doctrine [the necessary immortality of the soul] is so clearly taught that one stands amazed when a New England sane man comes out with a serious argument to prove that good men will live forever, and bad men will not."

Dr. Olshausen, the learned German expositor, is esteemed "sane," and is an immaterialist; but he candidly declares that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the name, are alike unknown to the entire Bible. Was Whately crazy, and Luther? Are P[illegible] Rothe and Dr. True insane. [illegible] we forbear. The reckless as[illegible]ion of the Observer is of a piece [illegible] its characteristic dogmatism. It has yet to learn that saying a thing does not make it true.

"The mind of Mr. Ives and of his essayist, Dr. Constable, is staggered with the idea of everlasting punishment: eternal evil."

This passage shows that the Observer has not read Mr. Constable. He is a decided believer in eternal punishment—but not in eternal evil. He shows that the former does not necessarily involve the latter.

"But there is no greater difficulty in admitting that as a certainty in the future, than that evil is a certain present existence."

If this sentence was written candidly, after due consideration, we must say we do not envy the man who wrote it either his head or his heart. He should bethink himself of his condition.

"Yet good men, and perhaps great men, have been bothered to reconcile everlasting evil with Infinite power and love, forgetting that any evil at all in a world governed by Infinite power and love is a problem just as hard to be solved as the other.

"Bothered!" What a word to use in this connection. "Bothered!" That writer manifestly believes not only in election, but in the election of all he loves.

"Bothered!" Has a son, a father, a daughter, a friend of his, died, passed to hell, to dwell with fiends forever? If so, he might be "bothered" to some extent, if his heart has not been seared over with scholastic, dogmatic theology.

"Bothered!" What a word to express the anguish that noble souls and intellects have endured in contemplation of this subject. Albert Barnes, Foster, Butler, Charles and Edward Beecher, Pascal, Ellicott were "bothered." Such trifling with so momentous a theme should

"A child is born, and suffers pain intensely for a year, and then dies; yet there is a God, infinite in power and love. When Mr. Ives will tell us why the child was made and let to suffer so, we will tell him why Judas shall suffer forever."

What relation has the illustration to the topic in hand? Let the Observer imagine a child born and suffering endless pain and never dying, and then we shall have an illustration to the point. That sin is allowed to exist at all may be exceedingly mysterious; but any comparison instituted between finite evil and suffering without end in the same individuals is a paralogy: there is and can be no points of analogy in the case.

We would answer the above remark, however, thus: The creation of free agents, involves the liability of disobedience or sin on their part; and sin involves suffering. Therefore the creation of man involved a liability, but not the necessity, of all the evil we see in the world. But this evil is temporary; and life itself is esteemed by all a blessing, and only the severest, indeed only hopeless suffering makes us willing to be deprived of it. We can easily imagine a system of compensations for temporal suffering; but for eternal misery—who can conceive an offset? Perhaps this writer can complacently consider the fact (his theory being true) that he is to enjoy eternal happiness at the expense of misery of the same duration to multitudes of his fellow men! Edwards thought that glimpses of the eternal conscious damnation of the lost might add to the enjoyments of the redeemed; and some have been hardy enough to asseverate the assertion in this day, But, thank God, they are few. And should Edwards' successors, either as publishers or preachers teach his sentiments, 'annihilationists' would find their numbers indefinitely augmented. We should see a theological revolution that would 'bother' even the imperturbable Observer.

"We do not say that we are sorry Mr. Ives has introduced this essay, nor that Mr. Chatfield has published it. These old heresies have their cycles in which they run, and perhaps this doctrine of annihilating the wicked after a while, is to come up as a sedative to the nervous unrest of weak minds."

We presume on the first point, the Observer does not say all it thinks. It is doubtless heartily sorry. It will have occasion to be more so. If time lasts, immaterialists will find that something more than slurs about insane and weak minds will become necessary to stay the tide of this reform in theology. Mrs. Partington did not keep the Atlantic tide back with her mop. The apostles were not put down either by being let alone, or by persecution. The truth gained ground and prospered in either case.

"But the foundations are sure. Reason and revelation unite in teaching the soul's immortality, and we have no more apprehension of the truth being overturned by a pamphlet than we have that the walls of old Yale will fall when the publisher sneezes."

Is he whistling to keep his courage up? Would he have his readers suppose that this pamphlet is the only thing that has been published on the subject since the last 'cycle' of this 'heresy' ran out? It would seem so.

And "the foundations!" What a position! The soul's immortality the foundation of the Christian's hope! Paul shewed a better one:—"Other foundation can no man lay"—than what? innate immortality? Away with the thought. The foundation is CHRIST. In him is light, and the light is the life of men. And whosoever believeth on him shall not perish, but have eternal life.

A KIND WORD FOR US.

We were greatly disappointed that Br. and Sr. Well[illegible] should have called upon us in our absence from home; but we are glad to learn that their impressions concerning Buchanan and the interests located here, were favorable. He thus speaks in the Crisis:

The 23d we spent on the Michigan Central R. R., which is the best road and best managed of any R. R. we have yet seen. At four p. m. we arrived at Buchanan and spent the night with the family of Br. J. V. Himes, who received us with a hearty welcome, and cared for us with much kindness. Brn. J. V. and Wm. L. were absent, attending their State camp-meeting at Jackson, as were Br. and Sr. Mansfield. We were much disappointed in not seeing them all. We called at the A. C. TIMES office; Br. Elijah Mansfield, who kindly showed me about the business and working departments of the W. A. C. P. Association, from which tens of thousands of papers, books and tracts are wending their way to all parts of the great West, as also the East, bearing the glad tidings of the gospel of the kingdom of God, and the soon return of our blessed Lord, together with many other of the most neglected and important truths in the Bible. This office is a marvel, when we consider the incipent stage of the Advent cause in the West, the various elements of dissolution associating with it in former times, and the scantiness of facilities to prosecute such a work as the founders of this office propose. It is a model of energy, economy, and business tact. We attended a prayer-meeting at the house of Br. Mansfield, and enjoyed a precious interview with the brethren and sisters present, although much fatigued, having rode over one thousand miles in forty-six hours. Our rest was sweet that night..... The great truths which inspire us as a people are taking deep hold of the minds of many in the West. The laborers are earnest, and we should think, faithful. But they need many more laborers. The people of the East have no adequate idea of the vastness of the country, the rapid growth of towns, the numerous cities, and incoming tide of population in this most fertile and beautiful country, not in this State only, but in all this western country.

QUERIES.

W. G. On Mat. 8: 11, 12, we remark, "The children of the kingdom" spoken of, are the Jews, as Jews; called the children of the kingdom, not because they are so absolutely; for then all would be saved irrespective of faith or character; but because, as Paul says, to them "pertaineth the adoption, the glory, the covenants," etc. (Rom. 9: 4.) But their unbelief cannot make the word of God of none effect. When the kingdom came nigh to them (the offer of it), and they rejected the proffer quite unanimously, then it was taken from them, and offered to whosoever would come into it, or a "people bringing forth the fruits thereof" All true believers among the Jews will sit down in the kingdom of God; and with them a vast multitude, out of all nations under heaven.

"Cast into outer darkness" means the same as "gathered out of the kingdom," in Mat. 13: 41. The figure is drawn from the idea of the contrast between a brilliantly lighted feast-chamber, and the darkness of night outside.

"Wailing and gnashing of teeth" is what we might expect from the incorrigibly rebellious, when they shall at last see and realize what they have lost: for they will have time to appreciate their loss before they are consumed into smoke," or become "as though they had not been."

* * * The sin against the Holy Spirit, mentioned in Mat. 12: 31, 32, is blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, or attributing its work to the devil. Read the context, and you will see the point, clearly. The Jews said Jesus cast out demons by the power of Beelzebub. He claimed it was by the power of the Spirit of God, and then denounced their sin. "Neither in this world nor the world to come," does not imply that some sins will be forgiven in the world to come; but[illegible] intensive form of expression[illegible] to clinch the idea of no forgiveness.

V. H. No. Jude 7 does not teach that the Sodomites have received the final punishment. If it were so, then infants were involved in it. The utter temporal destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah in the providence of God is a sample of the work of "an eternal fire"—i. e. a fire that is unquenchable till its work is done, and so illustrates future punishment which will overtake all the wicked, blotting them from existence eternally.

Due notice will be given of the discussion.

W. D. S. On Is. 65: 20 read Br. Collins' article p. 1, TIMES for July 18.

On women's preaching, read Paul, 1 Cor. 11: 5. See Acts 21: 9; Joel 2: 28; Acts 2: 17. While as a rule God's preachers have been men, there have always been exceptions to this rule. So we have Deborah judging Israel, and Huldah fulfilling the work of a prophet. Paul's prohibition in 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35, probably relates to speaking in tongues. Whatever it means, it certainly is not intended to close woman's mouth, or seal her lips in the Christian church; for in ch. 11 of the same epistle the apostle gives directions as to the dress of the woman who does speak or pray in public. He also refers (Phil 4: 2) to "those women who labored with him" (not doing his washing and cooking his meals, but) "in the gospel:" i. e., as teachers and preachers. The apostle would not contradict himself: hence we conclude the prohibition in 1 Cor. ch. 14 either has the sense we have suggested, or else was of merely local application—understood by the Corinthians, and applicable in their case.

C. H. WELTNER. We have lost your P. O. Address; but would refer you to Br. Collins' latest work, called Hades and Sheol, published at this office, as a reply to your question. Others interested in the study of this parable (Lk. 16: 19–31) will do well to read it, also.

C. P. R. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." (John 3: 36.) In 1 John 5: 11, we read the record of God, by his inspired witness, that he "hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son, hath [this eternal] life." Jesus also says (John 6: 40): "Every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." And Paul makes the sense clear in Col. 3: 4—"When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye appear with him in glory." Thus we see that the believer has eternal life now by faith. It is a treasure laid up in the bank of heaven, to come into his actual possession at the judgment.

Mat. 16: 28 was fulfilled in the Transfiguration, which was a miniature representation of the coming and kingdom of Christ. See Mat. 17: 1–9; 2 Pet. 1: 16–21.

Mat. 24: 14. This prophecy has been fulfilled the past eighteen centuries. It does not require that every individual soul shall hear the gospel, but that it shall be universally proclaimed. The Bible or portions of it have been given to almost or quite every people of earth in their own tongue. At least, the remnants who have not had it are now diligently sought out, and means taken to provide for them.

Mat. 18: 10. "Their angels," evidently refers to guardian angels, so called from Heb. 1: 14.

Once More.

Brethren: Let me once more urge upon you the importance of attending our annual Camp-meeting, at Amboy Aug. 19. Shall the interest in this State wane away? Or shall new life be infused into this body of Adventists? If we desire standing and influence in the great cause in which we are engaged, we must rally, and rally at once. We must work, and work now! there must be no flagging in this matter. Jesus is coming, and coming soon.

The Association is now disconnected from our campmeeting, and unless we make a grand rally, it will have the appearance of a waning interest. Come one and all.

Preachers will be cared for; there will be no boarding tent, as heretofore, but supplies of all that is needful for boarding purposes will be furnished on the ground at reasonable rates, by Br. Wm. T. Baker. Horse-keeping will be furnished at reasonable prices.

Come supplied with blankets, and enough to keep yourselves dry in case of rain. Sisters, wear your thick shoes, strong dresses, etc. Brethren, bring your lanterns, if you wish a light in your dwelling. Bring tin dishes to cook in, if you can. In short, make it a camp and not a parlor meeting.

Railroad fare is reduced on the C. B. & Q., also the Illinois Central. See notice. WILLIAM MCCULLOCK.

The Times.

ABROAD.

Rome.

The Catholic paper, the Universe, in commenting upon the debate on Rome in the French Assembly, says it is useless to disguise the fact that the cause of the temporal power is lost in that body. "All our hopes have been disappointed," it adds: "in the only nation upon which the Papacy could count, the last support fails it. Humanly speaking, all is over. Fine speeches matter little; an equivocal vote means nothing. The important result—that which nearly all the papers have pointed out, that which will definitely encourage the spoilators of Rome—is the manifest disposition of the French Government and the Assembly, either from impotence or unwillingness, to do nothing for the Pope."

The Pope has addressed the following letter to Cardinal Patrizzi, Bishop of Rome:

"When God, in his impenetrable designs, permitted that the capital of Christianity should be wrongfully occupied, the usurpers proclaimed that Rome was necessary to the integrity of Italy and the perfection of all her parties—as if there were not in Italy, to this day, two small provinces which continue under their former government, and which, I hope, will ever remain so. But the purpose of the great workmen of the revolution was not only to usurp a city like Rome. Their purpose was, and is still, to destroy the center of Catholicism, and even Catholicism itself. In order to accomplish the ruin of an indestructible edifice, all the ungodly, all the sectarians of the world have lent their aid by sending each their contingent to this metropolis. All these little battalions have united into one body, and their intention is to insult and break the image of the Holy Virgin Mary and of the saints, Their aim is to vilify and hunt down the ministers of the sanctuary, to desecrate the churches, to multiply the houses of prostitution, to assail the ears of the ungodly by their sacrilegious clamors, and to infuse into the hearts and minds—chiefly so among the young—the venom of impiety, by the reading of certain journals known to be impudent, lying, hypocritical, and irreligious. This infernal phalanx has put it into his head to extirpate in Rome what it calls 'religious fanaticism,' as was said by an Italian philosopher of unpleasant memory, who died a sudden death a few years ago. After having taken root in Rome, it designs to transform the center of Christianity into a city of infidels, or, rather, to make Rome the mistress of a religion of tolerance. Such these desire to make her, who have not the thought of any other but the present existence before their eyes, and who imagine that God allows all things to pass without occupying himself with our acts."

The Pope has, it is said, just signed an order to the members of the Sacred College dispensing with the usual formalities in the elections and to reduce to a few hours' time the choice of a new Pontiff. Formerly there existed an indefinite number of ways for electing the Popes, but since the Cardinals have had a monopoly of the elections to the exclusion of the people—that is to the twelfth century—the Pontiff has been chosen by them in secret session and by individual and secret voting. Pius IX., using the prerogative of infallibility, seems to be trying to break away from many of the ancient traditions, and introduce new ideas into the Pa[illegible] Constitution.

Every Catholic power in Europe has been solicited in turn to interfere on behalf of the dispossessed Pontiff, and each has emphatically refused. The last resource was France, and that, too, has given way. But the Ultramontanes will not cease to rave for all that. Like their master they will continue to shout non possumus till they open the eyes of European statesmen to the fact, in the words of a French paper, "since the triumph of Ultramontanism and infallibility, an agreement with the church has become for the State a burden without any compensation, and the moment has come to procure a separation between them, which shall deliver the church from a control which it rejects, and the State from an identity of interests which it cannot recognize."

Turkey.

The semi-official Turquie of Constantinople, before its suspension by the Turkish Government as announced by Cable three days ago, published a remarkable article on the foreign policy of the Porte. In the new situation of European affairs, it said the Ottoman Empire must enter upon a decisive course for its own protection against both home and foreign enemies. Turkey has witnessed with indignation the manner in which the Western Powers interfered with her affairs, and she is now persuaded that the power of both England and France is on the decline, and that they could render no assistance to her should her existence again be threatened as it was at the Crimean war. Turkey has accordingly made friends with her traditional enemy, Russia, though she has done this far more because she fears a conflict in which she would be without effective allies than because she trusts in the friendly intentions of the Russian Government. Whatever, therefore, the future may have in store for them the Turks must consider how to strengthen their footing in Europe, as if they were to hold it forever. Turkey would thereby have a pledge in her hand, which, should a catastrophe occur, she could offer as an equivalent for a powerful and firmly established Islamite empire.

Obituary.

STRETCH. At Pokagon, Cass Co. Mich., July 21, Br. Henry Stretch; aged 46 years and 6 months.

The deceased was a man beloved and respected by all who knew him. His death is deeply deplored by all his neighbors. He died as the Christian dieth Having called his family around his bedside, he gave them such advice as only a Christian father and husband can give. His funeral sermon was preached by Eld. Joel Burnhart to a very large audience, from Heb. 9; 27, 28, [illegible] B.

WINTER. Fell asleep in Jesus, in [illegible], Iowa, July 13, 1871, DeLora E. daughter [illegible] and Sr. Daniel and M. K. Winter; aged 3 [illegible] months, and 11 days.

Lora was one of the most affectionate children that I have ever seen, and was almost idolized by her parents, brothers, and sisters, and was known only to be loved by all. We endeavored to administer comfort and consolation to the bereaved ones from 1 Thes. 4: 13,-17.

Dear Lora now is gone, cut down, alas! by Death's
Relentless hand, and we are left to mourn.
But mourning we have hope, that "in her end she Shall to her own borders come." Our hearts are Made afresh to bleed, as we look back upon the past
And view our loss. We can, in fancy see our little
Rosebud now, standing upon the upper step clapping
Her little hands as Pa comes home, and crying, "Harry
Harry Pa, be quick, I cannot wait, so bad I want
A kiss!" and then, her poor blind brother, how Sweetly she embraced him. Kissing off his tears, as Through his life of gloom and darkness, childlike sorrows caused the tears to flow. And so to all, Pure love, a never failing spring, welled up in the young heart.
Those little feet, that brought her to the loved
Ones fond embrace, will carry her no more.
That prattling voice, like music falling on our Ears is still and hushed until the resurrection
Morn. Those eyes, that watched so eagerly for "Pa's"
Return, are closed: and oh! the anguished throbbing
Of our hearts, as we consigned her to the tomb.
For many weary days, and sleepless nights we Watched beside her couch. In vain we strove:
Nothing but the loved victim would suffice.
O God! we bow submissive to the stern decree.
We know it is not in thy pleasure that
We suffer thus. Ah! no! "AN ENEMY" this hath done.
Ere long, according to thy word, the monster shall
Be seized, and to the judgment brought, tried,
Condemned, and stricken from the universe of
God. Amen! so be it.
Then shall the curse take wings and fly away;
And sin the first great cause of all our sufferings,
Shall be known no more. And its effects—pain,
Sickness, sorrow, death, will cease to be.
Oh a glory be to thy great name! our parents
Children, brothers, sisters, all shall from the gates
Of Hades come, to life and immortality, who have to Jesus humbly bowed the knee.
Our wanderings then will cease, our pilgrimage be ended The weary toilworn saint will then eternal Rest enjoy. This earth purged from all taint of sin, will then the habitation of God's chosen ones be come.
Hail glorious morn! All hail thou
Crucified, and everblessed Lord!
Oh! why delay so long thy coming! Why so
Slowly moves thy chariot wheels? The blood
Of martyrs cries, "How long, oh! Lord!" And "all Creation groans" to see the come.

GEO. W. HURD.

BYAM. Br. B. Keeler Byam, of Rochester, N. Y., was drowned in Irondequoit Bay, July 3, 1871; aged 23 years and 8 months.

No eye that ever rested on our dear Br. Byam, to know him, can trace these lines undimmed with tears. Amiable in disposition, brilliant in intellect, cultivated in literary attainments, refined and beautified with marked Christian graces, he was one of the most winning and lovely young men in the city of Rochester. Being a member of the Social Literary Society of the city of Rochester, he accompanied that society to spend a few hours in recreation and social intercourse; and while in the middle of the bay, where the water was fifty feet deep, in a small boat, with a young lady of very rare Christian graces (a very fit associate for one of his habits,) accompanied also by a younger girl of fourteen years, one of the ladies in changing position fell into the water; and as near as could be discovered by witnesses on shore, in the effort to rescue the one in peril, the boat was capsized, and all went down to a watery grave together, from whence the last body was rescued at eleven o'clock in the evening.

The sad news reached the city (a distance of six miles), when many hearts were rent with grief. The parents of our dear brother were saved from utter despair only by the "blessed hope" they with their dear son cherished and prized so highly.

Br. Byam was brought into the "blessed hope" during the tent-meetings held here by Brn. Pratt and Grant in 1867. He went south soon after and labored with Br. Leslie till compelled to leave that field on account of poor health. His faithfulness in rendering material aid to the cause is commendable. Self-sacrificing in spirit, he gave a full tenth of all he received to the Lord.

The Corn Hill M. E. church was freely granted for the funeral services, and filled with solemn and sympathizing friends. The services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Br. J. H. Whitmore.

BLAKE. At Jamestown, Ind., Clara Bell, youngest daughter of Wm. H. and Olive M. Blake; aged 2 years 10 months, and 8 days.

Clara suffered intensely for a long while with great patience, till—on the 31st of July—her pains ended in that sleep that knows no dreams. Words of comfort by the writer from Is. 61: 1, 3.

Little Lizzie, Clara's sister, said (as she looked at the corpse) "O ma! will she live again?" We tried to assure her, that Clara would live again when Jesus comes. Praise the Lord for such a hope!

Jesus is coming blessed thought,
Our little ones will then arise
Into His kingdom they'll be brought,
For they are heirs of Paradise.

GUYER—LUFFINGTON. By Elder R. P. Hoge, Aug. 23, 1871, Wm. Guyer and Jane Luffington, both of Steuben, Marshall Co., Ill.

Eternity.

Days come and go
In joy or wo;
Days go and come
In endless sum.
Only the eternal day
Shall come but never go;
Only the eternal tide
Shall never ebb but flow.
O long eternity,
My soul goes forth to thee!

Suns set and rise
In these dull skies;
Suns rise and set,
Till men forget
The day is at the door,
When they shall rise no more.
O everlasting Sun,
Whose race is never run,
Be thou the endless light!
Then I shall fear no night!

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

KANSAS.

FRIDAY, July 21. Came to Iola, Kas. and put up with Br. Willett, one of the new settlers here. He with others having embraced the gospel of the kingdom, is desirous of having it proclaimed here, and also have the ordinances administered. I arrived on Friday. I find by looking about to-day, that this is a desirable place for settlers. And the few Advent families here will like to have a few more settle among them. They can get any information of Br. J. Wesley Willet, Iola, Allen Co. Kansas.

SATURDAY, July 22. To-day we prospected up and down Rock Creek, to find a place for baptism. We found one, and a good one with rock bottom. Our baptism will be the first in this place, so far as we know, since Noah's flood, or before.

At night I spoke on the subject of baptism, and three proposed to be immersed.

SABBATH, July 23. We had a fine gathering from the prairie. At the close we went to the creek where I immersed two heads of families. A third intended to go forward, but temporary illness prevented. Quite a crowd went with us to the water and appeared interested and much affected. The people have few advantages, and some do not even appreciate them. They will hardly drink the water of life, even when it flows at their feet. But others do so, and rejoice in the great salvation.

At night I spoke on the passover and Lord's Supper, and then organized an Advent Christian Church, which gathered at the Lord's table. It was a precious time to these isolated, waiting ones. May they maintain their profession, and be ready when Jesus comes for final deliverance.

MONDAY, July 31. Br. Linville took me over the prairie some fifteen miles, to the city of Topeka, where we took the parting hand. God bless him. He is a true and faithful brother, and an honor to the cause. I arrived at Kansas City in the evening, and put up with Geo. Buel, Esq. of the Baptist church. His amiable and estimable wife, Juliette, had fallen asleep in Christ since my last visit. It threw a gloom over me, as in my last visit she was intensely interested in Biblical questions, both prophetic and doctrinal, as connected with the second advent of Christ, the resurrection and restitution. We spent several hours at her request in the examination of the above topics, of which she had some information from THE TIMES. The coming of Jesus, and resurrection were the chief themes of her inquiry, and her heart was in the subject.

She was a self-made woman, of culture and talent, and withal, a devout Christian. I was informed that she often in her sickness referred to our conversation, and would have persued it further, but feared she would trespass upon my time. She much appreciated the light received. She felt that she would die, and constantly sought light and help from the Bible. And relying upon Christ she met death in peace, in the hope of the resurrection, and an endless life in the kingdom of God, at the appearing of Christ. How important that we be faithful in our interviews with friends, and in parting leaving nothing undone that might help them to meet the Savior in peace.

TUESDAY, Aug. 1. This is the anniversary of the Emancipation of 800,000 slaves in the Brittish West Indies; since which 4,000,000 have been emancipated in our own land. It would be well if they could also be saved from sin. Freedom of body is a rich boon; but redemption from the power of sin is a greater.

At 10 a. m., I took the St. Joseph and Denver City R. R., for Seneca, Nemaha Co. This is a new road, and is to connect with the Pacific Road some two hundred miles from St. Joseph, at Ft. Kearney. It runs through the best watered counties in the State, with good soil and climate. It is quite as good a country as any I have seen in Kansas, or the West. The Railroad is managed by J. E. Barnard, Superintendent and Chief Engineer, with economy and liberality, and every facility is given to travelers and settlers. Any wishing information of the country will receive it by addressing Root & Wilkinson, Seneca, Kas.

I enjoy the hospitality of Br. and Sr. W. E. Wilkinson, and have a warm reception. They have no people of like faith here, and so attend the Congregational church. They have an excellent pastor, who believes in the personal coming of Christ, and that we are in the last days: and does not look for the world's conversion.

WEDNESDAY Aug. 2. Had a rich repast among the best periodicals received at the Courier Office. I will note a few things. The New York Tribune says:

It is remarkable what a fast hold the notion of the destruction of the world by a special act of God takes upon distempered minds. At Saco, Me., immediately after the earthquake, a poor bewildered man went about the streets crying: "Awake ye, awake; for the judgment of the Lord is upon you. Prepare ye for the everlasting fires!" This kind of lunacy is highly unreasonable, and will be satisfied with nothing less than a general combustion of material, the saints sent up to enjoy themselves and the sinners sent down to be eternally roasted, toasted, grilled, broiled and fried. This general idea of the destruction of the world at some future time is doubtless based on certain Scriptural passages.

Yes, this idea is based on the Bible, and it is true, even though literary men and skeptics disbelieve. But we beg to dissent from the doctrine of sending men down to be roasted eternally. The Bible says they shall be "burned up, root and branch," destroyed utterly. And the day of the Lord will soon come. I next noticed the proposal for another Peace Jubilee at Boston. The projector says:

Within the past year the black cloud of war has burst over Europe, deluging with blood one of the fairest countries of the Continent; but God be praised, Peace has conquered at last, and once more unfolds her white banner over the Christian world. The moral consciousness of mankind is so shocked with the terrible havoc of war, as now waged with all the improved machinery of death, that the tendency of the time is for peace—permanent, enduring peace—among the nations of the earth. Will not all say God-speed to any movement that would help to inaugurate such a happy era? With this end in view it is proposed to hold in the City of Boston, in the month of June 1872, a World's Peace Jubilee, an international Musical Festival, a union of all Nations in Harmony, when twenty thousand voices shall swell the grand chorus, and sing as never before the hymn of the angels—"Peace on earth, good-will to men."

Yet the nations are all preparing for war, and will settle nothing by right, but by might. And the late exhibition of human passions and depravity in France and Prussia, shows that the highest state of civilization, may in the ninteenth century exhibit the lowest features of barbarism. There will never be peace on earth, till the Prince of Peace shall reign. The next item, shows how a people who have suffered the frightful calamities of war within the last few months, are again plunging into dissipation and sin. The Tribune says of Paris:

But already that wonderful city begins to recover from its swoon. The outward life of the town, which strangers see and admire, has commenced its ordinary course again. The Closerie des Lilas was to have opened a month ago, but most of its young ladies were in jail on account of a flavor of petroleum about their fair hands, and the authorities have thought it best to place the student world on a limited probation. The other gardens are open and blazing with lights. The race-course at Chantilly is preparing, and the gandins of the Jockey Club are getting up their beting-bokes. The Champs-Elysees have become again the rendevous of the equipages of the the world. Worth has come back from his exile in the London fogs, and has resumed among the beauties of the world the absolute despotism which survives all caprices of constitutions, the guarantee of his power being the impossibility of filling his orders. And to the end that the newly awakening life may not lack adequate means of expression, La Vie Parisienne is revived—that paper which for several years has been the perfect exponent, as its friends call it, of "all the charming and deadly vices, all the elegant immoralities of this half-century of cocottes and cocodettes. What voluptous and piquant pictures it presents! what contempt of vulgar prudery! what light and well bred irony! what haughty and amusing persiflage!" A writer in a leading journal, speaking with enthusiasm of this renaissance of jollity, says that "M. Meilhac has truly defined our character in the song of Barbe-Bleue, 'Soyons gais! je suis gai!' I hope that Paris may remain the Paris of all time, spirituel, amiable, easy, enjoying all intellectual pleasures, and not averse to discreet and refined indulgences."

The next item relates to the vices of living, or, rather, of intemperance at the expense of starving for the necessary things of life:

In the midst of the misery and want of the English people, who spend but about eight dollars for cotton goods for each, man, woman, and child of the United Kingdom, in four years, there is spent seventy dollars for drink. Is it surprising that there is a woful want in a country where the quantity of beer, wine, and strong spirits consumed, year by year, is constantly increasing while the amount of wearing material consumed steadily diminish? To-day England and Wales alone support more than a million paupers, saying nothing of the wretched thousands in Ireland and Scotland. And this great army of miserably poor is drawn from the toiling mass of the workshop of the world.

If things are to go on in this way, what may we not look for in the depravity and sufferings of the race. My prayer is, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Let sin and suffering cease.

Notes of a Discussion.

FIFTH SESSION—FENN'S SECOND SPEECH.

The astonishing admission of my opponent in his last speech, that Paul was talking about moral death in Rom. ch. 5: and the assertion, in substance, that he prefered Universalism to Adventism, demands a thorough overhauling. Br. Burgess' logic is simply this: that God killed man morally, and then sent him out of Eden, so he would die physically, because he found him morally dead. If that is not Calvinism worse confounded, I fail to comprehend the meaning of words. Then to get out of his Calvinistic dilemma, he brings them all back to moral and physical life through Jesus Christ. Oh! that my opponent may see this absurdity, and turn from the error of his position.

Br. B. has labored to make you see that my position brings God on a level with the brute. I will make even these little boys see the absurity of such a conclusion. [Calls the attention of the boys.] Br. Burgess says that because I say that the Spirit of God gives life to man and beast, therefore God is a brute. In other words, because the spirit of man is not a rational entity, but man, though having a spirit, really dies, that God is a creature, because he has a spirit also.

This logic compares well with much of that used to sustain that which is only imaginary.

Eph. 3: 16, has been referred to. The inner man is Jesus Christ, formed within, the hope of glory; and has nothing to do with spirit entities. He has referred also to the reservation of wicked angels. (2 Pet. 2: 4–9.) I should like to know what fallen angels have to do with the question of disembodied human spirits? The analogy does not hold, for he cannot prove that these angels ever died, and are now reserved as disembodied spirits.

But he says to be reserved is to be kept in being. I grant it. But there is nothing in the passage that intimates that spirits disembodied were the things reserved. But if to be reserved means a conscious being, then the world, the physical globe is a conscious being; for that is also reserved unto the day of judgment. (2 Pet. ch. 3.) My opponent says the Greek term teereo, rendered reserved, occurs over seventy times in the New Testament, and invariably implies something in being to be kept or reserved. I grant the claim, and refer to an example (John 14: 15): "If ye love me keep (teereo) my commandments." Here is something to be kept—the commandments of Christ. Are they rational entities, because they are kept? This is enough to show you the absurdity of the gentleman's position; and this is just about a fair specimen of his reasoning on all his long catalogue of proof texts. Refrain from such logic and come to the simplicity of the Scriptures, and believe that when God says "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," he means the whole man, absolutely!

That you may see the difference in the character of the proof furnished to sustain the two positions, I cite you to the following passages: Job 10: 20–22; 14: 10–15; 17: 14–16; 19: 23–27; Ps. 6: 5; 13: 3; 37: 2, 9, 10, 20, 29, 34, 36, 38; Is. 38: 1–5. It is strange that Hezekiah should be so happy because God kept him out of glory fifteen years! The reason he rejoices in the addition of fifteen years to his life, is found in Is. 38: 18, 19: "The grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living, the living, he shall praise thee as I do this day."

Burgess' second speech.

That these passages Fenn has refered to do not teach annihilation, is admitted by one of the strongest Adventist preachers in America: C. F. Hudson. Moral death is the divine displeasure, the disapproval of God. I have never used the term spiritual with reference to moral death. Fenn thinks that the strength of his position is his oratory. He has applied to the boys. I guess the boys think as much of me as they do of Br. Fenn. [Tries to get the boys to see his argument but fails. The audience begin to laugh: and he says, "this reference to the boys is all moonshine, any way." Roars of laughter.]

Job ch. 14, proves nothing for Fenn. The waters drying only imply a change in locality, and proves that man when he dies only changes places. He leaves this world. [Mr. Burgess now appeared somewhat disconcerted, and run into exhortation, till time was called.]

FENN'S THIRD SPEECH.

My opponent has mentioned the name of C. F. Hudson. He never was a materialist, strictly speaking, but his view of Scripture language, may be found in these words: "We prefer to say, however, that while the Scriptures contain all the metaphors and other tropes, which are found in other books, we regard the ordinary sense of words as, prima facie, their true sense, in the Scriptures as elsewhere. That is, the obvious sense, which first strikes the mind and is most likely to shape the thought, claims the first attention, as lying in the direction of truth, and it is to be overruled only by special considerations." (Christ our Life, p. 56.)

Mr. Hudson would not argue then that destroy meant to preserve, after the manner of my opponent's reasoning. Br. Burgess has not improved his moral death argument by saying it is the displeasure of God. What difference does it make how it is brought about, while he claims God inflicts it? His position is substantially this: God puts man in Eden, and amuses himself with him by killing him morally; and then turns him out of the Garden and lets him die physically. This conclusion is the only legitimate result of his reasoning on that point. He inquires how Job could hear the voice of God and answer in a state of nonentity. We will let Christ enlighten him. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth." (John 5: 28) If Br. B. will tell us how those in their graves can hear the voice of Christ, he will know how Job can hear the voice of God in the same condition.

We have been told during the debate that Christ in his disembodied state during the three days of his death, went and preached to the spirits in prison. Br. B. has at the same time claimed that Christ went to Paradise. Now either Christ did not do the preaching while he was dead, or else he went to hell instead of Paradise: for these spirits were wicked, or else they would not be in prison; and in need of preaching. He can take just which horn of this dilemma he pleases.

We claim, as Peter asserts, that Christ was in hades, where there is "no work, nor device, nor wisdom, nor knowledge," as we have proved. And I now give you following Scripture references on this point: Ps. 104: 29, 30; Ps. 115: 17; Prov. 11: 31; Eccl. 9: 5–10; Ps. 146: 4; Is. 26: 19–21.

Br. B. says death is never predicated of soul or spirit. Is. 53: 12, teaches that 'soul' is poured out unto death.

Mr. Burgess in his closing speech said the passages quoted by Fenn in his last speech, all refer to the body, and have nothing to do with the spirit, which will live on, and on, as long as God endures. With a recapitulation of former passages, and an exhortation, he closed.

FENN'S CLOSING SPEECH.

Ten minutes is allowed to me to sum up my arguments.

1. I have established beyond controversy the fact that thought and consciousness are destroyed by injury of the brain in many cases. This proves that when the brain is dissolved in death these functions cannot be active.

2. My opponent has admitted the brain to be the organ of thought; and the only logical conclusion from such a position is that when the brain, the organ of thought, ceases to act, thought can no longer endure.

3. Ps. 146: 4 furnishes us with Divine authority for the assertion, that when the dust returns to the earth, in that very day thought perishes.

4. The wise man has plainly told us the dead know not any thing.

5. Paul has told us that there is no advantage derived in periling ones life, and all things, for Christ, "if the dead rise not." The language of the apostle is meaningless, if Br. Burgess' position is true.

You have doubtless observed that my faith is based directly upon positive declarations of Scriptures, while my brother has invariably had to infer that the author meant something entirely different from what he said. You well know that the question calls for proof in favor of the spirit of man being a real, rational being between death and the resurrection. I need not tell you that not an item of proof has been furnished to sustain that claim. I therefore claim to have sustained the affirmative of this question. The disposition we make of this question does not change the purposes of God. Our prejudices may bar the truth from our hearts; but the truth will be unchanged thereby and we alone will be the sufferers I hope to meet my opponent in the fair fields of Paradise restored where we shall see eye to eye.

Identity.

Identity is that faculty or power whereby we distinguish a person or thing from all other persons or things. Identity is common to all things; personal identity is limited in its extent. A stone has identity whereby we can distinguish it from all other stones. The knife that was used the assassin in taking the life of his victim, is brought into court and identified. The horse that broke loose from his owner's stable is found, and identified, and returned to his owner. These objects possess identity, but not personal identity. Personal identity will lead its possessor to distinguish himself from all things else. A man in possession of his intellectual powers knows that he is a man. He knows he is not a horse, nor a dog, nor a bird. He knows he is not his neighbor across the way. He knows that he is himself and that he is distinct from all other men. This is personal identity. It is a question asked often, in what does indentity consist? And by many it is confidently asserted that it is a propensity of man's immortal spirit taking for granted the very thing to be probed, viz.: that man has an immortal spirit. This assumption is supported (?) by an argument something like the following: As it can be demonstrated that John Smith's physical organism undergoes an entire change in a few years (some say in two, others in seven, and still others in twenty years) and yet in old age he is aware of the fact that he is still John Smith, while there is not a particle of matter in his frame that entered into its composition when he was a youth, as every particle has been renewed, and yet he retains his personal identity, knowing that he is the same person with the John Smith who took part in certain transactions years ago, it follows that personal identity is not a property of matter, and must therefore be peculiar to the unchanging inner man, the soul.

I think the foregoing is a fair statement of their argument. But it is mere assumption to say that because man possesses personal identity, it follows that it is a property of an immortal soul. If the mere fact that the John Smith of to-day recalls certain actions in which John Smith engaged ten years ago, and notwithstanding the complete renovation of his physical system, he knows that he is the person; if this connecting link establishes his claim of possessing an immortal entity, distinct from his body, it will also as conclusively prove the beast to be in possession of it.

If the matter of which man is composed undergoes a change (which is not disputed), of course the same change is experienced by all other animate creatures. As the food of which man partakes is continually supplying the constant waste of nature, so, too, does the food of the dog or horse supply the continual waste which he experiences. Hence we can safely conclude that if man undergoes a complete change, say in ten years, the same period of time will bring about a similar change in his dog or horse.

Let us suppose then, that at thirty years of age, John Smith owns a young mastiff. He calls him Carlo, and the dog soon answers to his name. At forty years of age, as regards the body of Smith, he is entirely changed, and yet he can identify himself as being the same person who ten years ago named his dog Carlo; hence it is said the real Smith, must be the inner man, the immaterial part, as not a particle of the matter which constitutes his being to-day, entered into his composition ten years ago.

If this reasoning be correct, let us pursue it further, let us follow it to what most certainly is its legitimate conclusion. If a complete renewal of the body, with the identity of the individual preserved, be proof that identity is lodged in an immortal soul, then of course, to be consistent, in whatever creature we find these features, we must conclude that there we find proof that there is an indwelling immaterial entity, to which the identity belongs.

But if we take this reasoning to be conclusive in establishing the point in one instance, and then in another where the premises are precisely the same, deny its conclusiveness, surely we are acting inconsistently.

In the supposed case, above, Smith had undergone a complete physical change and yet retained his identity. During this ten years the dog also has been subject to the same physical laws, and he has undergone a change just as complete as his master's, without losing his identity; does it therefore follow that the real Carlo, is an inner dog, an immaterial part?

Taking the immaterialist's premises, let us reason. As the matter of which the dog's body is is now composed is entirely different from that which formed it ten years ago, if his memory extends back to that period, it follows that his memory must be a property of something other than the matter of which he is now composed, because that, not entering into his composition then, can of course have no recollection of events in which it took no part.

It will probably not be disputed that the dog's memory can retain ideas for that length of time. Many instances can be furnished, showing that after a separation of many years from his master, the dog has shown unmistakable signs of recognition, welcoming him with joy and delight.

Admitting this to be so (and who can dispute it?) this fact is seen: the dog Carlo of to-day, remembers his master, who has been absent ten years, thus showing that however much he may have changed, he is the same individual dog of ten years ago; and taking the immaterialist's premises, as there is no identity as to matter, the real Carlo must be an unchanging, immaterial entity.

Now by what principle of logic this reasoning is considered as being conclusive in the one instance, and not in the other, is beyond my comprehension. If it proves one to possess an entity distinct from and independent of the body, it just as clearly proves it in the other: but if it is not sufficient to prove it in the latter instance, then it is not sufficient to prove it in the former. So that those who make use of the argument from "identity," to prove their point, must include the dog in their list of immortals, and consider him as possessing an immaterial entity, or else they must, to be consistent, cease to make use of it any longer, and seek some other evidence, which, I opine, they will never find.

Let it not be sneeringly said that this is proving man to be no higher than his dog; 'tis not so. Man is the greatest and most wonderful of all earthly beings, but this superiority is not to be sought for in an inner immaterial entity; his superiority consists in his having a more perfectly developed brain and general organization, than the animals beneath him. Where this is possessed we see marked intelligence; but where it is lacking, we see inferiority; in some cases, much inferior to the brute.

Man and beast alike, depend upon the mercy of God for the continuance of life; and when the end of all temporal things finally comes, it will be found that wicked men, like natural brute beasts," "shall utterly perish in their own corruption." (2 Pet. 2: 12.)

Chas. E. Barnes.

All Shall be Changed.

True, the apostle says, "all shall be changed;" but he also employs other words in connection with that sentence which it might be well for us to especially notice. How do we read? Let us see, "Behold I show you a mystery"—who is he talking to? Let Paul answer. "Now this I say brethren." Then God's children are the you whom he is addressing, and about whom he is speaking. Read on. "We [the parties addressed] shall not all sleep, but, we shall all be changed." What, all be changed, the sleeping ones, as well as the living ones? Certainly, that is just the way Paul declares it.

But does not the apostle mean those who are alive when Jesus comes? I think not. Let us read on: "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, [not a slow gradual process] at the last trump; for [a reason given why this change occurs then] the trumpet shall sound, and the dead [we who fall asleep] shall be raised [come to life] incorruptible." Surely, then the dead are changed; "and we [who have not fallen asleep] shall be changed."

And what may be the nature of their change, Paul? You have declared that "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." Read on: "For this corruption [the dead] must put on [be changed to] incorruption; and this mortal [that is yet liable to corruption] must put on immortality" [must get beyond the liability of corruption or death.] Here then is the nature of that change that awaits those who shall not sleep. It is a change from mortality to immortality, without being subjected to the condition of corruption.

So it is true "we shall all be changed." Hence Paul prefaced this blessed announcement with the words—"Now this I say brethren, that flesh and blood [the mortals who are alive when Jesus comes] cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption [the dead who have entered that condition] inherit incorruption." Therefore, of necessity, there must be a change. Query. How then can Jesus in his kingdom reign over mortal beings?

But again, I wish to call attention to the manifest distinction between mortal and corruption or corruptible, that the apostle makes in this chapter. In v. 53 it is stated: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption," and in the next verse; "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption." To what does the apostle refer by the expression, "this corruptible. (see v. 52.) "And the dead shall be raised incorruptible." Hence Paul's explanation is, that the dead are "this corruptible, that must put on incorruption." And in vv. 53, 54, after stating the change to come upon the dead, he further says—"And [in addition, something more is to occur], this mortal shall put on immortality, so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality." "This mortal?" Yes. Certainly Paul keeps up the distinction between those who sleep and those who are alive when Jesus comes; for he had just declared that "we shall not all sleep;" and the term "this mortal" has reference to the exempted ones, the "flesh and blood" of God's saints, even "we who are alive and remain" till Jesus comes. "Then shall be brought to pass the saying written, Death is swallowed up in victory." then shall the triumphant shout be raised, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" "Thanks be to God who [destroys death? Oh! no, that is not the way it reads, but] who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ;" placing us who are yet mortal [liable to die] beyond death's power, and thus they shall never die. And he will rescue from the dark domain those who have fallen victims to death's cruel reign, by a glorious resurrection to "die no more;" "for upon such the second death hath no power."

I would therefore submit the following for candid thought and inquiry: (1) the "change" of which the apostle speaks, has reference exclusively to God's children. Therefore the wicked have no part nor lot in the matter. (2) All God's children shall experience this change, whether living or dead. (3) The particular nature of the change is according to the condition in which each is found, asleep, or in death being one, and awake, or alive the other condition. (4) The terms corruption and incorruption relate (a) to the condition of those who are "the dead in Christ," and (b) their glorious emancipation therefrom.

(5) The terms "mortal and immortal relate (a) to the condition of those who are alive, and yet liable to death; and (b) to their glorious translation to a condition where they "shall never die." Lastly, this "blessed change" shall occur when he who is "the resurrection and the life," shall appear the second time, even "coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

The Salt Illustration.

From 1843 to 1866 we resided in one of the Southern States. From 1862 onward to the end of the war, the city of H. was held by the Federals as a military post, and the citizens of the city and the country could purchase articles of merchandise within the lines, only as permitted by the proper officers. A bill of the desired articles had to be approved by these officers before it could be presented to a merchant. From the boy of seventeen to the man of fifty the males were absent; hence the bills were frequently made out by persons but little accustomed to the use of the pen, and, as might have been expected, much of the orthography Webster could not have indorsed. This misspelling gave rise to many a hearty laugh. Being at the house of a merchant, he said to his wife and ourself, "that we could not at fifty guesses spell the word salt as it was spelled on a bill which he had just filled—as common and easy a word as salt!" The merchant's wife was an accomplished scholar, and had spent many years in teaching. Having heard so much about the "bad spelling," we felt somewhat prepared for the undertaking, and began in about the following interesting style: "sault—sawlt—sawllt—saughlt—saughllt—solt—sort—sorlt—sorllt—calt—cawlt—cealt—ceawlt—soylt—soyalt," etc., etc. But all our efforts were ineffectual, and we were forced to an "unconditional surrender!" "Then," said the merchant, "I will tell you. It was spelled s-a-l-t; is not this the correct way?"

Now everybody can see that we did not try to spell salt correctly. Before we began, the gigantic idea in our minds was, that the spelling of this word was intolerably bad, the very worst that the merchant had ever seen; and we governed ourselves accordingly. Indeed we carefully avoided the correct spelling, for we believed the correct spelling in this particular case would be wrong, therefore it is not marvelous that we missed it. But this incident taught us a valuable lesson; and that is, not to make difficulties where none exist. This little occurrence has has been of great benefit to us in the investigation of the prophecies. We had always been told that the prophecies (figuratively speaking) were spelled very badly! That they said one thing, but always meant another! That no one could understand them! That when Christ said, "they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory," the language appeared to mean his literal second coming; but that being prophetic, it meant a something else—very hard to tell exactly what! That perhaps Christ meant his providential or judicial coming to destroy the wicked Jews in 70, A. D.; or his gracious coming in the conversion of sinners; or his sudden coming at the death of persons! In short we had been taught by the pulpit and the press, that if we could not tell certainly what Christ did mean in this quotation from Mat. 24: 30, we could tell certainly what he did not mean—he did not mean his second, literal, personal, visible coming! What had been taught to us concerning the prophecies had also been taught to the public generally. For this was, and yet is, the testimony of the commentators; and they, to a considerable extent, mold the minds of the people, especially in regard to the prophecies. By our commentators, and also by some prophetic expositors, many of the plainest and most easily understood prophecies are so alarmingly wrested that they are made to express little or nothing of their intended meaning. For example, here are the "seventy weeks" of Dan. 9: 24, plain and easy; but hear the late S. D. Baldwin, author of "Armageddon," concerning them. He says in his introduction, p. 14, "Our labors have been of the severest and most painful and patient character, in making the discovery of the principles of interpreting the seventy weeks; to ascertain them, we have made not less than fifty thousand numerical experiments." While we honor the author for his untiring industry, we are fully satisfied that he might have spelled "salt" at the first numerical experiment far more correctly than he has done by his "fifty thousand!" If, as students of the prophetic Scriptures, we would understand them, we should not strive to miss the plain, literal spelling of "salt" every time.—Key.

C. T. RUSSELL. Sent Quarterly Vol. 2, No. 1. I have none of the other, save in bound volumes ....E. MERRILL. Your paper is usually mailed Wednesday morning. We know it is delivered safely on board the cars at this station. There our responsibility ceases. Probably Government officials are sometimes careless, and sometimes overworked. ...B. F. WISE. Yours has truly been the path of trial. David used times of affliction in learning to do God's will more perfectly, and you seem to have the same mind. Fire purifies the gold, consumes the dross. May you be fitted for the kingdom. ...S. BALDWIN. To quote Paul's words, that he was not sent to baptize, but to preach the gospel, to prove that baptism is not essential, is mere quibbling. Immersion is either a command, or it is not. If it is not, then why did Paul baptize at all? He did baptize some, and when he says he is glad he did not baptize others, he adds as a reason, not that baptism was "non-essential," but that it would have given opportunity for his enemies to have said that he baptized in his own name. It is the same kind of reasoning that takes baptism out of the Bible, that puts immaterialism in—i. e., denying words their natural sense....W. JOHNSTON. We have sent regularly to Mt. Pleasant, as ordered. We will now send to Baldensburg. ...A. W. SIBLEY. Send it on....H. JAMESON. Will give by and by ....G. DYSON. Have written about B. S.... C. C. MARSTON. Thank you. ....N. Among the many improvements of the day we remark a notable one in the article of Railway Guides. Rand, McNally & Co., of Chicago, have issued the best Guide (we mean what we say) we have yet seen. Instead of filling spare pages with stories, jokes and execrable attempts at humor, we have instead indexes and condensed descriptions of all the Railway towns in the country. Don't fail, when you get a Railway Guide to ask for Rand & McNally's. It is published monthly at $2 a year. 20c. single. Sent by mail.

Book Notices, Etc.

Littell's Living Age. This able weekly magazine continues to hold the leading place in America as an eclectic. The best things from foreign magazines find their way to its pages; and we know of no better way to keep posted concerning present day thought and literature than to be conversant with its pages. 20c. per number, $8 a year.

This volume will prove of no little value to any who may think of making a home in any portion of Kansas. It tells just what the immigrant wishes to know, and was evidently prepared by a practical mind. It is also endorsed by the Governor of the State. Can be obtained as above.

Scribner's for August contains an account of Vassar College (for women), by H. H. McFarland, an interesting sketch of that noble institution; Life in the Caucasus, by J. T. Headley, containing information about a country and people of whom but little is known; Some of the French Leaders; A Visit to Yo Semite; An American Art Museum; The Editor's departments, and many other articles make up a number that places Scribner first among the literary magazines with which we are acquainted. $3 a year. Scribner & Co, 654 Broadway New York city.

The North British Review for July offers the following attractive table of contents: 1. The Roman Empire; 2. Theocritus; 3. Hugh Miller; 4. Hereditary Legislators; 5. Non conformity and the Progress of Society; 6 Jowett's Translation of Plato; 7. Miall's Motion on Disestablishment; 8. Contemporary Literature.

This last chapter is an exceedingly valuable one to the student. Its sketches of current publications are graphic as well as concise, and give us an idea of what the books are and their value. This Quarterly possesses a high order of merit, and well fills the place of the North British on the publisher's list.

L. Scott Publishing Co., 140 Fulton St., New York city. $4 a year.

The State of the Dead: By Rev. Anson West. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, Pa. Pp. 256. Price, $1.00.

Mr West is a strong writer, and ably presents the most straitest orthodox views of his subject. He has no patience with the advocates of purgatory from Rome, or the supporters of the "intermediate state," with its Paradise and Tartarus, with lesser joys and miseries than heaven and hell are to afford. He scouts the sensibility of the Fathers who brought this view out of pagan philosophy, and the weakness of those who in this day follow them. Heaven or hell at death, for all mankind, is his frankly stated doctrine.

He has no sympathy for destructionists, either, though perhaps as kindly disposed toward them as the other classes mentioned.

The work contains thirteen chapters, the four upon purgatory possessing most value. It will repay perusal, whatever may be the ideas of the reader.

Chapter 1 treats of Man's present and primitive state; ch. 2 of the body; 3. the soul; 4. ancient superstitions; 5, 6, 7, 8, purgatory; 9, 10, 11, 12, the intermediate state; 13. the resurrection.

We expect to refer to this work hereafter, and perhaps review some of its expositions. Meanwhile it may be procured, as noted above.

The Bibliotheca Sacra for July is at hand; but we have vainly sought time to read it all. The following is the table of contents: 1. Ways to Rome, by Rev. Francis Wharton, D.D., LL.D.; 2. The Position and Methods of the American Scholar by Rev. E. H. Byington; 3. The Date of the Passion of our Lord; 4. On the Teachings of Christ in regard to his then Future Coming, and the Phraseology of the Apostles on this Subject, by Rev. Professor Henry Cowles; 5. Characteristics Distinctive of Christ's Kingdom as Created by Redemption from the World, or the Kingdom of Satan, by Rev. Samuel Harris, D.D.; 6. The Three Fundamental Methods of Preaching—the Writing of Sermons, by Prof. Edward A. Park; 7. Notices of Recent Publications.

The Bibliotheca is, of course, stoutly orthodox; and it is, also, ably so. It holds no second rank among the Quarterlies. And we may be sure that what it says is the best that can be said in defence of the system of theology it represents. W. F. Draper, Andover, Mass. $4 a year.

Reply.

We would be very glad to comply with the request of the Committee to attend the Illinois Camp-meeting, if we could, but our arrangements are such that we think we shall not be able to do so.

I. C. WELLCOME.

AFTER Aug. 20 my P. O. Address will be Manchester, Iowa. As soon as I get settled I shall be ready to attend to calls from churches or individuals. Address as above. (2843) F. H. KENNY.

Debate.

At Harrisonville, Martin Co. Ind., commencing at 10 a. m., Sep. 5, between Eld. W. B. F. Treat, of Ind., and Eld. G. W. Green, of Memphis, Ind., on the following propositions:

I. When man dies, his spirit remains in a conscious state until the resurrection.

Treat affirms.

II. The kingdom predicted in Dan. 2: 44, and proclaimed by Christ and his apostles, will be established at the second advent of Christ.

Green affirms.

Last February Br. Green gave four discourses in the place, and this, it seems, stirred up strong opposition, which led to arrangements for the proposed discussion.

The Christian Record calls Eld. Treat "a representative man," and we feel certain that the truth will not suffer in the hands of Eld. Green. ED. TIMES.

Being at liberty again, I will now respond to calls to preach and labor in the gospel field, as the door may open. (2843) E. H. BURINGTON.

Whitmore—Cheap Edition.

We are pushing this along as fast as possible. It will be better printed than the last, for our new press is doing good work. We are anticipating fresh and liberal orders. $1 for four copies, by mail. Five copies, by express, $1. Thirty copies for $5. $16 a hundred. We once heard of a demand for "cheap preaching." We think this is cheap enough. Every one can afford to have Whitmore, and Collins, and Sheldon preaching, and that, too, in places the authors themselves cannot possibly visit. Buy and distribute, or lend their works.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 22, 1871.

Faithfulness.

To be successful in any vocation in life, it requires not only activity and vigilance, but also faithfulness, in the discharge of the various duties pertaining to that vocation. In like manner must the true child of God be diligent and faithful in the service of the Master, if he would reap the reward of eternal life in the kingdom of God.

The Savior not only enjoined this duty upon his disciples, but he also gave them most effective examples, in his own life and sufferings, of faithfulness and obedience to the divine requirements. Are we, dear reader, imitating his example by lives of holiness and strict conformity to his will? Never, in the history of the past, was there more need of Christians heeding the command, "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation," than at the present time. Every thing that the arch-enemy can invent to lure God's people away from his truth and service is being done. The cares, and pride of life, the deceitfulness of riches, worldly pleasures and emoluments, false doctrines and theories; all like the tidal waves, come sweeping down upon us, threatening to overwhelm us in ruin and perdition. Is it any wonder, then, that the apostle, in looking down the stream of time, to the perils of these last days, should exhort his brethren to put on the whole armor of God, that they might be able to stand against the wiles of the devil? "For," said he, "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." "Wherefore, take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all to stand."

Indeed, if we would be good and faithful soldiers of the cross, there is no such thing as laying down our armor. Future life and blessedness is only promised to those that continue faithful to the end. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life, is the declaration of the inspired writer, with the promise, "to him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

M. E. ORR.

Our Tour West.

Since my last statement of labors we have visited New Ulm, Bradon Co. Minn. a German city, on the Minnesota River. In 1862 its inhabitants were killed and driven out by the Indians, and the city burned. But it has been rebuilt, and is rapidly growing at the present time. It is destined to become Americanized, although its inhabitants—some 2,000—are Germans, Prussians and Swedes. My brother, Dr. J. W. B. Wellcome, resides here, and is gaining an extensive practice. We visited with him several very fine families of intelligent Germans (and also some Americans), some of whom are devoted Christians, and others infidels.

Visited the "Turner's Hall," a costly brick temple used by the German infidel society called Turner's. Visited with the German Methodist minister, Eld. F. Ireland, and found him a very good man, attended his meeting Sunday, and although we could not understand his speech, we were sure he is an able and spirited speaker. He preaches German, but can talk good English, and is interested in the theme of our Lord's soon coming, and the restitution of the earth. He invited us to hold an English service in his house in the eve., Mrs. W. preached to those who could understand English. We spoke to them of "the blessed hope," and scattered some tracts among them.

We met with the remnants of several families which were killed by the Indians, and passed over a road where thirty-five were shot while fleeing from their pursuers, in 1862. Called at a house and conversed with the parents who had seven of their family shot near the house. These were trying times to the early settlers, such evils are removed now, and the people are prospering greatly.

We next went a tour of 175 miles by team, in company with Br. S. C. Wellcome, to his place of labor; called at Medo, and preached one evening, July 26, put up with Br. A. Weston. Found a few faithful believers, and an open door for the word. Passed through Ulma City, calling on Br. Moon and family, who seem to be faithful in the work of the Lord.

At Wasioga we called on Br. E. S. Barrett and family, who were very glad to see us, being much interested in the faith, and having no society with which to associate. Coming to Rochester we intended to spend the night with Br. Geo. Emery, formerly of Kennebeck, Me., but he and his family were absent from home; so we put up at the inn.

July 28, came through Eyota, and dined with Br. Brown, formerly of Canada, and well acquainted with our Eastern men. We passed on to St. Charles and put up with Br. Leonard, formerly of Canada, Sr. L. (as also Br. and Sr. Brown), was a devoted believer in the East. Her husband and daughters have recently been converted. Opposition being strong, and she being determined the Advent faith should be preached, she opened and seated a large room in their house for meetings, where Eld. S. C. Wellcome preaches statedly.

July 29, visited several families of believers and put up with Br. D. Cheatham, where we found a pilgrim home, indeed.

Sunday, July 30. Held a grove meeting on the Methodist camp-ground, in Utica. The gathering was large, and very attentive, while we attempted to preach to them the kingdom of God, and the signs of its soon coming. Brn. P. Ramer and S. C. Wellcome were with me. It was a good day in the Lord. Went to St. Charles and preached in the evening, in Br. Leonard's house, on 2 Pet. ch. 3. Six ministers were present to hear. May the Lord bless it to their good, as well as to others.

Spent the following week in visiting. Attended two social meetings, at one of which a young man voluntarily arose and declared his determination to seek the Lord, and become a Christian.

Aug. 5, went to Viola. Visited several families, and put up with Br. Oakes, who with his family are devoted to the faith. There are several families of holiness here who wait for the Lord.

Sunday, Aug. 6. By some error I had appointments in two towns, eight miles apart, for the p. m., so I preached twice to attentive congregations in Viola, while my brother, S. C., filled my appointment in Elliota, at 3 p. m., and I went there and preached at eight p. m., on the scientific scoffers of the last days, the dissolution and restoration of the heavens and earth, and the duty to hold fast to the faith.

At the close of the meeting a true Minnesota thunder, hail, and rain storm set in, and we remained in the school house until 11 o'clock, when it subsided so that we and the delegation from Viola could go home with Br. Brown, where we found good lodgings for the remainder of the night. Br. and Sr. B. are greatly attached to the Lord and his children, and keep a pilgrim tavern. May the Lord guide and keep these and all his dear ones unto his heavenly kingdom, and soon gather us to the eternal rest at his coming.

I. C. WELLCOME.

The Soul.

The question of the nature and duration of the soul has been so frequently and elaborately discussed, that one would think it were about time that it be fully settled and understood. But this is far from being the case. Indeed, the contest has hardly reached its climax. And even among those who profess to have the truth, there is much inconsistency and confusion of ideas.

It is not my purpose to give a labored exposition of the subject for general consideration, but to present a few thoughts for the practical benefit, it may be, of a certain class. We find it necessary, however, to inquire, What is the soul? We answer, The term "soul" undoubtedly has for its ordinary meaning person. The Sacred Scriptures contain many instances of this use of the word. But when we speak of the soul of a person or thing, we generally mean something very different. In this case the primus usus of the word is evidently life. Thus, the soul of animals usually means the principle of life contained in the blood. The soul of vegetation is the principle of life contained in the sap which answers the purpose of blood in animals.

It is evident, then, that the term "soul" when used in this sense, never means a personal entity. It cannot be said either to live or die, except, perhaps, in a fanciful or poetic sense; as,—"Softly now the light is dying on the distant, native shore." It is the body that lives, not the life. It is the body that dies by being deprived of the principle of life. Life is simply an effect, which is distributed throughout the system in the process of circulation. When the organic mechanism becomes worn out, and nature refuses to perpetuate the bodily identity by supplying the waste of the system, then the causes of life cease operating, and life like the light of a candle, goes out in the oblivion of death. Then it cannot be found. It goes nowhere, nor can it be seen or handled.

It is sometimes said that the soul goes into the grave with the body. This is a wrong statement of facts. The soul does not go into the grave with the body, for the very excellent reason that it does not exist after its causes cease operating. It is absurd then, to talk of its occupying space, and coming in contact with matter.

It is often said, "I believe the soul of man to be mortal." This, too, is incorrect, because the soul, in this sense being a property, cannot possess properties. The principle of life is the same in quality everywhere. Its duration is entirely dependent upon the nature and properties of the corporeal thing itself.

The fact is incontrovertible both in the ~~light of reason and~~ Scripture, that all there is of man is that which we recognize through our senses. Life, thought, pain, desire, love, etc., are all properties of man as an organized substance, but they form no part of him. When a man becomes disorganized, these properties cease to exist; because they remain properties only while he is an organized being.

ALVIRUS N. HITCHCOCK.

[We think it proper to say 'the soul is mortal,' just as we say 'mortal life,' or 'immortal life.' ED.]

A Substitute For Work.

"Talk." A pleasant substitute for work. It has been well tried and seems to be considered satisfactory and a success. In olden times the silent workers were the most successful, but with not a few now it is talk, talk; this is their business, and in this way only are they mechanics, lawyers, scholars, farmers, etc., and by this easy process do they purchase, sell and pay their debts. Young "Do-Nothing" is smart enough in this way, and for years has clerked and farmed with his talk, and this year, I suppose, will in the same way cultivate fifty or one hundred acres. Some of us fear that as usual, the crop will, be on his tongue and not in the field—still he can talk on and make his usual crops. Uncle Josiah liked it so well, that he tried it until he died at sixty very poor; his sons, however, were silent workers, grew rich and became useful men.

Two suggestions have been made with regard to this class; one that the Secretary of the Interior put a heavy tax on all the talkers; and the other, that they should be settled in a body somewhere West on the Pacific Railroad—and then let them talk.

Scripture Reading.

The daily, regular, and solemn reading of God's holy word by a parent before his children is one of the most powerful means to direct them to Christian life. It is a constant dropping, and it wears its mark into the living rock. A family thus trained cannot be ignorant of the word. Properly read, the whole Scriptures come repeatedly before their minds. The most heedless child must receive and retain some portion of the sacred word. The most forgetful will treasure up some passages of holy writ. The contrast between families thus instructed, and those where the word of God is never heard, is very striking; and he who neglects his duty does his children a wrong, and robs them of a blessing, the importance of which he can hardly estimate.

The word of God thus hidden in the heart of a child from infancy, enters into the very texture of the mind. Involuntarily its sacred teachings are recollected in after life; and though in years of manhood the child may wander wide and far, yet the recollections of the hour of prayer, the open Bible, the sacred word, read with reverent voice, the bended knee, and the earnest supplication that arose at morn and eventide, will often be a holy charm, to keep him from the paths of sin and folly, and lead him in the way of life and truth. And when, in the Providence of God, the child is permitted to take his place at the head of a new family, the memories of home and the home altar will go far toward making his house also a house of prayer, his home a place of peace and blessing.

The Prophets of Skepticism.

The Christian Intelligencer states that the prophets of skepticism were most ably handled by Rev. Dr. John Hall, in a recent lecture to the Young Men's Christian Association. He took up the philosophy of skepticism, in itself, in its pursuits, and in its ultimate results, from the earliest Christian age to the present, and clearly demonstrated its contradiction of human consciousness. He cited three or four of the leading prophets of skepticism, who have set themselves up as teachers of morals and religion, and judged them by their own standards. Voltaire, Lord Bolingbroke, John J. Rosseau and Thos. Paine were therefore selected. The social crimes of the former were too hideous to mention. Dr. Johnson rightly characterized Bolingbroke as a scoundrel, because he had loaded his blunderbuss with such blasphemous literature, and a coward, because he was afraid to fire it off himself, but gave a Scotchman a half-crown to pull the trigger when he was dead. He feared to publish his infidel works while he lived. Rosseau's moral character was even worse than Voltaire's, and though Paine did good service to the cause of republican liberty in this country, he died a miserable sot. If, according to Pope's couplet, (which the Doctor quoted,) a man's creed can't be wrong whose life is right, what, he asked, does a bad life argue? A stirring appeal was made to a large number of young men present to love their Bible, to read it carefully, and to foster Christian Associations based upon Christian principles.

Stick to the Point.

If you ever succeed as a speaker, you must learn to have some prominent point before the minds of your hearers, and then stick closely to it, and make every argument hit the point. Scattering arguments never convince any one. Preachers of the present truth need to learn this as much as any one thing. The following words are worthy of careful thought:—

"It was the conviction of my friend that what is most desired in a lawyer is a certain cool judgment, which holds on to the main point in a given case, and allows no side issues to warp the mind from an anchored position. I have heard him say, 'In the end, the lawyer who, having hit the nail on the head, keeps driving it until it is countersunk in the conviction of both judge and jury, is the leader who succeeds best at the bar of justice. I always select for my students such young men as have this quality, and I almost invariably find it lodged in minds that are inclined to stick to the point.'"

"Be Not Weary in Well Doing."

What though your efforts fail to meet
  With due approval or regard,
From those for whom you kindly strive?
  You shall not fail of your reward.
For God looks down from heaven above,
And smiles upon each act of love.

What though detraction's baneful tongue
  Your purest motive misconstrue?
Yet weary not; with patient step,
  The path of duty still pursue;
For God, the Judge of all the earth,
Knows whence each action has its birth.

And though the cold, averted eye
  You meet where once you met a smile,
Look upward, there's a Friend on high,
  Who will console your heart the while.
His heavenly smile will cure the smart,
Though every earthly friend depart.

Oh, then, commit your all to him,
  And let your chief endeavor be
His approbation to secure,
  Though earthly friends and comforts flee,
Then, though you reap but sorrow here,
There is a glorious harvest near.

A SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

BEING

A Religious Autobiography.

BY GREY QUILL.

CHAPTER VII.

I was intensely interested as you may well believe in his statements of what the Scriptures taught; for I had at last found a doctrine congenial with my first impression concerning the character of my Maker: and I was astonished that I had never thought of investigating the Bible before; but I never had. True I had read it often, had in fact committed the gospels to memory and recited them to my teacher[1] years ago. But of the doctrines therein contained I knew nothing. But first, however, I thought it advisable to carefully read the books I had borrowed. I found them written in an interesting and attractive style, and I was much pleased with the spirit manifested with the authors, and the conclusions so ingeniously drawn.

I learned for the first time[2] there was no burning hell in existence, nor ever had been, except in the visionary theories of speculative theology; and the picture they drew for the final salvation of the race, based on the goodness of God, attracted my fancy and entranced my mind. After reading them twice through carefully, I returned them with many thanks, and told the lender a great weight had been lifted from my mind by their perusal, if the Bible fully sustained the position of the writers. On that point I could give no opinion, as I had not yet given it an investigation. But I promised that I would do so and inform him of the result. He admitted he had not fully investigated the Scriptures, but thought I would find the doctrine of universal salvation abundantly sustained.

I now commenced for the first time in my life to study the Bible for myself to learn what it taught. Strange, you may say that I did not do that before. True it may appear so. But if you really think I was singular in that respect, I will agree to point you to large numbers of professors of religion, to say nothing of non-professors, in your own town, or vicinity, all of them older than I was, who have not yet read or studied it for that purpose. The truth is, the Bible is the most abused-book in existence, and is seldom read even by those who profess to believe in it, to learn what it really teaches, but is perused rather as a part of a form of worship, both public and private, or to call arguments to sustain some human creed, or theory.

I had heard the Holy Book read and preached from for many years; but what did I know about it? Absolutely nothing, so far as positive doctrine was concerned. But now, I was bound to know for myself. A good resolution, you will say. So I think. And I sincerely hope, you, my dear reader (if you have not already done so), will in that respect, follow my example.

I commenced my self-imposed task by carefully reading through the New Testament (the Old I did not examine), and marked some passages which I thought were decidedly against the Universalist belief. I then concluded, as the passages quoted to sustain it were mainly from Paul's writings, I would again read his fourteen epistles, and carefully note all he had to say about the future condition of all mankind. I performed this labor patiently, and with a sincere desire to learn the truth; and was forced to admit (rather reluctantly perhaps) he did not teach that all, irrespective of character, would be saved. True he taught that Jesus was the Savior of all men, but he also taught he was the especial Savior of those that believe; which seemed to more than intimate there were two salvations, for which I could see no necessity whatever, if the first one saved every person into a state of unending bliss.

Again, he positively declared, in substance, that some would not be saved, but in the end would be destroyed; and though I could not learn that he meant by that term an endless state of torment, yet I was sure from the context he could not, did not mean an endless condition of happiness.

Again, he clearly taught that the saints were "joint heirs" with Christ to an inheritance—not in heaven either, but on a renewed earth.

I might have got along with this well enough, if he had not further declared no less than four times, that there was a certain class, viz. the unrighteous, who would not inherit it. And, for the life of me, I could find no intimation of any place left for them in heaven, earth, or sea, and was obliged to believe he intended to teach just what he said, that they would be destroyed.

The other New Testament writers I found fully sustained Paul in these statements, and I was obliged to tell my Universalist neighbor that I was convinced the Bible did not sustain his opinion.

But what was to be done now. If I had not become a Universalist by studying the Bible for myself, I had learned certain important facts I was not before aware of, and which were far from being in harmony with the instruction I had formerly received; and I came to the conclusion that the Bible, so far as I had studied, instead of sustaining their theories, thoroughly upset them. For I had been taught that the soul was the real man and could not die; and if this was so man could not die: but Paul taught that man not only could, but in some cases surely would die forever, by being destroyed; and Jesus himself, also, taught that God had power to destroy both soul and body: and if he had the power, who dared say he would not use it, especially when inspired men more than intimated he would?

These thoughts stimulated me anew to investigation, and I was more than ever determined to know what the Bible taught on these matters, both in the Old and New Testament. But though I formed (or rather renewed) at this time a good resolution, which I ultimately put into effect, yet it was several years before I did so. This delay was owing to a variety of circumstances. One prominent cause of delay was, I left my native town and entered into another avocation, among strangers; and my mind in the mean time became to a great extent engrossed with other things. But my former resolution did not wholly fade from my memory. Occasionally I suggested to professors of religion my impressions concerning the nature of man, but always found such ideas were considered by them, without an exception, to be rank infidelity.

In the mean time I had made a profession of religion, and joined a Baptist church.[3] I selected this communion in preference to any I then knew of, because I had for many years believed that baptism in meant something more than sprinkling on water; though I confess I did not at that time understand the full import of the ordinance. I think it quite probable, also, that my choice was governed to a certain extent by my disgust of baby-sprinkling, with which I had during all my life been familiar; for I knew full well that this church would no more sprinkle a baby than they would allow a person to commune who was not of them. And I veribly believe they would have closed their doors on St. Paul, if he had not explained to to their satisfaction what he meant by saying he baptised households, and, also, have shown a good certificate of membership with a sister church.—(Concluded next week.)

[1] We were required in our village school in the summer, to commit a portion of Scripture to memory at home every day, and recite it to the teacher as soon as we entered school at 9 o'clock in the morning. I used often to commit a whole chapter to memory before breakfast, so as to be able to repeat every word of it at the appointed time.

[2] I acknowledge my indebtedness to the Universalist writers, among whom Adin Ballou and Sylvanus Cobb Sr. held a prominent place, for my first knowledge of the true meaning of the Hebrew and Greek words translated in our version, hell, grave, etc.

[3] I had heard much during my life about a change of heart as a distinct work of God, independent of the individual. I had heard many others relate their so called "experience," and speak of a special point of time when a wonderful change came over them—when from hating God they began to love him; when from loving sin they began to hate it, etc. And as this was a vital point with my Baptist friends, on which the weight of the evidence of my new birth rested, they examined me pretty closely on it. But I could find no such point in my life, for I honestly believed I had always in heart loved the true God. And I knew I had felt for many years that I was a sinner; yet, during all that time I would not, could not say I had loved sin. Nor could I tell of any point of time in my life when I did, in the sense demanded. So my "experience" was rather meager, for I could only say that by obedience to the commands of my Savior, and a full determination in the future to obey him in all things, I experienced the sweet assurance that I was his child—a love I had not realized since the days of my childhood. I considered it rather doubtful whether I should pass the ordeal in their private conference on my case; but I did, on the ground, as I afterwards learned, that my change of heart took place in early life.

Materialism as taught by Science and Revealed in God's Word.

[Concluded.]

How do immaterialists claim the Scriptures as supporting their theory? Simply upon perverted and spiritualized renderings of its truths. For instance they say death does not mean death; for that would be at war with our creed. Therefore it must mean life. And life does not mean life, but it means sometimes happiness, and at other times sorrow. Black don't mean black, but white. White don't mean white, but sometimes red, at other times green. What logic for "rational intelligences" to use.

Thank God, the Bible is not the rebus immaterialists would make it, in which certain characters and words stand for certain things, and the meaning of the whole is to be guessed out. God deals in plain and unmistakable language; and when he promises life, he means life; when he threatens death, he means death. God means just what he says when he declares man to be a mortal and material being, dependent upon his mercy for life, either in this world or the next. I choose to believe an infallible God, as the best authority on this subject, rather than the philosophy of erring man. "Let God be true, and every man a liar." (Rom. 3: 4.)

We have shown that science and scripture unite, the one in demonstrating, and the other in revealing the great truths of materialism. What science demonstrates and scripture verifies cannot fail to be pleasing to the reason.

Let us now glance at the relations existing between materialism and infidelity, since the two terms are so often spoken of together. Their relation is not so intimate as theologians who term materialism modern infidelity, would have us suppose. The relation is similar to that existing between black and white. Black is a color, and in common discourse white is a color, and in this respect they are analogous. So materialism is a belief, and infidelity, in common usage, is a belief, and in this respect they are similar. But when you approach the kind, the difference is as great in one instance as the other.

What is Christianity? Webster defines it—"The system of doctrines and precepts taught by Christ, and recorded by the evangelists and apostles." Do not materialists base their belief upon the doctrines and precepts of Christ?

What is a Christian? Webster says—"One who believes in the truths of the Christian religion, and studies to follow the example, and obeys the precepts of Christ." What is the Christian religion? Is it the creed of the Baptists, or Methodists, or of any other church? It is to be hoped so. but feared that it is not, at least, to the fullest extent. It is the truths taught in the creed of all Christians, the Bible! It is God's word, not man's opinion. It is God's truth, not the imaginations of the heathen.

Does not the materialist deduce from revelation his strongest proofs of his system? Certainly he does; and those who cry out "Infidelity, infidelity!" would do well to remember this. Then if the materialist does believe in the religion of Christ, he is a Christian, all the empty charges of infidelity made by immaterialists notwithstanding.

Next, what is an infidel? "One who disbelieves the inspiration of the scriptures and the divine origin of Christianity." Do materialists disbelieve this? Do they not base many of their arguments upon the inspiration of Job, David, and Paul? They have introduced as argument in proof of materialism passages from these just named writers, to meet which immaterialists have been driven to the ridiculous extremity of denying that either Job or David were inspired! Who, then, is the infidel, according to Webster? The one who quotes scripture, having faith in its inspiration, or he who rather than yield his error, denies his Master flatly as ever did Peter, by saying that Job and David were not inspired?

That materialism as a theory has been advocated by infidels, is not denied. But the same may be said of many of the grandest truths ever made known to man. But this fact does not invalidate the truth of materialism in the least degree. For instance the geological account of creation was met with bitter persecution on the part of Christians, because they thought it to conflict with the Mosaic account. But although this theory has been at times almost the exclusive property of infidels, it is now being generally recognized by Christians as a confirmation rather than a contradiction of the Mosaic account. Strange to say, no one charges a Christian with infidelity for believing this; although the grounds for such a charge are identical with what is considered by immaterialists a sufficient reason for branding infidelity upon materialism.

Infidelity and (what is called) orthodoxy, are the two extremes of a grand truth. The golden mean lies between the two great errors. Men always fly to either extreme before they settle upon the intermediate ground of truth.

Take from orthodoxy its weakest point—the "im" from immaterialism—and it becomes orthodoxy proper. Let Christians admit and adopt the truths that infidelity proclaims, and infidelity can but fall for want of a basis. So much for the relation of materialism and infidelity.

Let us now in conclusion notice how materialism compares with immaterialism in recommending itself to our reason for belief. Materialism comes to us with science and scripture as references concerning its truth. Immaterialism comes without science or scripture, when either are fairly interpreted. To what source is the doctrine of immaterialism traceable? Any one would naturally suppose to an opposite source to that which gives rise to materialism. And truly enough, opening the sacred pages of the Bible, there we find an account of the origin of each, and the originators are expressly named. First, we find God charging Adam not to eat of the forbidden fruit: "For in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." (Gen. 2: 17.) Then Eve, having related this to the serpent, who is understood by all to have been Satan, he says: "Ye shall not surely die." (Gen. 3: 4.)

After Adam's disobedience we find God saying to him—"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground: for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19.) Again: "So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." (Gen. 3: 24.)

Will the immaterialist please tell us how man evaded this provision of God?

Here we have the earliest account of the origination of materialism and immaterialism: one is taught by God, the author of all good; the other by Satan, the author of all evil.

Turning to history, we read—"The Egyptians were the first who asserted the doctrine that the soul is immortal." (Herodotus, p. 144.)

Justin Martyr, born fifty-six years after the cross, and martyred at the age of seventy-four, says: "If therefore you fall in with certain ones who are called Christians, who confess not this TRUTH, but dare to blaspheme the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in that they say that there is no resurrection of the dead, but that immediately when they die their souls are received up into heaven, avoid them and esteem them not Christians."

Says Eusebius, in speaking of certain Christians in the third century: "These asserted that so long as the present state of the world exists, the soul perished and died with the body: but that it would be raised again with the body at the time of the resurrection." (p. 153.)

Says Martin Luther, in his Defense (Prop. 27): "I permit the pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful, such as that he is emperor of the world, king of heaven and God upon earth, THAT THE SOUL IS IMMORTAL, with all these monstrous opinions found in the Roman dunghill of decretals." Again he says: "All souls lie and sleep till dooms-day."

Duke George writing to Duke John, Oct. 15, 1521, says: "Some deny the immortality of the soul. All this comes of Luther's teachings." In a work published in London in 1772, entitled "An Historical View" (p. 348), it is recorded that Luther "taught that souls lay in a profound sleep, in which opinion he followed many fathers of the ancient church." It adds: "The doctrine was held by the first reformers." Also: "Luther died in the faith."

Wm. Tyndale, translator of the Bible into the English language, for which he was martyred, says: "If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be." Again: "And ye in putting them in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments with which Christ and Pau' [illegible] surrection."

S[illegible] t. in advocating the unco[illegible] the dead: "It is evident that the saints and believers of old, the patriarchs, prophets and apostles, without exception, held this doctrine."

Says Bp. Tillotson: "The immortality of the soul is supposed, or taken for granted, rather than expresly revealed in the Bible."

Says Robert Hall: "I believe that man is material; that is, there is nothing more of him than what appears, and that when he dies he has no knowledge until the resurrection."

Says Abp. Whately, speaking of the natural immortality of souls: "No such doctrine is revealed to us in the word of God."

Thus we see immaterialism first proclaimed by Satan himself; next asserted by a pagan nation; thirdly introduced into the Roman Catholic church; and finally recognized as valid by Protestantism! What a pedigree it has! Has Christianity come to that pass in which she must accept a doctrine instituted by Satan in preference to that instituted by God? Must we go to the traditions of Rome, the senseless [illegible]ology of the heathen, and thence to the guardian of error for truth? Or, rather, shall we appeal directly to God, as he has revealed himself in the Bible?

We have shown the basis of materialism. Compare it for a moment with all that can justly be claimed for immaterialism. Truly the latter theory is like the house built upon the sand, and like it, it must fall when exposed to the forces of truth. Science, scripture, and reason deny it their countenance. Instead of this foundation, firm as the rock, it is based upon empty statements and bold assertions. "My word for it!" is the argument of an immaterialist. "Let us turn to science, scripture, or reason," says the materialist. Which shall we be believe? Who can but decide in favor of materialism. At least, casting away prejudice, study science and scripture, and you will assuredly come out of the study prepared to make even broader statements in favor of materialism than any made in these articles.

Thanksgiving.

Most professors of religion are deficient in this department of divine service. Even those who would follow the apostle's injunction—"Pray without ceasing," forget that he was as explicit with regard to "rejoicing" and "giving thanks." Now where is the consistency, if I enforce with great vehemence the command: "Glorify God in your body, and spirit, which are his," and do not so much as once tell wherein God is glorified? Jesus said, "herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit." Now I would not intimate, that giving of thanks, and rejoicing is all the fruit that Christians bear; but I would give place to the words of God. "Therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name;" for I read from the fiftieth Psalm—"Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me."

This portion of Christian work is not without its power and influence. The person who connects with a consistent Christian life, the habit of praising God continually, leaves the impression upon all around, that he is the happiest man in the world, and that it is religion that makes him so. All are made to feel that God is the author of his salvation, and that which gives such complete happiness is, and must be a thing of great value. Thus God is glorified in the thankofferings of his saints.

It is a noted fact, and the observation of it has fallen to most Christians, that, when the child of God is heard praising him, unbelievers are heard to say, "If I knew I should be as happy as he is, I would seek the Lord." When our influence is such, and we know that we are leading others to Christ, our own joy increases, and we feel like praising God more and more. Thus while we help on the work of God, and water others, our own souls are watered with the fresh, evergushing waters that flow from the spring of God's eternal love.

It is not only a privilege to give thanks to the name of the Lord, but it is also the duty of every Christian. If the disciples of old could ask Jesus to teach them to pray, we may ask God to teach us, not only how to pray, but how to praise him, too. The Bible should be our source of light at all times. If we are taught of God, we shall receive his word. Paul says that "The things that were written aforetime were written for our learning." (Rom 15: 4.) Then, from things that are written we may learn to praise God. I would earnestly advise that all Christians become familiar with the instances of thanksgiving recorded in the Bible; for those expressions of praise are evidently acceptable to our heavenly Father.

The song of Moses and the children of Israel after they passed the Red Sea, is a useful lesson for us to study. Mark some of the expressions (Ex. 15); "The Lord is my strength and my song, and he is become my salvation." "In the greatness of thine excellence thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee." "Who is like unto thee O Lord among the gods? glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?" "Sing unto the Lord for he hath triumphed gloriously." These are songs of salvation that. come from glad hearts, and are becoming in the lips of every lover of Jesus Christ. Oh! if we would meditate upon the wonders of redeeming love, we should be filled with such a fullness, that we would feel as though our earthen vessels would break, unless we let this rich treasure flow out in praise to God.

When David was preparing to build the house of God, the Lord gave him prosperity in the work, and he very devoutly thanked the Lord for his goodness, and said, "Blessed be thou, Lord God of Israel, our Father, forever and ever." Thine O Lord is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine. Thine is the kingdom O Lord, and thou art exalted as head over all....Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name." We are not to infer from this instance of thanksgiving, that the minister is to do all the praising God for us; for in this connection (1 Chron. 29) we read, that "all the congregation blessed the Lord God of their fathers." But hear David again, and remember that his words are inspired words, and are given to you and me: "I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth." (Ps. 24: 1.) What a beautiful example of devotion. "I will bless the Lord." "I will praise him with my whole heart."

But some man will say, Why should I praise him? Because life, and health, and food, and raiment, the earth and its treasures of gold and silver, the fields with their flocks and herds, and growing grain, the trees with precious fruit, the light of day and the darkness of night are his gifts to you: nor are the blessings of God confined to temporal things. In his infinite love for men, when they were lost, he sent his Son to save them. They were lost to themselves. The terminus of their existence was before them. In this sad state despair must have been their portion, had not God's promise elevated them to a position where hope could be enjoyed. But here the great salvation was introduced. This salvation takes men from the lowest depths of degradation to set them among princes. From the thraldom of sin and death, to peace and paradise. It finds them wallowing in debauchery and drunkenness; it leaves them equal to the angels in the kingdom of God. I inquire, then, Is not the Author of this salvation worthy of thanksgiving and praise? Oh! yes! "to him that washed us in his own blood and hath made us unto our God kings and priests," we soon shall sing. Then let us tune our harps now. Let us here begin the songs of joy that we shall never finish in Paradise.

Thank God for his Son, and for the LIFE promised through him. "This is the record, that God hath given us eternal life, AND THIS LIFE IS IN HIS SON." Then let us come to Christ in whom is life, and let us thank God for all things; for those who by their sayings of kindness or their chiding, their reproof or exhortations their writing or influence have been the means of bringing us to the fountian of life—our Savior. Let us desire his coming "who is our life." Come blessed Jesus! In the beauty of thy glory come! In the brightness of thy kingdom appear! Come thou who art glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. Bring the glad day when with immortal tongues thanksgiving shall be paid thee in the everlasting home of all thy saints!

Tenting.

Since my last letter informing you of our meeting at Fairport, "The Lord's tent" has been pitched for three weeks, nearly, at Sodus Point, N. Y. We have had excellent order here throughout, and large congregations, especially on Sundays. Brn Miles and Stevens have done the preaching, and the truth has seemed to have a powerful effect upon the people. On the second Sunday seven were baptised in the beautiful bay—all men and women of middle, or past that age, some of grey hairs. Some had not attended meetings before for several years, and one man had not for nearly thirty except funerals, and now they thank God and the old tent for salvation.

Yesterday three more young persons—all heads of families—were "buried with Christ in baptism."—'Twas a beautiful sight. Last night being our last meeting here was one of special interest. Several more arose to confess Christ for the first time, and we tarry to-day for baptism again, when it is expected that six or seven more will in this way "put on Christ." We closed up last night with a very solemn and affecting communion season.

The whole country here for miles around is deeply stirred by the old fashioned gospel, that Christ and "our beloved brother Paul" preached so firmly and positively eighteen hundred years ago. We think our effort has not been in vain, but are much encouraged to press the battle. Let all the friends of Christ pray for the tents that they may continue to carry the gospel message to dying men, and spread the glorious doctrine of Jesus' soon coming, that thousands more may prepare, as a result, to meet the Lord in peace. Yours, in the "highway and hedges." WM. E. BROWN.

[We do not know what better appeal than this could be made for our New York brethren to sustain their missionaries. Don't let them be hindered.] ED.

Advertise.

Advertise what? Why the meeting that is to be held at your schoolhouse next week. See to it that the appointment is well understood all through the community; and don't trust this work to some uninterested party who will not give the notice right. Get some of those printed notices from the TIMES office; fill them out; post one upon the school house, another on the tree by the road side; and still another on the fence at the corner. Be sure that the house is provided with suitable lamps, and, if it is cold weather, have the fire built early enough to make the house warm before meeting time. And then, when meeting begins, see to the ventilation of the room, attend to the stove, and so do the work of a sexton.

You will find that such a course will add much to the interest of the meeting. It often occurs that a meeting is a comparative failure just because the notice is not half given out, and no preparations are made to receive the congregation until they are beginning to assemble. E. T. HIMES.

Overburdened.

Overburdened is the language of many weary hearts in this world of ours, which may be read in the lines of care upon the countenance, the furrowed brows of the aged, often in the dwarfed energies of the youth. Poverty overburdens its helpless victims in the very necessities of their existence, until even that often becomes a drug to them. Wealth loads down its possessors with cares and anxieties, until their hoarded treasure scarce pays the fearful cost. The churchyard receives many a victim of overburdened life.

Here the father, in manhood's strength, has suddenly been brought, leaving family, church and state the objects of others care. Here the careworn mother has found rest, and her tasks are performed by other hands. Here the clergyman has forgotten the many calls upon his time and strength; the physician the numerous demands of exacting patients; the lawyer his clamerous clients, and members of every trade and profession here pay the forfeit of overtasked energies and swell the list of proofs, that man's powers are boundless, that though he may improve by cultivation, and extend his usefulness by using care in the exertion of his faculties, there is a limit beyond which he may not safely pass

BY ELD. FRANK BURR.

Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory. (Eph. 1: 14.)

In this Scripture reference is made to an inheritance, which is also called a purchased possession. The inheritance is said to be ours. We receive it as sons and daughters of God, being made joint heirs with Christ, in whom we are to receive it. Hence the eleventh verse declares, "in whom we have obtained an inheritance."

From the text we also gather the thought that the children of God have the Holy Spirit given them as an earnest, or evidence, of the inheritance, until the time shall come when it is to be redeemed. The time of redemption is yet future, so that from this we conclude none have yet received it. This agrees with the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, in the close of which we read of the worthies of olden time, who "received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Thus, all God's people of past and present time are to be perfected at once, when the inheritance is redeemed. A few inquiries will be profitable in this connection.

1. What is the inheritance that Christ has purchased? Ans. This earth or world, and its inhabitants. In Mat. ch. 13 Jesus speaks of a field that contained a treasure, and of the purchase of the field to obtain the treasure, evidently referring to his own work in purchasing the world as the field, (see Mat. 13: 38,) to obtain the kingdom of heaven which was a hidden or lost treasure. Adam possessed this treasure, but lost it through unbelief and disobedience, and since then violence, and sin, and death reign, instead of peace, and life. It is declared in 1 John 5: 19, that the "whole world lieth in the wicked one."

Christ purchased man with the world. The apostle says, "ye are bought with a price." (1 Cor. 6: 20; 7: 23.) This was done by Christ's death, but it is written that he "died for all," (2 Cor. 5: 14,) and that he "died for the ungodly;" (Rom. 5: 6,) therefore we conclude all mankind are the subjects of the purchase alike, but as all will not accept the proffered redemption, therefore it will not avail for all. It will avail only for those who will accept it, and "obey him."

2. How can an inheritance be said to be purchased? Ans. Christ is the "heir of all things," and an heir does not receive an inheritance by purchase. The answer is, that in this case the inheritance is under an incumbrance, and Jesus paid the price of redemption, not of possession. As the Son of God, he is the appointed heir, but to have the inheritance pure the incumbrance must be removed, and the price of its redemption must be paid.

3. What price was paid? Ans. Christ himself, to suffer and die. "The bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." (John 6: 51.) "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." (Gal. 3: 13.)

It may be asked, if Christ gave himself in the purchase, how is it that he is now free? Has the price been taken back? No. All that the incumbrance claimed has been paid, and is given into the hands of the mortgagee, so to speak. Christ threw himself into the breach to make the payment, and then, as the Son of God, received the gift of eternal life, because he was a well beloved son, and "God raised him from the dead." The demand was for the Adamic life and nature. This would pay the debt if given by one who had not already forfeited it by sin. This demand Jesus met, and paid. An effort was made by the adversary to induce Jesus to commit sin, so as to be unable to redeem the world, but it was unavailing. All the debt was fully paid by Jesus, but God's power was not impaired, and through it Jesus became the first born from the dead.

4. To whom was the price paid? Ans. To the law of sin and death. "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8: 2.) "Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." (Rom. 8: 21.) "For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth he liveth unto God." (Rom. 6: 10.) "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin." (2 Cor. 5: 21.)

Under the Mosaic law there were different kinds of offerings, such as peace offerings, thank offerings, heave offerings, sin offerings, etc. Each offering typified its own special object. In respect to the question under consideration, the sin offering typified Christ, who was made a sin offering to redeem the world. The price was not paid to God, but to the power of sin and death. The world is carnal, "sold under sin." (Rom. 7: 14.) This is a consequence of the transgression in Eden; but through the redemption purchased by Christ, the power of Satan is broken, and when the judgment sits it will be decreed that he must be crushed. But as he made every effort to thwart Christ in the payment of the price, so he will not leave without a struggle. The battle of the great day of God Almighty, and the final overthrow of Satan will close the strife.

5. When will the redemption take place? Ans. When Christ comes to rule, and to subjugate his foes, and to remove the curse from off all the earth, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin (or sin offering) unto salvation." (Heb. 9: 28. cf. Rom. ch. 8; Rev. ch. 21.) Then the chaff will be separated from the wheat. Then will be the purification, the restitution, the glory. Who of us are ready for this? Come sinner to Christ, and accept pardon, and be in him a child of God, and a joint heir with Christ to this purchased possession.

"O for a thousand tongues to sing
The great Redeemer's praise;
The glories of my God and King,
The triumph of his grace."

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 22, 1871.

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

Jonesboro, Ill., Sep. 9 and 10, as Br. Childs may arrange

Freedmen's Conference, Morgan's Point on the Mississippi River, Ark., Sep. 13-17.

After this meeting I visit Memphis, and then go to Batesville, Ark., and the White River region, to labor for a time with Br. S. Rosebraugh.

A wide door is open in the White River region among the white people. They are poor and have small means; yet the poor must have the gospel. This people lost all by the war, and have not yet recovered. But are making the best of the situation. And best of all, they want the truth on the "blessed hope." The door was opened here providentially by Dr. Fletcher, and the word of the Lord has to some extent had a free course. They have been pleading for help for two years. I shall now visit them.

After this I shall visit the churches in Michigan, as I have promised Br. Wright and others. J. V. H.

LEV. 18:29. 'For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, even the souls that commit them shall be cut off from among their people.'

Ch. 19:8. 'Because he hath profaned....that soul shall be cut off.' v. 28, 'Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead'—lit. FOR THE SOUL. The sense seems to be on account of souls that have died; for the prohibition is against the extravagant expressions of grief in which many of the heathen indulged at funerals, even to the extent of tearing the flesh, or cutting it with knives. Says Prof. Geo. Bush: 'For the dead. LE NEPHESH. This is the sense of the Heb. term in repeated instances....They were not to maim or lacerate their persons in any manner in their mourning ceremonies, as with the vain idea of pacifying or propitiating the infernal spirits in behalf of the dead, a notion very prevalent among the heathen.'

Ch. 20:6. And the soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him off from among his people.' This is a text for these times. No wonder spiritists hate the Bible.

V. 25. 'Ye shall not make your souls (i. e. yourselves) abominable by beast or by fowl....which I have separated from you as unclean.'

Ch. 21:1. 'There shall none be defiled for the dead (literally soul) among his people.' v. 11. 'Neither shall he (the high priest) go in to any dead body (lit. SOULS OF THE DEAD) to defile himself, i. e. by contact with the corpse. Once more we have dead, and hence mortal souls.

Ch. 22:3. 'That (same) soul shall be cut off.' v. 4. 'And whoso toucheth anything that is unclean by the dead (lit. soul)....the soul that hath touched shall be unclean.'

Here a LIVING SOUL touches a DEAD SOUL, or a corpse.

V. 11. 'But if the priest buy any SOUL with his money, he shall EAT OF IT.' This is a soul that may be eaten, i. e. some clean animal.

Ch. 23:27, 32. 'Ye shall afflict your souls (yourselves).' v. 29. 'Whatsoever soul shall not be afflicted in that day shall be cut off.' v. 30. 'Whatsoever soul doeth any work, the same soul will I destroy.' Destroy what? Manifestly, the person's life.

Ch. 24:17, 18. 'He that killeth any man (lit. smiteth the soul of a man) shall surely be put to death. He that killeth a beast (smiteth the soul of a beast) shall make it good: beast for beast.' [lit. soul for soul.]

This is an interesting passage in connection with Mat. 10:28, and shows that the Savior there referred to the future and not to the present life, as he does in v. 39, same chapter, and in Mat. 16:24, 25. For here the soul is smitten, and the man or beast slain; and soul for soul—i. e. life for life is required in expiation.

Let this point be clearly understood. Jesus says: 'They cannot kill or destroy the SOUL.' But inspiration declares souls are killed and destroyed by other souls, in some sense of the word. Hence it follows that Jesus used the word in another sense than what it occurs above. In Mat. 10:39, and 16:24, 25, no one can dispute that he used the term with direct reference to the future, immortal life. This establishes a usage of the word on his part, that when applied to Mat. 10:28 is in perfect harmony with the obvious purport of the passage. Comp. Lk. 12:4.

'The soul is immortal and CANNOT DIE.'—Spelling Book.

'The soul that sinneth IT SHALL DIE.'—Ezekiel.

Ch. 26:11. 'My soul shall not abhor you;' i. e. I will not. v. 15. 'But if your soul (i. e. you) abhor my judgments.' v. 16. 'And cause sorrow of earth' (soul); i. e. deep affliction of mind. v. 30. 'My soul (I) shall abhor you.' v. 43. 'Their soul (they) abhorred my statutes.' ch. 27:2. 'The persons (souls) shall be for the Lord.'

Num. 5:2. 'Put out of the camp whosoever is defiled by the dead' (lit. soul). v. 6. 'When man or woman....shall do a trespass....and that person (soul) be guilty.'

Ch. 6:6. 'He shall come at no dead body' (lit. no dead soul); v. 11. 'He sinned by the dead' (lit. soul), i. e. he touched a corpse. So the following: Ch. 9:6. And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead body (dead soul) of a man, that they could not keep the passover on that day: and they came before Moses and before Aaron on that day....v. 7. And those men said unto him, We are defiled by the dead body (dead soul) of a man....If any man of you or of your posterity shall be unclean by reason of a dead body (dead soul), or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the Lord. v. 13. But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from among his people.

Ch. 11:6. The lusting Israelites here complain, 'Our soul is dried away.' Not the immaterial, but the material souls, i. e. they complain that their bodies were wasting, their strength failing, for want of flesh as food.

Ch. 15:27. 'If any soul sin through ignorance.' v. 28. 'Make an atonement for the soul.' (i. e. the person's life.) v. 30. 'The soul that doeth presumptuously....that soul shall be cut off.' v. 31 'That soul shall be UTTERLY CUT OFF.'

'Whatever has been created, can certainly be annihilated by the power which created it. The continuance of the soul must therefore depend absolutely on the will of God.'—T. Dwight, D. D.

Ch. 16:38. 'The censers of these sinners [Dathan and Abiram's company] against their own souls.' i. e. themselves, their own lives; for their sin was 'unto death,' and they went 'down quickly to sheol,' being 'swallowed up by the earth.'

Ch. 19:11. 'He that toucheth the dead body of any man' (lit. soul). v. 13. 'Whosoever toucheth the dead body of any (lit. toucheth the dead, the soul of), that soul shall be cut off.' v. 18. 'Sprinkle....all the persons (souls) that were there.' v. 20. 'That soul shall be cut off.' v. 22. 'The soul that toucheth it shall be unclean till even.'

'Christianity treats man not as immortal, but as a candidate for immortality.'—Rev. Dr. Parker.

'Let man's union to God be lasting, and his immortality will be lasting.'—Henry Warleigh.

Ch. 21:4. 'The soul of the people was much discouraged, because of the way.' i. e. they lost heart, as we should say, or became wearied in body and mind. v. 5. 'Our soul loatheth this light bread.' i. e. it palled the appetite.

Ch. 23:10. 'Let me (MY SOUL) die the death of the righteous.' My soul, here, is rightly rendered ME. But we could just as fairly insist that Balaam here declared his soul or life should die, as can the immaterialist, that the soul of Benjamin's mother was a distinct conscious entity. The reading here is more in our favor, than it possibly can be in theirs in the other case. And that Balaam looked upon natural death as the close of his life, or soul, is evident from the expression—let my LAST END be like his. If the life of the righteous does not terminate, it has no end. In ch. 24:17, we learn that Balaam had some notion of the resurrection. 'I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh.' Hence his wish to die the death of the righteous, was because of his desire to rise again to immortal life.

Ch. 29:7. 'Ye shall afflict your souls.' i. e. yourselves.

In ch. 30 the word soul is found seven times—his soul, her soul, their souls, etc., and in each case stands for the person. The following example from v. 10 will suffice to illustrate all the remaining instances of its use: 'If she vowed a vow in her husband's house, or bound her soul (i. e. herself) with an oath.'

Ch. 31:19. 'Whosoever hath killed any person (soul).' Mark the accumulating testimony that souls may be KILLED. v. 28. 'One soul of [or in] five hundred, BOTH OF THE PERSONS, and of the BEEVES, and of the ASSES, and of the SHEEP.' Sheep, asses, and beeves, are all called souls in Scripture, greatly to the scandal of certain modern theories, whose advocates find it difficult to apply the SAME WORD to an ass, and to that immaterial, immortal, rational ENTITY in man, that possesses intellect and distinguishes him from the beast. We leave them to solve the problem.

V. 35. (Lit.) 'And the soul of man....were thirty and two thousand souls.' v. 40. 'And the persons (souls) were sixteen thousand.' 'The Lord's tribute was thirty-two persons (souls), not disembodied, however, but material persons, who were given to Eleazer. v. 46. 'Sixteen thousand persons (souls).' v. 50. 'To make an atonement for our souls,' i. e. ourselves.

Ch. 35:11. 'The slayer that killeth any person (soul) unawares.' v. 15. 'Every one that killeth any person (soul) unawares.' v. 30. 'Whoso killeth any person (soul)....'One witness shall not testify against any person (soul) to cause him to die.' v. 31. 'Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life (soul) of a murderer.'

Deut. 4:9. 'Keep thy soul diligently.'

Dr. Clark says on this passage, 'Whatever becomes of the body take care of the soul'!! But Moses means just what Peter enforces elsewhere—'Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind.' Take care upon what things you suffer your mind to rest, lest you forget the commands of God. So v. 15. 'Therefore give heed unto yourselves' (your souls); and v. 29. 'Seek him....with all the soul'—all the powers of the mind. Is it not becoming very clear that the Scriptures afford no place for the application of theological definition of 'soul'? It is like the fifth wheel to a coach, or the dust of the image in Nebuchadnezzar's dream—'No place is found for it.'

Ch. 6:5. 'And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.'

If the SOUL here is a separate entity, so is HEART, and also MIGHT. When Paul says, 'Your whole soul, body and spirit be sanctified,' a little effort suffices to make men believe he refers to three separable entities: and why? Because education has accustomed them to attach such ideas to the terms he employs that such a sense SEEMS to be natural. But there is nothing IN THE WORDS THEMSELVES, when their original meaning and Bible usage is considered, to even suggest such a thought, but much to the contrary. And if SOUL is a separate entity here, so are MIGHT and HEART entities of the same order.

Ch. 10:12. 'serve the Lord....with all thy soul.' v. 22. 'Three score and ten persons' (souls.)

Ch. 11:13. 'With all your soul.' v. 17. 'Lay up these words....in your soul.' i. e. memory, mind, or heart.

Ch. 12:15, 18, 21. 'Whatsoever thy soul (or thou) lusted after.' v. 20. 'Thy SOUL longed to eat flesh.' Surely it was not an immaterial soul that longed for a flesh diet. v. 23. 'Only be sure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life (soul); and thou mayest not eat the life (soul) with the flesh.'

'The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, and the name, are alike unknown to the entire Bible.'—Dr. Olshausen.

'In fact no such doctrine is revealed to us.'—Abp. Whately.

Ch. 13:3. 'Love God with all your soul.' v. 6 'If thy friend which is as thine own soul.' i. e. one you love as you love your life.

Ch. 14:26. 'Whatsoever thy soul (thou) lusteth after....Thy soul (thou) desireth.' i. e. what the appetite craves.

Ch. 18:6. 'A Levite....with all the desire of his mind (soul).'

Ch. 19:6. 'Lest the avenger of blood overtake him, and slay him (the soul).' v. 11. 'Smite him mortally' (in the soul). v. 21. 'Life shall go for life.' Lit. Soul shall go for soul.

Ch. 21:14. 'Thou shalt let her go, WHITHER SHE WILL.' Lit. according to the soul.

Ch. 22:26. 'As when a man riseth against his neighbor, and slayeth him.' Lit. smiteth him, the soul.

Ch. 23. 'Thou mayest eat thy fill, at thine own pleasure,' i. e. the desire of thine appetite, or, lit. soul.

Ch. 24:6. 'No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge: for he taketh a man's life (soul) to pledge.' v. 7. 'If a man be found stealing any (lit. a soul) of his brethren.' v. 15. 'He setteth his heart (soul) upon it.'

Ch. 26:16. 'Do them, with all thine heart and with all thy soul.'

Ch. 27:25. 'Cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person (soul).'

Ch. 28:65. 'Sorrow of mind' (soul.)

Ch. 30:2, 6, 10. 'With all thy soul.'

We have now traced NEPHESH through the five books of Moses, and are certainly prepared to affirm that thus far, at least, the learned Perowne, himself an immaterialist, is right when he says—'The immortality of the soul is neither argued nor affirmed in the Old Testament.' We have found souls mortal, material, dying, dead, animal, human, in birds, fish and reptile, but never one in all those that answers to the modern definition of the term. According to Lee and Drew, for instance, it is a simple immaterial substance (?), uncompounded, indivisible, indissoluble, without interior or exterior surface, is not without extension, does not weigh anything, and cannot come in contact with matter. S. S. Fitch says: 'That inscrutable and awful being, the human soul....Its food is knowledge, no man can explain, no man can comprehend it. It is an emanation from the Most High.' And he says, 'It is IMPRISONED in the dark chambers of the skull.'

And Dr. Nathaniel Emmons said (Works, vol. 2, p. 337): 'God cannot give extension, solidity and gravity to the soul, nor perception, thought and volition to the body.'

Reader, what say you to this? Does not the natural sense we have given to the scriptures quoted commend itself to your minds. On the contrary, are not these assertions of immaterialists as absurd as they are reckless?

'OUR Pulpit' will be 'supplied' next week by Eld. L. C. Collins. Text Lk. 6:46.

A KANSAS Baptist brother told us we ought to see Br. Graves reply to our review of his 'Twelve Syllogisms.' We think so too. We ought to see it. We wish we could. If published, we have no knowledge of it. If our brother will send a copy, we will pay him the retail price. We do not believe any reply has been published.

THE Unitarians in New Hampshire condemn church raffles, lotteries and similar gambling as immoral as well as unlawful. The wonder is, how any religious person or body could look at the question for a moment in any other light. Will things ever get so bad that churches will have to pronounce stealing and lying 'immoral and unlawful?'

THE New York Sunday Herald is giving place to articles upon inherent immortality, which, from their tone and flavor, are certainly the fruit of the pens of Adventists, or those closely connected with them. Those who receive the truth through this channel, may be reminded of the story of the old man who received food from some young scamps, who heard him praying for it. He insisted that 'the Lord sent it'—whatever the agency employed might have been. The story is a familiar one, and those who know it can make the application.

THE latest report of Mr. Muller's Orphan Home, states that in connection with this institution, thirty-three Sabbath-schools, nine adult schools, and ten day schools have been established. During the past year 200 children have been admitted, bringing the total number up to 2088. To assist in the work 120 missionaries are engaged. Mr. Muller is now supplying twopenny Testaments at a penny each, at which rate they may be had on application to him, in large or small quantities.

A LAND lottery association in South Carolina wants the use of our subscription list for the distribution of its circulars; and proposes to pay us in lottery tickets. It gives a list of very respectable gentlemen as 'references,' who are probably ignorant of this use of their names; and if they are, no amount of respectable endorsers can make a virtue out of the vice of gambling. From prize-packages on the cars, and ring-cakes in church fairs, to enterprises to dispose of Opera Houses, or $100,000 in gold, they are all illegal, vicious and demoralizing, and should be let thoroughly alone.

"IT costs more than it comes to." Does it? A word to you brother. Would you ever have received the Bible as the word of God with the dogma of eternal misery, as you supposed, attached to it? No, you answer. But do you not know that there are thousands like yourself all over the land—not irreligious, but only rejecting the Scriptures because of the dogmas they suppose them to contain, which are abhorent to their very nature, and which are not there. You have received the light, and enjoy peace. Will it not pay to send the light to others, to show them the way to the same blessing you enjoy? We think so. Have you done your whole duty in this matter?

THE Baptists had an Institute at Quincy, in this State, not long since. A correspondent of an eastern journal says that one D. D. (Thomas of Chicago) gave 'an eloquent, though safe and guarded discussion of the Millennium.' We understand that he preached the same to his church, and that when he got through his audience were delighted(?) at the thought that he so be-muddled the subject that they couldn't tell what he did believe about it. What is the use of words that contain no definite meaning?—Another D. D. "discussed most ably and profitably that dark, difficult subject, "The conscious existence of the wicked dead in eternal torments." 'Dark and difficult' indeed. We should think so. Untruth is always difficult to manage, and that is just what ails the dogma so honestly discussed in the above title. It is not true. As if God would make beings out of harmony with himself, and hence unfit for continued existence, to live forever! 'Dark and difficult' is orthodoxy's own epitaph upon what Prof. Barlow styles its 'favorite dogma.'

WE are invited to lend our influence, or at least give publicity, to the claims of a woman to the next term of the Presidency. We would not object to seeing a good woman in the executive chair at Washington, but we lack confidence in the parties engaged in this movement. And we are heartily sorry that Theodore Tilton has consented to associate his name with those of the notorious female brokers, Woodhull and Claflin, in a movement too evidently based on a vulgar desire for notoriety at any cost, rather than upon a principle or set of principles. We believe woman's rights in many departments of life have been ignored; but the movement on behalf of the sex is now like to be whelmed in a slough of moral filth exceedingly unpleasant to contemplate. We regard this development of loose principles, and the favor with which they are received by many, as a notable sign of the times; a token of the last days, and of the ripening of the world for judgment.

WE thought of saying something on the point, but reading the following in the Examiner, we concluded to let it speak for us:

The Tribune thinks it "remarkable, what a fast hold the destruction of the world by special act of God takes upon distempered minds." As for instance: "At Saco, Me., immediately after the earthquake, a poor, bewildered man went about the streets crying, 'Awake ye, awake; for the judgment of the Lord is upon you. Prepare ye for the everlasting fires.' "This kind of lunacy," the editor remarks, "is highly unreasonable," though it is admitted that "this general idea of the destruction of the world at some future time is doubtless based on certain Scriptural passages." Lunacy is unreasonable, no doubt, of whatever kind. But is the "remarkable" belief in the certainty of the destruction of the world at some future time a proof of lunacy? If belief in the truth of the Bible is a lunatic trait, sanity is an equivocal blessing.

—But the same Bible that declares that the earth is to be destroyed, also tells us of new heavens and earth arising from the ashes of the old. But we who believe this, are looked down upon by such as the Examiner, with as much pity as the Tribune bestows upon the subjects of 'the lunacy' it scoffs. The moral is, one may believe the world is to be destroyed, ages hence, and be sane in 'evangelical' estimation, at least; but to believe that it is to be renewed, soon, affords foundation for suspicions of lunacy.

A 'WEED' ARGUMENT.

'A. W. H.' (we will spare him the publication of his name) found a minister (we spare him, too) at work hoeing weeds out of his garden. Minister "remarked that he did not think the weeds lost anything in the fall of man." Thereupon 'A. W. H.' moralized thus: "If they did not lose anything by the fall, I suppose they will not gain anything by the resurrection of Christ. All that was not affected by the fall will not be affected by the restoration. If this idea be correct, what becomes of the Second Advent notion of the final restoration of all things in nature? Will, or not, all finally be restored to their primitive state?"

—The opponents of Adventism must be hard pushed when they can write or publish such silly objections as this. Let us look at it. A minister imagines that weeds lost nothing in 'the fall.' If that be true, the doctrine of "the restitution of all things" is exploded. Very well: but suppose it is not true—what then? The restoration of nature includes the extinction of evil things as well as the restitution of the good. Of the new earth it is true that

> "Naught unclean or hateful > Shall ever enter there."

THE CRITIC CAUGHT.

We presume the following letter was intended, not only for publication, but to deal a death blow at the interpretation of Lk. 23:29, advocated in these columns:

Editor ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES, Dear Sir: If your correspondent who has an article in TIMES of Aug. 1, headed, "Remember me!"—will read John 19:31, 32, 38, he may possibly conclude, that it was after the "two others" legs were broken that Joseph besought Pilate for the body of Jesus. His construction of "to-day"—is truly very amusing, as is his definition of 'verily.' I suppose the poor culprit would not have known, if he had not been told, but what it was yesterday, to-morrow, or next day. "The punctuation of the Bible" is not the only one, that is not inspired. Common sense does not appear to be inspired, always; neither is it always consistent. The intelligent "thief on the cross," knew he must wait till the resurrection to be with our Lord in paradise; but had to be told, that it was 'to-day" that our Lord told him? Wonder why the hour and minute were not mentioned. Our Savior does not appear to have been so definite, always, as to assure the people it was "to-day" he was addressing them. W. BUNGA.

Maple Plain, Minn.

—Those who twit others of a lack of common sense, should make a careful display of their own. Any reader of the article referred to will see at a glance that whether Joseph went to Pilate before or after the legs of the thieves were broken has nothing to do with the argument; neither does the writer affirm any thing as to the order of time in this connection.

As to the meaning of "verily," or amen, if W. Bunga, will consult any Greek Lexicon he will find it his duty to say those three hard words to utter "I WAS WRONG;" for W. Branch was right. The attempted display of wit over the application of "to-day" to the time of speaking—as if the thief did not know that that day was not the day before or the day after, is ill-considered and pointless. When an orator addressing his audience says—"Fellow citizens, I address you this day" etc. (as often occurs), he is not presumed to be insulting the intelligence of his audience.

We, also, commend the study of the following passages to our correspondent: Gen. 40: 7—"Wherefore look ye so sadly to day?" Was the captain of the guard afraid they might think he was speaking to them to-morrow? Ex. 2:18—"How is it that ye are come so soon to-day." Did Jethro imagine that they had returned so soon that they might have become confused and thought that day was the day before? Deut. 15:15—"Therefore I command thee this thing to-day," said the Lord to Israel. Deut. 30:16. "I command thee this day to serve the Lord!" Did Moses really mean that he ordered them to serve the Lord that day, and afterwards they could do as they pleased, or does "this day" refer to the time he was speaking? Deut. 4: 4—"Ye are alive, every one of you, this day." Probably (?) they knew they were alive the day before, but needed some assurance that they were alive while Moses was talking to them. See Deut. 7: 11; 8: 19; 11: 8, 32; 29: 10; 30: 16; Ruth 4: 9; Acts 26: 20; 22: 3, etc.

Finally, we remark to our correspondent, to-day, that it is well to investigate a subject before writing upon it.

MORE THAN ONE WAY.

We would not be unkind, nor unduly severe; but as we read the effusions of immaterialist pens from week to week, we cannot help being reminded of a friend of ours, who, if he has occasion to use the same word three times in one letter will spell it in three different ways. His standard excuse is, that "a man does not know much, who cannot spell a word in more than one way.

Here are a few lines, recently inspired in an immaterialist by a visit to Westminster.

The world recedes. "The one great thought is eternity." The soul,

> ——"distrammelled of dim earth,
> Doth know herself immortal."

Around us lie, in the fraternity of common dust, those who even in death rule the human race by the eloquence of genius, the force of logic, the splendor of martial prowess. Where are they now? What has become of the poet's vivid love of beauty? of the philosopher's ascent of science? of the prelate's ambition, the monk's devotion? From the pious Edward to the last beloved Albert Edward, all who have truly loved the Lord Jesus and form part of his "mystical body" have passed on into the communion of saints, of which the hope has for as many ages been repeated in these venerable walls. Is there no influence lescending from the hight where they now rejoice over every pain endured, every principle vindicated, every sacrifice made?

—The answer to the question, 'Where are they now?' is spelled in wo ways. They "lie around us in the ommon fraternity of dust;" but they ave also "passed on into the commuion of saints....the hight where they ow rejoice," etc.

If we should ask a fellow traveler of mutua friend—"Where is he?" and he reply should be—"He is in Boston, a splendid mansion in Chicago," he reply could not be more intensely bsurd than the continually recurring thodox declaration that the dead well in the dust and in heaven at the me time.

THE WORK OF DISTRIBUTION.

A brother in New England, Prof. J. Huber, one of the most zealous act and book distributors, makes ese remarks in a recent private letr:

I have distributed all but three of e fifty copies of Br. Whitmore's cellent work on Immortality, most clergymen of different denominations; d I hope some of them, at least, will open to conviction—and able to [illegible] willing to embrace and proim the truth.

I have supplied all the clergymen the city, the University and the eological or Divinity school, not ly with Br. Whitmore's work, but o with various pamphlets and tracts the great subjects of life and death, d the second advent of our Lord and fe-giver, so as to leave them with- excuse, or at least not to have it ur through my neglect, if any of them uld fail to see the glorious light ning upon those blessed truths.

I wish to get other fifty copies of mortality, and will send you the ney therefore, by the time you will ve the second edition ready.

The reception I meet with in my deavors to spread the truth is ried as you may suppose, even as it s in our blessed Savior's time, and s been ever since, and especially so these last days, when the people's nds are turned unto fables, and men ve itching ears, and an unwillingness come to the light, lest their deeds of conformity to the world in its fashions, principles and maxims should be reproved. Yet I hope, by the blessing of God, some of the precious seed scattered in his name will fall and sink into good ground, and spring up and bring forth fruit to his glory.

May we, therefore, not be weary in well doing, but be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord, and that in due time we shall reap, if not an abundant harvest, yet a most glorious reward, if we faint not.

—Truly it is no time to grow weary or faint in our minds, or slack our hands in our work. To do more should be the determination of every soul convinced of the truth—the fulness of the doctrine we proclaim. And we feel encouraged by the sympathy and example of such workers as Br. Huber, May the number be multiplied.

MISSOURI AND IOWA.

Friends in all the region of S. W. Iowa and N. W. Missouri should remember that there is to be a campmeeting in that section for their especial benefit; that it is the first of the kind so far West, and that a general rally will make it a grand success. Do not fail then to go and be there early, and remain until the close of the meeting.

ELD. L. C. COLLINS, will be present to aid in preaching the word; and those who remain away will miss a rich feast, and fail of that confirmation in the faith they may receive by attending.

QUERIES.

C. C. R. "The spirits of just men made perfect" (Heb. 12: 23), should undoubtedly be referred to the resurrection. In ch. 2, Paul says of all the worthies preceeding his time, that, "they without us should not be made perfect." (v. 40.) He then (ch. 12) cites Jesus as an author and finisher of our faith; exhorts to patience and endurance, in view of the reception at last, of "the kingdom which cannot be moved; which he elsewhere tells us is to be given at the appearing of Jesus. For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Not that we go to heaven to it, but it is to come. "The tabernacle of God shall be with men." (Rev. 21.)

What difference does it make to Christians when Christ comes? We need not bother ourselves to know, for he says, he comes as a thief in the night

If we go to Christ at death, it makes no particular difference when he comes. But as that is not the case, and our only opportunity of seeing Christ for ourselves is by virtue of his return to earth, if we love him, we cannot help watching, and longing for his coming. and this is just what he tells us to do. When he says he comes as a thief in the night, he adds, Watch, therefore! Peter says we should haste unto the day of God. Job says: "My reins are consumed with earnest desire for that day. (See Margin, ch. 19: 27.)

What good does the preaching of the second coming of Christ do? Christ taught his disciples to preach repentance and not his second coming. And [illegible] his example, and preach Christ, and [illegible] theological questions.

A brother says that these assertions have been urged upon him, and asks what he should say in reply. We answer, it is impossible to preach repentance, intelligently, without teaching theology. If we teach repentance men will ask, "what for?" And the Bible answer is—"Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world." So we have the judgment, which synchronizes with the advent, introduced at once. Neither is it true that Christ by precept or example taught 'repentance' only, and avoided 'theological discussions.' He refers to his coming again and again and again, as do all the New Testament writers. One verse in thirty refers to the Advent, judgment, resurrection or restitution. We get an idea of Paul's preaching on this topic from 1 Thes. 1: 9, 10, where he says a whole church are waiting for Jesus to come from heaven. Would they have been thus waiting if Paul had not preached 'the second coming of Christ?' Surely not. And it is equally sure that it is safe to follow Paul's example, and not only preach the coming of Jesus, but make the entire gospel hinge upon it, and the resurrection, as he does in 1 Cor. ch. 15.

1. We sometimes hear it said that "we will not have the blood-life in the kingdom of heaven." Upon what Scripture is this opinion founded
2. Will the just and unjust be resurrected mortal or immortal?
3. Will the judgment be past or future when the saints are caught up to meet the Lord in the air?

W. W. S.

Life is life: the only distinction made is in the length of its continuance. Now the seat of life is in the blood, which is corruptible. Hence "flesh and blood" are used as a metonymy for mortality, or mortal corruptible man. When we have immortality in a spiritual body, our life will have another seat than blood.

2. Paul says (1 Cor. 15: 52) that the saints ("we") "shall be raised incorruptible." This agrees with Gal. 6: 7, 8. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap. He that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Hence we conclude the righteous will be raised immortal, and the wicked mortal.

3. The judgment so far as decision goes, will be in the past; the execution of the decision will be in process.

Neck Twisting in Church.

There are practices tolerated in religious congregations which Christians who are jealous for the honor of their Master's house should utterly condemn. Decorum is the handmaid of devotional feeling, and for this reason the house of God should never be disturbed by the slightest approach of irreverence.

"It is a part of my religion," said a pious old lady, when asked why she went early to church; "it is a part of my religion not to interrupt the religion of others." And we believe if many a country congregation made it a part of their religion not to twist their necks almost out of joint to witness the entrance of every person who passed up the aisle during service, it would be better both for their necks and their religion.

A gross abuse of religious decorum sometimes needs harsh medicine as a remedy. We give that adopted by Henry Clay Dean, who was at one time Chaplain of Congress. The anecdote is from the Pacific Methodist.

"Being worried one afternoon by this turning practice in his congregation, Mr. Dean stopped in his sermon and said:"

"Now, you listen to me, and I'll tell you who the people are as each one of them comes in."

He went on with his discourse, until a gentleman entered, when he bawled out like an usher, 'Deacon A—— who keeps the shop over the way,' and then went on with his sermon. Presently another man passed up the aisle, and his name, residence, and occupation were given; so he continued for some time. At length some one entered the door who was unknown to Mr. Dean, when he cried out, "A little old man with drab coat and an old white hat; don't know him—look for yourselves.' That congregation was cured.

Br. Sheldon has calls from Tennessee, Alabama, Virginia, Georgia and Missouri, besides the urgent call from South Carolina; and, we may add, a later call from California. --- Brazil is moving for the emancipation of her slaves.

--- Japan has experienced a terrible typhoon, in which 400 souls are said to have perished.

--- The accounts of the famine in Persia are confirmed, spite of the denials of Persian officials. At Khorassan alone, 18,000 souls have been swept off.

--- The infamous Coolie trade has been pronounced illegal by authorities in China. Let England and the United States now act in harmony, and this modern slave trade can be put down.

--- The final settlement of the Alabama question is to be by a mutual conference of referees at Geneva. Charles Francis Adams will represent the United States, and Earl Russell, England.

--- A meeting comprising forty delegates from various parts of Germany, Austria, and Switzerland met at Heidelburg Aug. 6, to arrange for a new German church. They are Romanists, and are divided in opinion as to acknowledging even the primacy of the Pope. They meet again in Munich, in September.

--- It is not a great while since sermons were advertised for sale, in England. The increase in the number of such advertisements, testifies to the growth of business. One man offers four hundred for twenty-five dollars. The average price is from twenty-five to forty cents.

--- Every day has a fresh rumor about the Pope. He is going somewhere, from Rome, or he is not going from Rome. The latter statement is undoubtedly the truth. We have no idea that he will leave the ancient seat of his anti-christian system. Let rumors to the contrary pass for what they are worth.

--- An outburst of the volcano Ruwang was accompanied by a convulsion of the sea, and a wave forty yards in height swept all human beings, cattle, and horses from the small island of Tagalonda, in the Malay Archipelago, about fifty miles northeast of the Island of Celebes. The number of persons who perished is stated at 416.

--- M. Lesseps says the Suez Canal is all right, except in one thing: it does not get business enough to pay expenses. But more and more vessels pass through it every year, and it may yet pay. Some enthusiasts thought it was a harbinger of the revival of the importance of Palestine and the return of the Jews. How absurd!

--- Britain's gratulations over her escape from such ebullitions of Irish feeling as recently disgraced New York, were too early. Dublin was the scene of a disgraceful riot, provoked by the government during the late visit of the Prince of Wales; and since then Londonderry has been the scene of Orange and Catholic fights. Now things are quiet again—as a volcano is quiet.

--- A letter from Iceland last summer speaks of unusual heat there—68 to 70°. Some of the larger glaciers were quite melted away. It is also reported that at Spitzbergen the climate has been so modified that the Swedish Government proposed to establish a colony there; but Russia objected. The change at the latter place is attributed to an alteration in the course of the Gulf Stream, which may affect Iceland, also.

--- Prince Bismark has declared war on the Papacy, and is carrying on the campaign with all his accustomed vigor, and even more than his customary tact. It is of exceedingly little use, as far as the influence of the Papacy is concerned, to fight it with material weapons. To wound her effectually it is necessary to wound her spiritually, and it is this, unless we misread his decrees, that Prince Bismark with his characteristic boldness is attempting to do.

--- The London Times Eastern Correspondence reveals the fact that with all Russia's pretended friendship for the Turks, the old policy of exciting hostility against the Mohammedan is persistently maintained. This is done by means of the leading Russian journals, which relate all manner of calumnies, and perhaps exaggerated facts concerning the treatment of Christians within the Sultan's dominions. The Czar means to have his people ready to follow him to the Golden Horn when he is ready to march.

--- If the World's correspondence can be depended upon, Dr. Dollinger is very far from being a Luther—he resembles rather Erasmus, possessing much more learning than backbone. He insists that he intends to cause no division in the Romanist ranks, and has no sympathy with schismatics. We do not see how he can help causing division unless he ceases to tell the truth. The Pope can't renounce his claim to infallibility: nor can Dollinger answer his own arguments against that claim. How then can an irrepressible conflict be avoided?

--- It is now certain that after the reverses to the French arms at Woerth and Sedan, Russia proposed to interfere in the contest, and effect peace without the loss of territory to France. But the revolution at Paris, the overthrow of the empire and establishment of the republic caused the Czar to change his mind, and allow events to take their course. This explains Thiers' mysterious mission to St. Petersburg. And it is said if he had arrived in that city a little earlier, even then intervention would have been effected. His delays were fatal.

--- One would think that the terrible storm of war of the last year would have cleared the European sky of its clouds; and we should now be enjoying the 'calm after the storm.' But instead of this we have a lowering threatening sky, with looming portents of future tempests. Russia is pushing improvements in her military system with the utmost vigor. Depots are being established, and army corps trained in laying temporary railroads for military purposes. Russia means to carry out the traditional policy of the empire. Some political prophets see a coalition of France and Russia on the one hand and Germany and Austria on the other.

--- There can be no doubt that the cholera is on its march Westward. It has been for some time shut up in Poland; but now is approaching railway and steamship centers, whence its march may be only too rapid. It has appeared at St. Petersburg, Berlin, and Vienna. We may escape this fall, but another year is apparently destined to behold its ravages in our midst. Temperance in all things, and cleanliness are the best preventatives.

—Since the above was written, we hear of the appearance of the cholera at Paris and at London. It may travel Westward even faster than the worst fears of any.

--- It is very propable that we may yet hear more of the fierce revolutionary elements banded in what is called the Commune. The Nation thus describes their principles: "Their real creed, which was temporarily kept in the background to avoid creating too great a panic in the city, and on which the Communal Government in Paris was to be based, in case they had triumphed, included the total denial of the existence of God and of a future life, the prevention of any religious observances, and the treatment of priests and ministers; the abolition of marriage, and the substitution of temporary connections, based on the inclination of either of the parties; the rearing and education of children by the Commune as in a vast foundling hospital; the outlawry of all persons not living by the labor of their hands, or in other words, the creation of an aristocracy of ouvriers; the expulsion of the literary or educated class from all places of trust or dignity; the substitution of 'natural justice,' in the courts of law for all artificial systems of jurisprudence; the appropriation of all property to public use, and the provision of labor for all persons able to labor, and support for those who were not able, out of the public purse."

--- England can by no means escape the universal latter-day agitations and revolutions. The late action of the House of Lords in rejecting the reform measures of the lower House, led Gladstone to advise the Queen to make an exhibit of the royal perogative, such as has not been known for years. The Lords resented this as 'unconstitutional,' besides being an insult to that body. But this has only renewed agitation of the question—"Of what use is the House of Lords?" And that body is freely advised by both influential men and journals to keep very quiet, or it may rouse a feeling that will culminate in a revolution and remove it entirely from the British Government. Come what may; all acknowledge that Gladstone's bold stroke marks a new era in English history. Palmerston predicted that Gladstone would 'ruin' England; and there are not a few who imagine the shrewd old man will prove a true prophet. Others see in the present aspect of affairs a sign of the approach in that country of the anticipated golden age of equal rights enjoyed by all—a political dream destined to be as delusive as its sister delusion—the temporal millennium—has proved to be in the church.

--- Under the heading "A New Volcano," the Hallische Zeitung publishes a letter from Gustav Wallis, under date of Manilla, the 24th of May, from which the following is an extract: "What has been looked forward to for a long time with anxious forebodings, the outburst of a volcano, has at last occurred, in a sad and unexpected manner. The island of Camiguin was the scene of this frightful event. For some months back the inhabitants of this island, as well as those of Bojot and Cebu, had been alarmed by repeated shocks of earthquake, and with an increasing anxiety they awaited a catastrophe which would put an end to the general alarm. Camiguin had been gradually deserted by most of of its inhabitants, although the fugitives found their position in the neighboring islands little less perilous, every district having been more or less affected by the heaving of the ground. At last, on the 1st of May, about 7 o'clock in the evening, a rumbling like thunder was heard from a mountain near the village of Catarmin, interrupted by a few violent shocks which rent the air with reverberations, and which steadily increased in strength until at last the ground burst asunder, and an opening was left 1,5000 feet long. Smoke and ashes, earth and stones were thrown up and covered up the surface of the ground far and near. Then succeeded a long pause, but only to be followed by a still greater throe of nature. About 7 o'clock, as darkness was approaching, the explosion came, followed by a shower of fire. Sad to say, about 200 persons, who tempted by curiosity, had thoughtlessly collected around the crater, were buried under the matter which fell. At the time of sending off this letter fifty dead bodies had been extricated. The woods over a large area caught fire, and the flames, spreading rapidly and with much smoke, drove men and cattle before them.

From the astronomers, by Prof. Struve of Pultowa, we hear that Saturn has lost one of his celebrated rings. Not long since it closed upon the body of the planet, forming a belt, which was diffused over its surface, so that there is now no trace whatever of the ring left. Is this to be the fate also of the other rings? or will they ultimately gather into satellites, as has more commonly been supposed?

--- Some laborers engaged in digging a ditch on a farm near Plattsville, in Clarke County, Ohio, have unearthed a portion of the skeleton of a mammoth of gigantic and unparalleled proportions. Among the bones were two tusks, eleven feet and eight inches in length. They bore the appearance of having been broken off, and with the discovered fragment must have measured twelve feet in length. Their diameter at the base was seven inches. Several teeth of the monster were also found, measuring nine inches in length, and as thick as a man's arm.

Mr. C. F. Varley, who informed us of the fact, broaches the novel speculation that some earthquakes may be due to subterranean lightning. He imagines that as the hot center of the earth is approached, a layer of hot dried rock may be found which is an insulator, while the red hot mass lower down is a conductor. If this conjecture be true—and there is plausibility in it—then the world is an enormous Leyden jar, which only requires charging to a moderate degree to be equal to the production of terrific explosive discharges.—Nature.

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

SENECA, KANSAS.

Thursday, Aug. 3. Held a conversation of some hours on the state of the dead, with W. E. Stewart, pastor of the Congregationalist church. He introduced the subject, and wished my reasons in support of my doctrine. I found him to be a candid and fair man. So I took the English Testament, and he the Greek with Robinson's Greek Lexicon, while I led off in the discussion, by giving the principal proof texts for our faith.

1. I showed him, in general that both the Old and New Testaments in a large number of passages teach the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. The question was, what do sleep and destruction mean? Sheol (Gr. Hades) is the only place of the dead, between death and the resurrection. And sheol is not spoken of as a place of punishment in either of the sixty-four times it is used in the Old Testament; but is declared to be a place of silence and unconsciousness. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in (sheol) whither thou goest." And the "dead know not anything." (Eccl. 9: 5-10.)

Hades, in the New Testament is not a place of consciousness. In the ten times it is used it does not mean a place of consciousness, but of sleep, or repose. In the parable of the "Rich man," however, it is said, "In hades he lifted up his eyes." But this view of hades was of heathen origin, a myth used by the Savior, not to give sanction to heathen mythology, but to reprove Jews.

I showed next that tartarus (2 Pet. 2: 4) had reference to the fallen angels, and not to men; and, finally, that gehenna, was the only place of punishment for the wicked: and the punishment of gehenna is according to our Savior the annihilation, or destruction of soul and body. (Mat. 10: 28.)

After a discussion and critical examination of the main texts on these questions, Br. Stewart cordially owned that we had a fair show of argument. Our theological students are blinded by Platonic philosophy. They read the Scriptures on the nature of man, and his final destiny, through Plato's old spectacles. When these are taken off, they read aright.

At the close of our discussion Mr. S. invited me to occupy his chapel, at my convenience.

Friday, Aug. 4. Assisted Eld. Stewart at a funeral. A mother had died suddenly. How little we know of what is before us. While many strangers sympathized, I could but feel deeply for the sad husband, sitting alone in the mourner's seat, having no relative in town. He was pointed to the resurrection for consolation. In visiting, I find some who sympathize in the truth.

Saturday, Aug. 5. Had a conversation to-day with a minister on the vision on the Mount of Transfiguration. He contended that Moses and Elias were there in person, and this was the first time he had ever heard it disputed! I stated the case as follows: What did the Savior promise to show to the disciples? Ans. 1. "There be some standing here that shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." (Mat. 16: 28.) 2. This kingdom would be set up at his second coming. "He shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom." 3. The kingdom he was to show them, was not the literal kingdom, but a picture or vision of what should come in the end of the world. Christ was changed in his appearance. His face shone like the sun; his raiment was white as the light. Moses and Elias appeared to them, talking with Christ. A bright cloud overshadowed them. A voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son."

The disciples had now seen the Son of man coming in his kingdom, in the vision. And the appearance was so overpowering that they "fell on their faces and were sore afraid." (Mat. 17: 6.) Jesus touched them, and said, "Arise, and be not afraid. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only." And Jesus now appeared as usual. The brightness of his countenance had changed back. His garments like the light, had also assumed their natural appearance. And he with his disciples went down from the mountain. What they had seen, greatly impressed them, and would naturally become a topic of conversation; but while descending, Jesus charged them, saying, "Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." (Mat. 17: 9.)

It being a vision, it was not necessary for Moses or Elias to be there in person.

He said he had always thought that Moses and Elias were really there, and even now could not give it up. I replied that the theology of the times sustained his view, but the word of God did not.

In looking over the two volumes of Henry Cowles D. D. on Ezekiel and the minor prophets, I found several things that are worth a passing notice.

First, the Miller excitement in 1840-3, roused him up to write his work. So Mr. Miller did this much, at least, to wake up a sleeping watchman. Secondly, he says that the followers of Mr. Miller assumed that the Lord, in answer to their prayers, taught them by the inspiration of his Spirit how to interpret prophecy infallibly! With their views of this divine teaching they supposed they could dispense with the natural means of ascertaining the sense of a written prophecy, being lifted at once above the labor of thought and study upon the laws of language and the principles of interpretation."

This statement I have no need to correct for those who have read the writings of Father Miller, Fitch and others. But for those who have not read our early Advent writings, I will here say that the statement is utterly, and I fear willfully false. How Mr. Cowles could make such a statement we cannot divine. Father Miller was always opposed to the idea of modern inspirations, and the infallibility of any class of prophetic interpreters. And neither he nor his associates claimed any such things as are asserted of them.

After giving a further ridiculous account of the Adventists, and their faith and hope, Mr. C., gives his views of the prophecies of Daniel. Among his wonderful expositions we find these; that the iron section of the image of ch. 2, and the terrible beast of ch. 7, symbolize Greece. And that Antiochus Epiphanes, of the little Syrian kingdom, was the little horn of the prophecy—a bundle of absurdities seldom paralleled. Then, to finish up Mr. Miller he declares the year day theory to be "a castle in the air." But he admits the seventy weeks of Dan. 9: 24 to be weeks of years. He says: "Strike down the day-for-a-year link, and the whole system of Millerism vanishes into the air." Exactly. And strike down the Scriptures, and Christianity vanishes the same way. The difficulty is, to put them down. And we may ask in this case, what is to become of the sixty-nine weeks, that give us the time of the birth of Jesus. (Dan. 9: 25.) In "striking down" the year day theory, does he not strike that down too. He ought not to be so anxious to kill "Millerism," as to destroy one of the bases of Christianity.

Mr. Cowles became greatly incensed against the Adventists in 1842, in a discussion with the gifted Chas. Fitch, at Oberlin; and the bitterness then imbibed runs through all his writings on the subject of prophecy since that time. Such opposers cannot shake our confidence in our hope.

Sabbath, Aug. 6. I spoke in the Congregationalist house. Had a good audience, of the intelligent and leading men of the place. I gave an exposition of the prophecies of the first and second advents of our Lord. Some received the word and gave me words of cheer at the close. At night I spoke on the signs of the times, relating to the coming of Christ, and cleared my skirts from responsibility by plain testimony.

At the close the pastor gave notice that he would speak next Sabbath on the immortality of the soul, and conscious existence of the spirit, in death, and on the annihilation of the wicked. I had not referred to these subjects in my sermons, but it seems they will discuss it anyhow, and light will increase. My visit with Br. Wilkinson and family in this city has been a very pleasant one. I have taken a little rest, and am ready for the work before me.

SENECA.

"Beautiful city of the plain," was laid out in 1857, by R. U. Torrey and Samuel Lappin. It is situated on the St. Joseph & Denver City R. R., on the west side of the Nemaha river, on a gentle acclivity toward the west. It occupies a tract of land three-fourths of a mile square, containing 360 acres, making the streets, which are laid out at right angles, three-fourths of a mile long, some of which are built upon the entire length, and look very pretty. It has a population of nearly 1200 active, energetic, progessive people, from all parts of the East. The state of society is good, as is evidenced by the churches and schools. The Congregational, Universalist, and Catholic churches are completed, while the Methodist is just commencing to be built. The public school building, very centrally located, is built of stone, at a cost of $16,000. Four free schools, including a German department, are maintained here ten months of the year. The government of Seneca is that of a city of the third class, and the order kept is a credit alike to the officers and citizens. The Courier, edited by Root & Wilkinson, is an excellent weekly journal, one of the best in the State.

KANSAS.

My third visit to Kansas is now closed. I have surveyed the field, and found out what can be done, in case ministers can be obtained to do the work. It is missionary ground. Some churches have been organized, and isolated brethren have been visited, and helped. The field is a glorious one, for doing good; and the whole country is like a garden for homes for the landless and the poor. In saying this, I do not mean that it is a Paradise. It has like all other countries its disadvantages, and people here have their trials like those in the rest of the world. Sin is here, and all the evils of the fall. But if sin and death and the curse were not here, it would be something like Paradise.

Monday, Aug. 7. Set my face toward the East, via St. Joseph, Mo. Just as I was leaving, invitations and new openings for meetings were urged upon me, where they want light. I could spend the next six months in this portion of the State, and have continually increasing work. A wide door is open.

While waiting for the cars I had a very interesting conversation with R. M. Bartlett, the Universalist pastor in Seneca. He is from the East, and a very intelligent, and good man. But he like most of the Universalists is practically a spiritist. They have no faith in the literal resurrection of the dead, and their view resembles Swedenborgianism to some extent. This testifies a wonderful revolution. The Fathers of American Universalism taught the literal resurrection of the dead. Now nearly all their reputed followers deny this, and call their decline from a great truth, progress.

I feel to thank the Lord for his wonderful goodness to me, every day, while I contemplate the glorious plan of mercy, and behold the bright shining light of his word. Well does it become a light to our pathway, when we are prompted by love, and take hold of the precious doctrine of Christ, and believe that he is our great Life giver. It is blessed to know that Christ is our life, and through him we shall be ourselves in the kingdom of God.

This strange subterfuge—a conglomeration of Christianity with Platonism, becomes more and more ridiculous to me. How is it that men of good sense can swallow the pill of immaterialism with all its incomprehensibility, is a mystery I can hardly solve. And why they should claim belief in their dogma a necessity to men's salvation, I cannot see. A mortal man cannot be saved, an immortal one can! I wonder! Is it not God through Jesus Christ able to bestow immortality? or must man have it in and of himself Then Christ is not our Life giver. He did not bring life and immortality to light through the gospel; and we need not seek for it, as we have it independent of Christ.

The gospel plan of salvation adds magnificence and glory to the crown of our Savior; showing that he could and did reach down to mortal men and become a sufficient Savior and Redeemer. There is beauty in this, and it displays a love and power worthy of the Son of God. I can comprehend something of this plan, the other I cannot. Hence if I am ever saved, it will be upon this one. I am mortal and need a Savior. There is one provided that meets my case. I accept, and am saved.

In the southern part of Iowa Br. Baldwin and myself are contending for the gospel as best we can; and by the goodness of God the truth is taking hold of the hearts of some of the people. The ministry are doing what they can to shut out the light, and they will hinder many, and, it may be, shut them out of the kingdom; and they the professed friends of Jesus! The hymn book is quoted to prove man immortal, for the Bible does not teach it. Poor men! May the good Lord open their eyes. Oh! that men would leave tradition and accept of Christ and his word for salvation.

From A E Babcock, Jonesville, Mich.

Our meeting at Rockbridge Ohio, was a time of refreshing, and God was with us to bless. The brethren have put up a neat little chapel, all finished, and at the time appointed we dedicated it to the service of God, free for all God's children. Many people were present, and truly it was a time of deep interest. We have now got the ears of the people, and any judicious man, without hobbies can do them good and they will be kindly received. I baptised five while there, and eight were added to the church; and before our meeting closed, they voted to have me come back again, about the middle of November, to tarry with them for a time, of which due notice will be given in The Times.

The truth has taken deep root in many hearts, and, I trust, ere long will cause them to break forth in songs and praise, to the Father and Son. Amen.

From A M B Graham, Flint, Mich.

I am glad that the Lord has favored me with health, thus far, which enables me, by his grace to perform the duties devolving upon me. There is not much interest in the cause here. I have visited several families of like faith that reside in the country. Some years ago a church was organized at Grand Blanc, about eight miles south of Flint, but there is nothing left of it now. I tried to get a chapel to preach in at Grand Blanc, but it was refused. The doors of the Baptist church at Whigville were opened a week ago last Sunday. I shall speak there every two weeks, as long as the door is open. I have also preached at the Bently S. H. about four miles east of Flint. I am in hopes of organizing a church there. The interest is good. Praise the Lord!

Last Thursday evening I had the pleasure of meeting with the Lapeer Church. I found many dear brothers and sisters there, some of whom I met for the first time at the Jackson camp-meeting. Among them was Eld. Burtenshaw of Ortonville, who requested me to speak to them, which I did from Col. 3: 2. On Saturday Br. Mackie began a series of meetings, assisted by Br. Burtenshaw, in a grove some seven miles from Lapeer. May the Lord bless them in their labors.

I think the cause will advance after a little. Next winter I should like to have a series of meetings held in this city. Being young in years and in experience as well, I do not like to begin such a meeting alone in a place like this, and am in hopes that some of the more efficient laborers will tender their services for a short season The waves of opposition roll here, as in other places; but I will, by the help of the Lord, "Stand the storm, it won't be long, we'll anchor by and by." Pray for us.

From Br. Wm. H. Hulls, Rockbridge. Ohio:

Since I wrote last we have had refreshing times from the Lord. Br. Babcock commenced a meeting July 13, which ended the 23. He labored in earnest. We believe him to be a gentleman as well as a Christian. We know him by his fruits. Sheaves have been gathered. Christ has been magnified, and God has been honored. The walls of tradition have been shaken; the devil's lie has been rejected. Faith in everlasting misery is giving way, and prejudice is tumbling down. Sinners are coming to Christ that they might have life.

Blessed be the God of heaven and his Son, Jesus Christ; for through them and by their power the glorious work goes on. Much has been done for us in the cause of Christ, within the last three years When I review the past, my heart has been made to melt with the love of God.

We have been cast out, as evil-doers, from the U. B. Church, for our faith in the unconscious state of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. I remember the day well when we had our trial. The house was full. The preacher present made fun of our faith; read to the audience from Ellen White and her visions, telling the people that was our faith. We denied the charge, but he said he knew better than we did. He laughed at us because we believed the coming of Christ to be near. He told us to send off to our preachers and find out when Christ was coming. My brother arose and told him, with tears in his eyes, that he had the power to blot our names out of the church book, but thanked God he had not the power to blot them out of the Lamb's book of life. The preacher said he doubted whether they had ever been written in the book of life.

Before he took the vote he told the members he wanted them to show themselves; and be brethren. So when the vote was taken, the majority was against us, and our names were cancelled. While I pen these lines I feel like asking God to remember it not against them; for it may be that they knew not what they were doing.

Here we were; had no home, after we had lent a cheerful hand in building their chapel. Yes we were cast out, as was done to others in old times. But we were not without that friend who sticketh closer than a brother; no, not without hope, and the word of God. We read the word and called on God to bless us as we assembled at private houses. They mocked us, laughed at us, and said, the devil had meetings at such a place. But who can withstand the great I AM?

Last Sabbath five more were baptised and eight added to the church. On our church book we can read thirty-two names. Out of the number one faithful brother lies sleeping in the dust—Br. Martin Agner. He lived faithful, and died a Christian. Four others have moved away. We have a new house of worship, free for all to worship God—United Brethren not excepted. It is paid for except about $200.

I am encouraged, for I know God is with us. We have been called heathens, soul-sleepers. Sadducees, Millerites, infidels and other bad names: not by the world, but by professors; and especially by teachers who occupy the pulpit. May God have mercy upon those servants. They say the world is in its infancy; they cry peace and safety; they say "My Lord delayeth his coming!" and, "Where is the promise of his coming?" O Shepherds what are you doing on the walls of Zion? Your sheep are going astray. You keep on them heavy burdens. You are getting fat by feeding on the flock. You should feed the sheep. They are starving for food. Dear Brethren, let us pray for those dear sheep who are wandering from the fold of Christ: for our great Shepherd, the head of the Church, will soon come to gather the own to one fold, and take them from his wilderness and give them their own land.

From Amos Bailey Ancona Ill Aug 9

It has been some time since I have reported myself, but I am with you all, heart and hand, in every good word and work, and am determined to be in harmony with my constituents as long as they act in harmony with the truth; and shall try with all the powers that God has given me to prove true to my friends, true to the church of which I am a member, and, above any other consideration, true to my heavenly Father, who has done so much for me. I have worked hard this summer with my own hands, like Paul, and feel to rejoice that I have not eaten the "bread of idleness." God has given me very good health; so that I have worked in harvesting and haying; and in the meantime have been able to attend the prayer-meeting, and preach from one to three sermons every Sabbath; and have not been weary in body or mind but a very few times this season. I feel like praising God all the while for giving health, and also good, kind friends, such as I find in different parts of Livingston Co. May God recompense them.

From M E Orr, Reading, Mich.

Last Lord's day, it was our happy privilege to listen to an address by the Rev. Mr. H. who has spent some twenty years laboring as a missionary in India—His discourse was both amusing and instructive, giving a brief account of the dress, manners, and customs of the people of that country; exhibiting numerous specimens, of their implements of husbandry, idols of worship, ornaments, etc. with a detailed account of the trials and hardships, as well as some of the joys, incident to missionary life; closing his remarks with a touching appeal for aid and sympathy in carrying the gospel to those poor benighted heathen. I was not a little amused, while hearing him speak of a fellow-laborer, who, he said, was sent direct to heaved in '68.' by that terrible scourge the cholera, and who was now roaming the bright realms of glory.

QUERY: If cholera sends Christians direct to heaven, should it not be called a blessing, instead of "a terrible scourge?

Oh! when will our orthodox brethren learn to be consistent, and take the plain Bible teaching upon the condition of man in death. Job says: "Man dieth and wasteth away; yea man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? as the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down, and riseth not, till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." No where in the whole word of God, is there an intimation that Christians go to heaven at death; but, on the contrary, our Lord and Master tells us plainly, "that no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he who come down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." Which shall we believe: the record which God has given us, or the traditions and fables of men?

Minnesota Sketches.

We are now in the midst of the wheat harvest, and while journeying through the broad fields of grain, among the busy reapers, I am often led to think of the Savior's parable, where he uses these figures to illustrate the great truths that belong to this age of the world. It is a solemn thought that the reapers will soon be here, the reapers of mankind. Time has nearly ripened earth's harvest, and the sharp sickle will now speedily be thrust in (Rev. 14: 14), as the Lord of the harvest shall give the word of command to his angels, "gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into my barn." The great winepress of God's wrath will soon be the receptacle of the vine of the earth and its clusters of grapes. The wicked may boast of their luxury, progress and glory, but suddenly destruction will overtake them.

If we would escape the awful fate of those who reject God and his word, we must be faithful to our trust and let the light which we enjoy shine out clearly, making cheerful sacrifices of time and money.

In the different denominations, which have already stamped us as an infidel and heretical people, are found many Adventists, some of whom openly advocate their views, while others hold them privately. Now a judicious advocacy of the truth on all proper occasions will result in good, though it has often caused many good Christians to be cut off from the churches; but it seems to me no one can consistently close their mouths and compromise the truth by silence for fear of becoming unpopular, or of being turned out of the church. Some have at times acted unwisely in this matter, by speaking in a wrong spirit, or defending their position in an impatient manner; or sometimes resorting to ridicule, the favorite argument of our opponents. No one can be justified in such courses, but all will be justified in standing by the truth and defending it, even though it be at the loss of all things, and this applies equally to the ministry and laity.

I recently met a Methodist class-leader on the cars—J. H. of Wis.—and while the train stopped at Owatonna, we entered into a conversation concerning the cause of religion in Minnesota. On learning I was an Adventist he remarked that he also was a believer in the destruction of the wicked. The elders and brethren had tried at times to convince him that it was an infidel doctrine, but his reply had always been, 'I find it in the Bible.'

I handed him a copy of Br. Collins' new tract, stating that the author had formerly been a Methodist preacher. 'Yes,' said he, "I saw a letter concerning him and the death of his daughter in the Northwestern, from the pen of Eld. Brooks of St. Paul, I gave him the facts in this matter, as already published in THE TIMES, and he agreed with me that it was a most unkind and unchristian act on the part of Eld. B., to make the death of a beloved child the occasion for unjust rebuke concerning the doctrine which Br. Collins had conscientiously adopted, and for which the conference had already disfellowshiped him. He wants to see his Address, a copy of which I promised to send him.

On a trip up the Mississippi, while sitting in the pilot house of the steamboat I overheard a conversation, the substance of which I noted down. Two old gentlemen, one from New Hampshire and the other from Illinois, were talking concerning a Baptist preacher who had become a Spiritist. The first, whom I learned was a man seventy-five years of age, expressed great surprise that the minister should have taken such a stand, and associated himself with those who deny God, the Bible and our Savior. "Why," said he, "how different things are now to what they were when I was a young man! Then everybody went to meeting, and it was very seldom any one could be found that doubted the truth of the Bible. Now the rankest kinds of infidelity prevail everywhere."

I thought to myself, that man is a witness to the signs of the times. His statement is true.

Just then the other remarked: "We have a class down our way called "no-soulists, or Second Adventists.' They preach there will be no future punishment for sin." "Yes," said the first, "I have heard of them, and have a little book put out by a minister from Minnesota, on the punishment of the wicked. They believe they will all be destroyed after the judgment."

I afterwards asked him to let me see the book he referred to, and found he had left it at Manchester, his former home; but upon inquiry I found it to be the Address. "I consider," said he, "that it is rather a dangerous doctrine." But after reasoning awhile upon the subject, and pointing him to some Scriptural proofs of its truth, he replied, "Well, it may be true, I could really wish it were so; for that view seems to harmonize with the character of God as a being of mercy and love."

One day on the Sioux City Railroad I met with Br. C., of Pennsylvania; and although he is an Adventist he still retains his membership among the Winebrenarians. He said his mind had been settled on the life and death question ever since the discussion years ago between Elds. Storrs and Litch. From that time he had never doubted the mortality of man, his unconsciousness in death, and the destruction of the ungodly at the second advent. He also stated that Br. Marston, who has been recently turned out of their body, is only a little in advance of many others in the membership, and some among the ministry; one of whom responded to an interrogation concerning the intermediate State—"I can see a mountain we call death, and in the distance I see another which we call the resurrection; between them is a dark valley.".

While the good work goes on let us rejoice in view of speedy redemption and wait, and watch, and pray.

EDWIN T. HIMES.

How Will Jesus Come?

This question is one of great importance, and should be decided only by an appeal to the Scriptures of truth. There are many theories in the world respecting the manner of Christ's coming. All of them cannot be correct. Some think it a purely spiritual event. Many teach that he has come already Others claim that he is constantly coming—that death is the second Advent. But these are only the speculations of men. We will turn from them to the Bible, and seek there an answer to our question, "How will Jesus come?"

I. JESUS WILL COME HIMSELF, PERSONALLY!

1 Thes. 1: 9, 10: Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the the wrath to come

John 14: 2, 3: In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also.

Acts 1: 9-11: And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up,.....And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said....this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come IN LIKE MANNER as ye have seen him go into heaven.

Heb. 9: 28: Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin [a sin offering] unto salvation.

Rev. 22: 12: Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be.

1 Thes. 4: 16: For the LORD HIMSELF shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God.

II. JESUS WILL COME IN HIS GLORY ACCOMPANIED BY THE ANGELIC HOST OF THE UPPER SANCTUARY.

Mat. 16: 27: For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his father, with his angels.

Mark 13: 26: And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory.

2 Thes. 1: 7: When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels.

Mat. 25: 31: When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory.

Lk. 9: 26: Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels.

The second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ will be a glorious event. It will not only be glorious to look upon, but it will also bring glorious results to his waiting Bride. Jesus came once as the meek babe of Bethlehem, he comes again clad not with swaddling clothes, but with the royal garments of his glory. It will be glorious to receive his approving smile in that hour.

III. JESUS WILL BE VISIBLY MANIFESTED—ALL WILL SEE HIM.

Rev. 1: 7: Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

Mat. 24: 30: And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

1 John 3: 2: We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

Lk. 21: 27: And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.

The coming of Jesus will be personal. He has promised to come himself, and he will fulfil it. Those who think he comes at death are therefore mistaken—the Lord's name is not Death. He will come in great glory, and be manifested in the presence of an astonished world—all eyes shall see him! Dear reader would you see him in peace, then give him your heart in an everlasting covenant, and love and serve him with all your ransomed being, "and when the chief Shepherd shall appear, you shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." (1 Pet. 5: 4.)

Conference Minutes

Minnesota.

SAINT PAUL DISTRICT Q. M.

The second meeting for this district was held in the Br. Shepard's barn, in the town of Clifton, Wis., six miles east from Prescott. Elders present: L. C. Collians, O. R. Fassett, and E. T. Himes. The congregations on Friday and Saturday were composed of the friends in the immediate vicinity, with those who came over the river from Minnesota. It was cheering to listen to the reports and testimonies that were given in, and especially to those that came from brethren who had become satisfied that much of the prevailing theology of the day was purely traditional; and now were seeking light from God's word on the great questions concerning the future state. Said one brother, into whose pathway the light was beginning to shine, "this much I know, that whereas I was once blind, I now see"

The cause is rising in this region and a number who were heretofore opposed or indifferent to the glorious truths which we are proclaiming are now earnestly reading books and tracts, and searching the Scriptures daily to see if these things are as we represent them.

Sunday dawned upon us, a bright day, bringing a large congregation to the barn, which was made to resound with music and melody from heart and tongue. Three preaching services were held, with the celebration of the Lord's supper, after which a church of thirteen members was organized, which united with the Conference. Another precious season is placed on the record of the past. We journey onward, thanking God and taking courage.

NORTHERN DISTRICT, Q. M.

The first Q. M. of the Northren District convened at Sand Hill, Fulton Co. Aug. 3. '71. The meeting was called to order by Brn. J. E. Andrus and D. Nafe, who were designated for the purpose by the State Conference. E. C. Andrus and W. L. Himes were appointed a Business Committee. They reported the following order of business: Reception of members; election of officers; report of ministers and churches.

Eld. D. Mathewson presented his own name, and the church at Union Mills, Laporte Co. (45 members) for membership, and both were unanimously received.

Brn. Nafe and Himes being appointed a nominating committee, recommended D. Mathewson as Chairman of Quarterly Conference the ensuing year, and E. C. Andrus as Secretary. Their report was adopted by acclamation. Eld. Mathewson in taking the chair gave a brief but very effective address, dwelling especially upon the necessity of order, co-operation and union in order to the prosperity of this, or, indeed, of any cause.

The Secretary then read the Constitution of the Conference, and minutes of previous meetings. After which we listened to reports from ministers and delegates, which were of an interesting character.

On invitation of the Chairman, it was voted to hold the next Q. M. at Union Mills, Laporte Co. The time to be announced hereafter.

The resolution of thanks for the hospitality of the friends at Sand Hill passed unanimously.

Meetings were held three times daily; at first in the School house; but on Saturday and Sunday in a grove, seated for the purpose. The preaching was by Elds. Chaplin, E. C. Andrus, Mansfield, Mathewson and W. L. Himes, who found an intelligent, listening and receptive audience. The social meetings were, also, very interesting. One man, who chanced to be visiting in the neighborhood, and attended the meetings throughout, declared they were the best he had known of in years. The impression made on the community was decidedly favorable, and we may hope for the best results.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—During the severe thunderstorm last Saturday morning, a charge of electricity entered and severed the wires in the telegraph office at the N. Ladling on & Co.'s store, and set fire to the window casings. They were enveloped in flames in an instant, and the employes in the store vainly attempted to extinguish the flames with water. At this critical juncture, Caleb came to the rescue with a Babcock Fire Extinguisher, and soon put an effectual quietus on the [illegible] element. But for this timely aid, the store and contents would probably have been destroyed. All who were present felt the electric shock more or less sensibly, but, fortunately, no one was injured. —Marinette (Wis.) Eagle, July 13, 1871.

The Young Pilgrim is improving in Br. Leslie's hands. May it prosper as it deserves to.

The Western Recorder, one of our oldest exchanges, comes to us enlarged, beautified, and in the quarto form—its size being now what we hope to have for THE TIMES by and by.

We are sorry to have to mention a blemish—an article on the future punishment worthy of the New England theology in the times of Edwards. It maintains that finite creatures are to suffer conscious, infinite punishment. The doctrine would be terrible if true. Thank God, 'tis not true.

The Recorder is published at Louisville, Ky. $3 a year. It is a leading Baptist paper of the South.

Hearth and Home. We published the advertisement of this journal last winter, because we believed it was in the hands of men who would not suffer its pages to be polluted by anything unfit for reading in the family circle. One of the finest illustrated papers of the country has been publishing a novel that might well put a French novelist to the blush. Hearth and Home is of a different order of papers. It is adapted to the home, especially the homes of farmers. The engravings in each number are said to cost from $500 to $600.

Edward Eggleston, late of the Independent, now has charge of H. and H., which is a strong point in its favor, even if nothing more were said.

Obituary.

SIDWELL. Died, in Girard, Crawford Co., Kas., Aug. 4, 1871, Annie M., daughter of A. M. and Mary E. Sidwell, aged 1 year, 2 months, and 5 days.

Br. and Sr. Sidwell have recently been enabled to understand the true nature of man, as mortal instead of immortal, and to rejoice and trust alone in Christ, and the resurrection from the dead for eternal life. And while lovely little Annie sleeps, may they with other friends, "go on unto perfection"—"waiting for" and loving his appearing, and thus be prepared to join their lost, loved ones in the coming kingdom.

WRIGHT. Died, at Jamestown, Ind., March 12, 1871, Hattie Dana, youngest daughter of Fayette and M. Frances Wright, aged 3 years, 8 months, and 3 days.

These parents wait for the resurrection morning to restore the [illegible] to their embrace again. Words of comfort by the writer from Jer. 31: 15, 16. Soon the land of the enemy, death, will be compelled to give up its captives. Praise the Lord!

J. R. PRESTON.

LONG. Fell asleep in Jesus, July 15, 1871, at her residence in Harrison co., Ind., Isabella Long, a worthy and estimable member of the Advent Christian Church at Jeffersonville.

She was baptized upon a profession of faith in Christ, Dec. 6, 1868, and from that time to her death she was faithful and true to her profession, she was beloved by all who knew her. Her husband and relatives do not sorrow for her without hope. No, blessed be God! I have no reason to doubt that she will be in the first resurrection. The Lord hasten the glorious day, when the redeemed shall come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy.

N. FIELD.

MORGAN. Fell on sleep, in Holton, Ind., Aug. 4, at the residence of his son-in-law, Joseph Dudley, John Morgan; in his 72d year.

Father Morgan, years since, heard and heeded the "glad tidings" which made him long and look for Jesus and the kingdom. When we organized our little church here, Father Morgan was one of the twelve constituting this Advent body. He lived near to Jesus, and died well. Just before his death he called the writer to his side, to tell how firm his hope and trust stood the test of a dying hour. His assurance was full and complete.

Words of hope and comfort by the writer, from Ps. 17: 15.

The Book of the Last Days.

The things that must shortly come to pass.—He had said, "This generation shall not pass away till all these things be." The word is the same, signifying, not to be fulfilled, but to be or begin to be. (John 13: 2 not "supper being ended," but "supper being brought in.") So here it is the things that must shortly (or quickly) be; the things that are just about to be; that the Lord shows to His servants. And what He has shown to us it becomes us to study. These things are the unveiling of Christ, and of earth's future, in connection with Him, both in grace and glory, both in love and wrath. These are some of the things which the angels desire to look into, and in carrying out which they are specially "ministering spirits;" and it does not become us, whom they chiefly concern, to slight them. Seeing that God has revealed them, we may conclude that they are neither too high nor too low for us, but worthy of most earnest thought. The tendency of the present age is to set aside prophecy as specially belonging to the supernatural, and therefore the incredible and impossible. Let us stand aloof from this incredulity, and welcome the prophetic word as all the more precious because supernatural and specially divine.

For the time is at hand.—Coming judgments, coming glories, a coming Judge, and a coming kingdom,—these are some of the things held up before our eyes. In regard to all these we are bidden to "watch." When and how they are to burst upon our world, and to awaken the slumbering Church, we know not. The time has always been concealed. It is uncertain. It may be soon. "Of that day and hour knoweth no man." "Awake, thou that sleepest," for the time is at hand. The trumpet is always ready to sound; the last storm is always just on the point of breaking. Christ is always "coming." The end of all things is at hand. Whether we are able to reconcile these words with the delay of so many centuries, it matters not. The words are meant to be words of warning, on account of the suddenness of the final crisis. In looking forward from the human view-point, and measuring the times and seasons by a human standard, the above expression may seem "hard to be understood;" looking back upon it hereafter from the eternal view-point, we shall see how it was always near.

He annexes a special blessedness to the study of this book.—Few believe this; fewer act upon it. The Apocalypse is to many like the Sibyl's books or the Iliad of Homer. The so-called philosophy of the age is undermining the prophetic word, reducing it to a mere collection of figures, or a symbolic representation of principles or abstract truths. Prophecy, as the direct prediction by God of what is to come to pass on earth, is set aside, and the prophetic books are studied merely in reference to their poetry or their lofty ideas. Blessedness in studying them is seldom thought of, even by many Christians. Yet the word of God here stands true. Prophecy is a sure word, and it is as blessed as it is sure. Wo to him who slights it! Blessed are all they who meditate on it, seek to know it, take it for guidance and counsel in the evil day!

John to the seven Churches which are in Asia.—He addresses the seven Asian Churches There were many others,—Colosse, Tralles, Magnesia,—but seven are chosen as representative Churches, selected by Christ to picture forth all Churches in all ages; selected because of certain characteristics and conditions which were found in them, that in speaking to these seven co-existing peculiarities he might speak to all Churches in all ages, so that each Church, in every age, might find, in some one of these seven, a picture of itself, and, in the words of warning or of cheer, something exactly suited for admonition to itself. To speak symbolically, no one of these Churches has passed away. Ephesus has always existed and still exists in some of the many Churches throughout the world. So of Smyrna, and Pergamos, and the rest. They are not representatives of successive stages or conditions, spiritual or ecclesiastical; they are not prophetical or consecutive, as if Ephesus pictured the primitive Church, Smyrna that of the third and fourth century, down to Laodicea, the representative of the Church of the last days. They picture seven states in which the Church will always be found, and in regard to which each one should put the question, Is it I? Lord, is it I? Why they are selected from Asia Minor, is hard to say. Certainly it is Gentile ground; and it is to the Churches of the Gentiles that the book is written. Israel had been cast off and had gone out of sight. Jerusalem had fallen; and the apostles, rejected by the Jew, had turned to the Gentile. But why these representative Gentile Churches should have been selected from Asia, and not from Greece or other Gentile regions, we cannot say, further than that John preached at Ephesus and superintended the neighboring Churches. Seven is the number of completeness,—manifold completeness; fulness in variety. The portrait is one, of the one Church of God on earth; but of this one portrait there are seven different views, each of them bringing out something special, while preserving the common outline and features; all of them bringing together the complete enumeration or record both of the evil and the good belonging to the universal Church below, in the day of her imperfection and continual declension.

The Lord shall come! (ver. 7) This is the burden of this last book of Scripture. It was the burden of the Old Testament; for Enoch's prophecy runs through all its books,—"Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." It is the burden of the New Testament; for both the Master and His apostle give out the same solemn utterance,—"Behold, He cometh;" and the Church in the early ages took up the subject as of profoundest and most pressing interest, "looking for that blessed hope."

It was no minor hope to the primitive saints. It cheered them at parting with their Lord, and it comforted them at parting with one another. It upheld them in evil days; it nerved them for warfare; it gave them patience under persecution; it animated them in their work; it kept alive their zeal; it enabled them to look calmly round upon an evil world, and to face its mustering storms; it showed them resurrection and glory, fixing their eye upon scenes beyond the deathbed and the tomb; it ever reminded them of the day of meeting, when Jesus will gather all his own together, and they that have slept in Him shall awake to glory, honor and immortality.

The aspect in which the advent is here presented to us bears more upon the world than upon the Church. When Paul writes to the Thessalonians, he brings before us the advent as it bears upon the Church and the resurrection-hope. (Thes. 4.) "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven," is the word of consolation and gladness. But here it is as a warning to the world, and to the apostate church, that John proclaims the coming one. He comes as avenger, and Judge, and King! He comes with the iron rod, to break the nations in pieces. He comes arrayed in righteous majesty, to take vengeance upon them that know not God. He comes to shake terribly the earth. And who shall abide the day of his appearing?

The world scoffs at the message, and believes in no advent save the advent of gold and silver, of commerce and science, of luxury and pleasure. The church has lost sight of it, and says, "My Lord delayeth his coming;" or perhaps, "I sit as a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Multitudes of professing Christians cannot bear to hear it preached or spoken of, as if it were an evil doctrine fraught with gloom, and paralysing all effort.

Yet, though the world may mock and the church forget, the Lord shall come! He has tarried long. Eighteen centuries have gone by since he said, "Behold, I come quickly!" He must be nigh, even at the doors.

V. 7. Behold, he cometh with clouds.—How often has that word "behold" been used in Scripture to call the attention of a careless church or world to something great—generally something visible—connected with Messiah and his glory! It is the finger of the Holy Ghost pointing to the open heavens, and his voice saying, "See, he cometh!" For that event absorbs all others in earth's future. It is the center of the prophetic word. It is the church's hope. It is the world's dread. Long deferred, it comes at last. The morning star rises on a night of storm and gloom. Jesus comes; "the same Jesus" who left us on Olivet returns as he went. He cometh with clouds! The reference is here first to Matthew (26: 64), and then to Daniel (8: 13), for both are here; also to 1 Thes. 4: 17. Sometimes it is "clouds" (Rev. 1: 7); sometimes "the clouds" (Mat. 18: 26); sometimes "the cloud" (Lk. 9: 34); sometimes "a cloud" (Acts 1: 9); sometimes "a bright cloud" (Rev. 14: 14). All these passages point us not merely to the natural clouds of the sky, but to the pillar-cloud—the cloud of the glory which dwelt over and in Israel's tabernacle and temple. "With" and "in" such clouds of glory, as his raiment, his chariot, his pavillion, he is to come.

And every eye shall see him.—This takes in the whole human race then upon the earth; whether simultaneously, all in one moment, is of no consequence. Every eye shall see him, as every man sees the sun each day. The whole human race beholds the sun, though not all exactly at the same moment. The glory may be universally visible at the same time; but to some parts of the world first he himself shall appear. Every eye shall see him! Then let us prepare by looking to him now. The seeing now will cure and bless us; the seeing him hereafter will be wo to those who have not looked to him now as the crucified Jesus.

And all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him.—All the inanimate creation rejoices (seas, woods, hills, and floods, Ps. 96); man mourns. For he comes to deliver creation from the bondage of the corruption, but to take vengeance upon his enemies. The joy of creation and the wailing of man are strictly contrasts. They "wail," or beat their breasts, because—

(1.) He comes.—Rather would they have him remain away forever, and they left undisturbed in their lusts, and sins, and enjoyment of the creature. His presence extorts the weeping.

(2.) He comes to judge.—There shall be no mistake as to that. The trumpet has told them that. He summons to judgment. He will right all the wrong.

(3.) He comes with the iron rod.—For his enemies is the rod of iron. The great day of breaking shall overwhelm them; and who shall be able to stand?.... The nations rejecting Christ shall perish. Christendom shall sink like Babylon in the mighty waters. Destruction from the Lord shall consume them utterly. This is the world's day of rejoicing; that shall be the day of its weeping. Rejecter of the cross, repent and turn! Refuser of the love of God and of the grace of Christ, reconsider your ways, ere the Judge descends! This is the acceptable year of the Lord. Avail yourself of the free pardon, and the open door, and the paternal welcome, ere it be too late.

Even so, amen (see 2 Cor. 1: 17). The first of these words is Greek, yes; the second Hebrew, so be it: both together forming the fullest expression that could be of the certainty and truth of what is stated, and the deep longing of hearts for the fulfillment of the prediction. "The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended" (Ps. 72: 20). "My reins are consumed within me" (Job 19: 27); that is, "My longings are exhausted here." "These be the last words of David" (2 Sam. 23: 1); this is the summing up of all David's words—their alpha and omega. Here are all John's innermost desires summed up and spoken out. What earnestness, what vehemence, what longing, are expressed in this double Amen! It is the amen of faith, and hope, and joy. It is the amen of a weary heart-broken exile. It is the amen of a saint left on earth long behind his fellow-saints, and sighing for the promised rest when the great Rest-giver comes. It is the church's amen; her vehement desire for the day of meeting. It is the sigh of the bride for the Bridegroom, and for the dawning of the marriage-day.

The world is not ready for that advent; how shall it meet the Judge? It has neglected the "accepted time;" and how shall it stand before the neglected one? What excuse shall it give for slighting love, despising the blood, and turning its back upon the cross? How terribly, to an unready world, will the last trumpet sound! Poor world! Thy day of grace is drawing to a close. Thy pleasures are nearly done. Thy laughter will soon be quenched. Thy vanities will soon disappear. Thy dreams will ere long be disturbed by the terrible awaking—when the "shout" and the "voice of the archangel," and the trump of God shall sound. Be wise in time! Awake, thou that sleepest!

Is the church ready for this glorious day? Has she put on her apparel? Has she trimmed and lighted her lamp? Has she filled her vessel with oil? Is she sitting loose from the world? Is she remembering her coming Lord, and seeking to be faithful to him in his absence? He has intrusted to her his cause, his truth, his honor. Is she alive to her responsibility, and acting accordingly? Is she realizing his nearness and his glory? Is she daily influenced by his sure word of promise, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me?" Is she laboring and suffering for him? Or is she self-indulgent, worldly, indolent, as if the Lord were not coming, and as if he were bringing no reward with him?

Look forwards! Look upwards! Stand apart from a present evil world. Remember that in the last days perilous times shall come. It remains for us that we let our light shine and keep our garments undefiled. Labor on, O man of faith! labor on; the toil and the battle will soon be done, and thou shalt rest from thy labors, and thy works shall follow thee.

Beware of the leaven of the last days—the leaven of the Pharisees and the Sadducees—the leaven of mingled infidelity and superstition—the leaven of atheism and pantheism. "Liberality" is the watchword; but is it the liberality of the Bible or of God? Is it the liberality of him who says in reference to false teaching, "Which thing I hate?" (2: 15.)

Beware of letting go the truth of God; of either denying, or disgracing, or depreciating it. "Hold fast that which thou hast." The Master is absent; and responsibility in the Master's absence is double responsibility. He trusts to us to maintain his truth and to honor his name, till he return. Let his churches be faithful to their trust, honoring him as prophet, priest, and king. He may be returning soon. If, on his return, he finds us unfaithful to himself and to his truth, what shall be our recompense? Behold, he cometh! Like a trumpet-voice, let that cry go through the churches; let it echo through earth. His long absence will soon be ended. Let us be ready: let us watch and be sober.—Quarterly Journal of Prophecy.

Modern Progress.

The Liberal Christian, in speaking of the boasted spirit of progress and the claim that the present age is one of culture and refinement, takes occasion to show the other side of the picture. It says:

"The refined tastes, the nicer moral feeling, the delicate sense of justice, the feeling of honor, the finer sentiments of gentlemen and good Christians, are scarce, confined to a class as yet, and it is preposterous, with the evidences which the newspaper, the theaters, the literature of the people, afford us, to be talking as if our people were saints, or aspiring and cultivated, or well educated, or in favor of scrupulous honesty, or very indignant with public thieves and robbers. They support—the majority of them—the Ring. Seven or eight hundred of them are not ashamed to march under Mr. James Fisk as their Colonel! Millions of Americans think Gen. Butler a great man, if not a good one, and it would not be suprising if he were made Governor of the most educated and elevated State in the Union. Well, with these facts before our eyes, are we still to go on boasting about the age, and praising the spirit of it and trying to find any other reason for mobs and public corruption, and municipal robbery, and bad books, and wretched (despite their being able) newspapers and unprincipled politicians, except the only real reason, which is the low average of virtue, intelligence and taste among the governing class, which happens to be the whole male population? In other countries a select class of voters really determines all public policies, and settles the choice of elective public officers. We have, wisely, no doubt, changed all that, but we are no better, on the average, than the Ring we carry in our nose, and the literature we buy, and the newspapers we patronise, and the representatives we elect to office, and it is high time this were seen and acknowledged by boasters and blind leaders of the blind. We have never been among the worshippers of existing circumstances, or existing opinions or public tendencies, and as often find the spirit of the age a spirit to be exorcised as one to be boasted of and obeyed. When the river runs mud and garbage, we shall not accept its motion as any substitute for its impurity. If the only things flowing be the sewers we shall go afoot even against their direction, rather than float with their tide."

A little preacher.—"I am going to preach the gospel, and tell the world of the coming of Jesus," said Willie.

"He'll come before you know enough," said his brother.

"Then I'll be good, and show them what God likes us to be," said Willie humbly.

Yes, indeed, we can all do that. It is the best preaching in the world.

Lines.

"In honor preferring one another." (Rom. 12: 10.)

Could we in little things control
The selfish promptings of the soul,
The ways of life would seem less wrong,
And oft'ner hearts would joy in song.

It is the lack of courtesy
That maketh life pass drearily,
'T is that, unthinking, we neglect
To mete to others due respect.

It is that thinking some deride
All noble acts of human pride,
And strive ungraciously to spurn
All thoughts of kindness in return.

It is that rushing through this world
Obstructing objects forth are hurled,
Without regarding any sense
Of moral right or recompense.

It is that poor men frequently
Have envy in their poverty,
And magnify a seeming slight
To monstrous tyranny of might.

It is that rich men oft look down
With condescension worse than frown,
Upon a man to labor born,
Answering confidence with scorn.

It is that pious devotee
In the spirit of the Pharisee,
Complacently disdains to find
Outside the church a noble mind.

It is that men famed worldly-wise
See in the church hypocrisies,
Observing not the hidden way
Of Christians who in secret pray.

And all that people will not heed,
Believing the Apostles' Creed,
That each in honor should prefer
Another one, what may occur.

A SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

BEING

A Religious Autobiography.

BY GREY QUILL.

CHAPTER VIII.

[Concluded.]

Perhaps what I am about to say may appear somewhat egotistical, yet a regard for the truth requires me to record the fact, that I was considered by our pastor and the prominent membership of the church as a fit subject for advancement into ministerial labor. This thought was not new to me, for from early youth I had felt, though I never mentioned it, that at some time my heavenly Father designed to have me labor in his vineyard in that capacity; and now as a favorable opportunity seemed to present itself, I did not feel at liberty to refuse. At the suggestion, therefore, of kind friends I procured the necessary books, and commenced studying the rudiments of the Greek language, with the intention of entering, at an early day, Newton Theological Seminary. At that time though I had been a member of the church but a few weeks, I had charge of the adult class in the Sabbath-school, from which the teachers were drawn, and was generally selected to open, and often to lead the exercises in our minor meetings.[1]

And here I must pause for a moment, for I am at a loss for language to express myself. I do not now—never did—and probably never shall know, at least till the vail is lifted which divides the outer from the inner tabernacle, the seen from the unseen, and the secret and mysterious workings of Divine providence are made manifest—what the cause was of the paralyzing gloom that then settled over my spirit and nearly exhausted me. I tried to throw it off, but could not. It sat like an incubus upon me, and closed every avenue of thought, so much so that I was sometimes puzzled to remember my own name. Of course I resigned my position in the Sabbath school immediately, and dismissed my studies; for it was impossible to acquire knowledge unaided by memory. My friends were astonished (as well they might be) at my strange and unaccountable conduct. but there was no help for it; for I could not overcome my repugnance to telling them the cause of my actions.

This "spell" or whatever else it may be called did not last long (perhaps three weeks'); but when I (so to speak) came to myself, my desire to become a Baptist minister was among the things that were past. One important reason, doubtless, for this change arose from the fact that my previous resolution to investigate the Bible for myself had forced itself upon my renewed memory with irresistible power; and I well knew if my former impressions of what it taught about the soul and God's kingdom were correct, I could not conscientiously propagate their faith; for the innate immortality of man and a sky kingdom where the righteous immediately go at death, were vital tenets in their belief. Leaving behind, then, all thoughts (if I ever had any) of becoming a popular preacher, I resolved to devote all my spare time in fulfilling my long deferred resolution to learn what God said in his word about his creature man and his ultimate destiny.

This was no small task in comparison with what it would be now, for nothing, independent of sectarian bias, so far as I knew, had been written on that subject. My progress was therefore necessarily slow. But there was an excellent library in the city where I then resided, and among its numerous volumes I found no less than four translations of the Old, and six of the New Testament, besides many other works of value, including helps to a correct understanding of Greek and Hebrew terms. So in process of time aided by these in my investigations, I learned many important truths, which made the Bible a new book to me, indeed. My task however did not consist in any difficulty in understanding what the Scriptures taught on these subjects, except so far as certain words had become obsolete, or changed their meaning, but in tracing the connection and bearing, and proving the unity of its teachings from Genesis to Revelations; for I had no previous theories or opinions to bolster up, and was ready to accept and believe whatever I found plainly recorded.

With my mind thus untrammeled and free from bias, I commenced my investigation with the Mosaic account of the creation of man, and I am sure the record was lucid enough to satisfy me, as it ought to every one else, that he was primarily formed "of the dust of the ground;" and the conclusion was irresistible from the plain record that he was a material being, and consequently, we, his descendants were the same. This one well attested fact, of itself, knocked the base of the old theological system I had been instructed in, to atoms, and left the venerable superstructure resting (truth compels me to say it,) on the back of "the serpent." For it was evident that as a natural man he could die, and it was further recorded his Maker told him he should; and I could find no other one in those days who doubted, or dared dispute it, except the individual (or whatever else you may be pleased to call him) above mentioned.

Having seen how easily one plain declaration in the word destroyed the foundation of the old fabric, I next searched for the adhesive gum which kept its tottering remains from falling to pieces and being blown to the four winds of heaven: in other words I tried my best to find where, as the old catechism expressed it, man fell "from a state of holiness and happiness to a state of sin and misery," thus losing the image of his Maker, and sweeping the whole race down with him. But the record of the awful catastrophe was wanting in every translation to which I had access. True it was easy to find the account of his creation in the image of his Maker, but turning to Dan. 2: 31, I found the word image in that place was translated from the same Hebrew term as in Gen. 1: 26; and as Nebuchadnezzar evidently did not see a character, but a "form," so in the case of Adam's creation, the word, I concluded, meant the same, and as I could only find of the man that he was in a state of innocence, I came to the conclusion that the popular doctrine of the fall of Adam and our consequent total depravity, were destitute of a Scriptural foundation. So the sticking gum went by the board and left the old building ready to tumble about the ears of its supporters. God freely "gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" thus throwing the responsibility for what one may, or may not be in a future state directly on the shoulders of each intelligent individual alike, and holding them amenable to him—not for what they were by nature, but for what they might become by grace. That Jesus was the Nobleman who had gone into a far country, and would return, and call his servants to an account. (See parable, Lk. 19.)

I learned, also, that he is the great Life-Giver, and those who do not obey him, but follow carnality, and worldly desires, and thus keep their talent "laid up in a napkin," will never obtain it. That he is "the resurrection and the life;" and his voice will by and by awake the sleeping dead and bring them to judgment. Then will he reward every man according to his work, while in this present probationary life.

These were the underlying facts concerning man and his future destiny that I found plainly recorded by the pen of Inspiration. The doctrine of the personal return of the Son of God from heaven, to unlock the gates of hades, awaken its sleeping inmates, and judge the world in righteousness, I found to be, not only the burden of apostolic teaching, but the belief of the church, also, for the first two centuries.[2] And thus it would have been today if the primitive faith had not been corrupted by the introduction into it of heathen dogmas, to the displacement of plain Bible teaching. And the result of this dire act has been that the great body of the professed followers of Jesus, instead of being "like unto men who wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding," are, with few exceptions, neither watching, waiting or even xepecting his return at all; and they thus verify the words of the poet—

"The very bride her portion and calling hath forgot,

Meanwhile the great, the solemn day draws on apace, when the white throne will appear and the books will be opened in which are written, by the pen of the recording angel, the eternal destiny of all the posterity of Adam. And as I stand upon my watch, "upon the tower," and peer through the murky gloom at the premonitory tokens which herald its approach, methinks I hear, rolling high above the din, turmoil, and strife of nearly two decades of centuries, like the sound of many waters, the voice of my departed Lord, from Patmos, lonely isle, saying—"Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be." "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am sit down with my Father in his throne."

[1] I mention these facts with no desire for ostentation, as my heavenly Father well knows, but simply that the reader may understand the position I was in when this singular circumstance transpired. And I will here remark I have never revealed this matter before to any living being.

[2] Said Polycrates, Bishop of Ephesus, who flourished A. D. 196: "In Asia, great lights have fallen asleep which shall rise again in the day of our Lord's appearing, in which he will come with glory from heaven, and will raise up all the saints. Philip, one of the twelve apostles, who sleeps in Hierapolis, and his two aged virgin daughters. His other daughter, also, who having lived under the influence of the Holy Spirit, now likewise rests in Ephesus. Moreover, John, who rested upon the bosom of our Lord; who also was a priest, and bore the sacerdotal plate, both a martyr and a teacher; he also is buried in Ephesus. Also Polycarp of Smyrna, both bishop and martyr. Thraseas, also, bishop and martyr of Eumenia, who is buried in Smyrna. Why should I mention Sagaris, bishop and martyr who rests at Laodicea? Moreover the blessed Paperius, and Melito the eunuch, whose walk and conversation were altogether under the influence of the Holy Spirit, who now rests at Sardis, awaiting the episcopate from heaven, when he shall rise from the dead." (Eusebius, b 5. c. 2.)

The following is from Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, and a disciple of Polycarp. He was martyred A. D. 202. He says:—"Life is not of ourselves, nor of our own nature, but a gift of God's favor. And, therefore, he who preserves the grant of life, and renders thanks to him who bestows it, shall receive length of days for ever and ever. But he who rejects it, and proves unthankful to his Maker for creating him, and will not know him who bestows it, deprives himself of the gift of duration to all eternity."

The Sleep of Death.

Things that we do not understand, are often made plain by illustrations. "Death" is frequently illustrated in the word of God by natural sleep; and, although we might otherwise be comparatively ignorant with regard to the realities of death, it is made perfectly plain by the illustration.

Perhaps, however, the phenomena we so often call "natural sleep," would be more properly called voluntary sleep: it being simply an inaction of the voluntary nerves, while the sleep of death, which is but a cessation or inaction of both the voluntary and involuntary nerves, is just as much a natural sleep as the other—both resulting from natural causes. But without stopping to trifle with technicalities, we will proceed to learn the facts in the case; for as Paul did not wish his brethren to "be ignorant concerning them that are asleep," neither do we. And if we know the condition of an individual in "sleep," we know their condition in death; otherwise, the illustration is more than worthless: for it not only misrepresents the facts, but is calculated to mislead the credulous mind.

With regard to the philosophy of sleep, we are informed by physiologists that there are three stages to voluntary sleep. In the first, we may recognize a person passing through the room, or faintly respond to our name if it is called, yet are so nearly unconscious of surrounding circumstances that we would be unable to form any definite idea of what was going on. In the second stage of sleep, which is an inaction of a part of the organs of the brain, while the rest are in a wakeful condition, imperfect impressions are made and imperfect ideas are formed, which we call "dreams." It requires a full operation of all the faculties of the brain to produce a rational thought, and hence dreams, which, as we have already remarked, are but ideas formed by a part of these, while the rest are in a state of unconsciousness, are generally of an irrational character.

The third stage of sleep, which is an inaction of all the developments of the brain, including the animal, moral and intellectual faculties, is therefore a state of total unconsciousness. This is the only stage that is properly called "sleep." In the first, we are drowsing, or approaching toward sleep, but not sleeping; in the second, we are dreaming, or approaching still farther toward sleep, but still we are not sleeping. In the third, when all the convolutions of the brain become inactive, then we are properly asleep. And, now, the question arises: Do we know more when all the organs of the brain cease to act, and we are totally unconscious in sleep, than we do when awake? If so, perhaps the dead know more than the living. But if sleep actually reduces us to a state of unconsciousness, as we know it does; inasmuch as death is metaphorically represented by it, it is positive proof that death also reduces us to the same condition.

In harmony with these facts, we have, therefore, the testimony of inspiration: "The living know that they shall die, but the dead KNOW NOT ANYTHING."—(Eccl. 9: 5.) "His breath goeth forth; he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish."—(Ps. 146: 4.) A man cannot think after his thoughts have perished; and if he does not think, he has not much knowledge.

Again, if sleep actually reduces us to a state of unconsciousness, suppose that an individual falls asleep, and in that condition dies. Inasmuch as he is in a state of unconsciousness while asleep, and is also represented as being asleep while dead, consciousness cannot return until he awakes from the dead. Hence, Job says: "Till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—(Ch. 14: 12.)

If a man should die while in the most profound sleep, modern theology, in opposition to the word of God, would have death wake him up in a higher sphere, where his capacities for knowledge would be greatly enlarged; and instead of silently sleeping in the grave, waiting for God's Son from heaven, would have him basking in the sunlight of his presence, and already raising his voice in higher notes of praise than ever before. The Psalmist, however, declares, "the dead praise not the Lord."—(Ps. 115: 17.)

J. W. TAYLOR.

Immortal-soul-ism.

There are very many isms in the world, at the present time, and among them we find immortal-soul-ism. So formidable is the magnitude, and widespread the influence of this "ism," that it becomes the imperative duty of all seekers after Bible truth, to give it a careful, sober and rigid investigation. Few isms have met with such absolute success in obtaining universal approbation and confidence from the intelligences of earth, as has immortal-soul-ism. True, there have always been some in all ages who were not disposed to give credence to the truth of this ism; and, indeed, there have been periods in the world's history when it had scarcely any votaries. But since the reins of Christendom fell into the hands of superstitious Romanism and philosophizing Paganism, there has been no lack of believers in the dogma of man's natural immortality.

Among the schools of ancient philosophy (when, undoubtedly, "immortal-soul-ism" was first invented) there existed a great variety of opinions concerning the nature of the immortal soul as the following extract fully demonstrates:

The Stoics taught the soul to be a hot fiery blast. Other sects of heathen philosophers, a hot complexion. Others, the harmony of the four elements. Democritus contended that the soul was made up of round atoms, incorporated by air and fire. Some believed that the soul was aerial. Some, that it was earthy. Xenophon held that it was both watery and earthy. According to some of the eminent men among the Greeks, the soul of the universe was a vapor, or exhalation from the noist elements; so the souls from ani- uals were vapors from their own odies. Of those among them who onsidered the soul incorporeal, some sserted that it was a substance and im- nortal; whilst others believed it was either. Thales taught that it was al- ays in motion, and itself the origin of at motion. Pythagoras contended at it was a self-moving monad, or umber. Plato, that it was a substance onceivable only by the understanding, d moving according to harmony and umber. Aristotle, that it was the first ntinual motion of a body natural, ving in it those instrumental parts herein was possibility of life, &c., infinitum.

Almost every prominent leader in ient philosophy had a different the- r relative to the soul. A brief ex- mination of the following quotations l clearly show that modern theology quite in harmony with heathen phil- phy on this subject.

A recent writer describes the soul as immaterial, uncompounded inward- ." Another says: "The soul is a ple essence, invisible, without inter- or exterior surface, intangible, un- pounded, cannot come in contact matter, incomprehensible, incorpo- , cannot be extended or distended, soluble, indestructible, and conse- ntly immortal." Mr. Byers, a mod- wiseacre in the science of immortal-soul-ism, says: "The indestructibility of the soul or spirit of man is AFFIRMED throughout the Old Testament Scriptures, as well as in the New." He says further, "The soul is capable of enjoying celestial glories and communications without the body." Who told him so? Another says: "Man is endowed with an immortal spirit, which shall exist as long as God endures, either blooming in the paradise of God, or eternally withering in the regions of despair." A. Clark says: "The soul of man is immaterial and immortal, and can subsist independently of the body."

I might add many more testimonies to the same effect, but enough has been given to show that if the soul is really what these divines and philosophers represent it as being, it must certainly be a wonderful thing! Think of an "immaterial SUBSTANCE;" an "intangible ENTITY;" an uncompounded, indivisible and incomprehensible BEING, and then you will know something of the appearance of an "immortal soul."

Having found such a perfect agreement in the teachings of heathen philosophers and doctors of divinity on the "immateriality, intangibility and uncompoundedness" of the human soul, I wish now to cite a few instances where this wonderful being, the soul, is spoken of in the word of God, with the special purpose of ascertaining whether it has the above qualities, on the authority of inspiration, or not.

Lev. 5: 17: If a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the Lord; though he [the soul] wist it not, yet is he [the soul] guilty, and shall bear his iniquity. (See Num. 4: 2; 5: 15.)

Num. 31: 28: Levy a tribute unto the Lord....one soul of five hundred, both of the PERSONS and of the BEEVES and of the ASSES and of the SHEEP. See, also, vv. 30, 47. These texts furnish a good key to the meaning of soul in Biblical literature.

Ps. 33: 19: To deliver their SOUL FROM DEATH and to keep THEM alive in famine.

Ps. 78: 50: He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence.

Prov. 27: 7: The FULL SOUL loatheth [marg. treadeth under foot] an honeycomb, but to the HUNGRY SOUL [do immortal souls get hungry?] every bitter thing is sweet.

(Is. 32: 6; 55: 2; Lam. 1: 11; Is. 55: 3; 58: 10, 11, &c.)

Ez. 18: 4: The soul that sinneth, IT SHALL DIE. The death of an immateriality would indeed be a sad affair.

Matt. 10: 28: Fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in gehenna.

Acts 2: 41: Three thousand souls were added to the church.—What use could a church make of three thousand intangible, immaterialities? How could such "incomprehensible" nothings be added to a church? Echo answers, How? (Acts 3: 23; Rom. 13: 1; Jos 5: 20; Rev. 16: 3; 1 Sam. 24: 11; Ps. 30: 3; 35: 7; Gen. 46: 26, 27; Ex. 1: 5; Gen. 12: 5; Acts 7: 14; 27: 37: 1 Peter 3: 20; Rev. 6: 9; 20: 4; Lev. 22: 3; 23: 30; Num. 15; 31; Job 33: 18, 22, 28, 30; Is. 53: 10, 12; Acts 2: 31, &c.) Hundreds of other instances might be given; yet not once does such a phrase as "immortal soul" or "never dying soul" or anything that is an equivalent to such an expression occur in the whole Bible. I ask if this is not a significant fact? It is no hard task to find such phrases in the writings of philosophers and theologians, both before and since the composition and promulgation of the Gospel; but to find them in the Bible is an impossibility, for the simple reason that they are not there.

With these facts before us, who can doubt for a moment the source of immortal-soul-ism? It is an ism found only in the unreliable speculation of heathen mythology and modern theology. This may appear to some to be a severe criticism, but facts are stubborn things and must be dealt with candidly, even if some of own friends do get hurt. The truth is our motto.

C. C. MARSTON.

Beauty For Ashes.

How wonderful! And yet it is God's promise. Through the anointed One we have the promise of beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

Here our loved ones die and we carry them to the grave to mingle with common dust. We breath this prayer—"Let peace be with their ashes!" as we leave them to moulder back to earth. But listen! A voice from the lips of the Son of God is heard. "I am the resurrection and the life!" And inspiration continues—"Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise." God does not leave us to comfort ourselves with ashes, instead of those we love; but lifts us up in hope, with the thought that these ashes will again be organized, and the sleepers restored to life, and shine in splendor, incorruptible.

With shining form, in beauteous homes,
  Our loved ones will appear;
And be forever with the Lord,
  Beyond the reach of fear.

The beauty of immortality will then be seen instead of smouldering ashes. This glorious resurrection hope! How sweet it is to feel that WE KNOW there will be a resurrection of the dead. Like Job—"I know that my Redeemer liveth....and in my flesh I shall see God." "Blessed are the pure in heart they shall see God." Praise God forever!

When Jesus comes, we will have "beauty for [instead of] ashes." No mourning, but the "oil of joy." We shall not have heaviness, but the garment of praise will be ours to wear forever.

J. R. PRESTON.

The Book of Mormon.

A few months since, we had an inquiry from one of our subscribers, as to the Book of Mormon. A recently published work, the History of Washington county, Pennsylvania, by Alfred Creigh, L. L. D., contains the following which will prove interesting as furnishing names and dates.

MORMONISM.

The true Mecca of that huge imposture, Mormonism, is the village of Amity, Washington County, Pennsylvania. To this place, in 1816, came Rev. Solomon Spaulding, a graduate of Dartmouth College, a man who had taken deep interest in antiquarian researches concerning the aborigines of this country. For his own entertainment, he wrote a romance, suggested by his studies and investigations. This was often read to his neighbors at Amity. At length it was placed, as we recently stated, in the hands of the late Rev. Robert Patterson, with a view of publication, but was declined. However Mr Patterson retained it in his possession a year or two. In the meantime, the entire manuscript was copied by Sidney Rigdon, then a journeyman in Mr Patterson's printing establishment. Rigdon hearing of the digging operations of Joe Smith for gold, by the aid of necromancy, resolved that he would turn this manuscript to some valuable account. After an interview between these two men, Mr. Spaulding's romance was slightly revised, and the Golden Bible, or Book of Mormon, was produced. Little did Mr. Spaulding suppose that he would be the unwilling means of originating the most stupendous imposture that has been perpetrated for centuries.

Practical Religion.

BY ELD. L. C. COLLINS, MONTICELLO, MINN.

And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say." (Luke 6: 46.)

Mankind are prone to extremes. And more especially is this tendency manifest in religious matters. The mind seizes upon some one point, and, losing sight of all others, makes that the great whole of religion. The result is, the gospel is marred in the beauty of its proportions, and the Christian character dismantled of much of its true excellence. Here, too, is the native soil of sectarianism, where it thrusts deep its roots and extends wide its branches. For when the views of men become thus distorted, they must of necessity regard all who do not think and feel with themselves, as lacking in the great essentials of christianity.

This evil is extensive; and an evil it is, however important those points in themselves considered may be. To have the mind wholly engrossed in the ordinances, or to make one point of doctrine the test of Christian faith; to dwindle the whole gospel down to mere frames and feelings of mind, or, on the other hand, to regard it as nothing but an empty theory; to be crying up faith to the exclusion of works, or disconnecting works from saving faith, are errors alike injurious to the individual, and dishonouring to God.

The perfection of Christian character can never be attained, so long as these extremes are unguarded. Christianity should be taken as a great whole. Each part claims a due proportion of regard in all its bearings. Every Bible truth should find a ready place in the believer's heart; every Christian grace should be ardently sought; and every work of faith and love diligently performed.

Sad, indeed, is this error, especially, when the great practical duties of religion, "judgment, mercy and faith" are neglected, and the dualindivi swallowed up in paying tithes of mint, anise and cummin, and with marked devotion calling Christ, "Lord, Lord," and doing not the things which he says.

The text leads us to practical godliness. A subject which cannot be urged with too much vehemence, so long as we shun the error adverted to, and place it in its proper connection with experimental religion and doctrinal truth. These are the foundation, and practical religion the superstructure. And he who fails here, is like the "foolish man" who "began to build and was not able to finish." We notice then,

I. That a correct sense of practical religion is essential to persevering piety.

That there is a deplorable lack here, must be felt, and felt with pain, by every child of God. Of the more interesting revivals, it may soon be said, "were there not ten cleansed, but where are the nine?" What multitudes are now living in sin, who once were the hopeful subjects of renewing grace. Of all cases, how deeply affecting are such God himself hath declared, "the latter end is worse with them than the beginning." They are miserable, indeed, themselves, and a reproach greater than all others to the cause of God. And one primary cause which operates in producing this result, is the want of having the mind, at the beginning, fully impressed with the absolute necessity of outward, in order to the maintenance of inward, holiness. Says Christ, "if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me, or he cannot be my disciple." The import of this scripture should be pondered well, the "cost counted," and the whole ground calmly surveyed, by him who would be prepared to meet the trials and conflicts, and persevere in a warfare inseparably connected with sacrifices and sufferings. By failing here, many will fall of the kingdom of heaven. Those who enter the way, dreaming only of pleasure, anticipating naught but fragrant flowers on which to tread, and be fanned with zephyrs soft as Eden—are they prepared to trample upon thorns, to meet the chilling blasts and storms that beat and howl around this dark world of sin and death? Nay, verily; and such will inevitably fall.

The way to the kingdom of heaven is by the way of the cross. There is no other way. A man cannot serve God, and yet be living like the world. He must "let his light shine;" and shine it must—if at all—through the medium of outward holiness. Let the mind then be impressed with this; let the individual, when he gives himself to God, be made to feel the extent of his covenant obligations; let this truth be fixed deep in the soul, and he will stand in the day of trial like the beaten anvil to the stroke. But if the heart is not sufficiently broken up for this gospel seed to take root there, "no sooner shall the sun be up, or temptations and persecutions arise, then because of the word he is offended," and all his goodness "withers away."

How marked was the Savior's care to prepare the minds of his disciples to meet without disappointment, the sufferings that inevitably awaited them. He held out no worldly allurements to dazzle and deceive them; he spread no bright covering over the dark future, to hide its scenes of persecution and blood. But plainly did He speak of the bitter trials that awaited them. "That they should be delivered up to be afflicted, and should be killed, and be hated of all men for his name's sake." When one said unto him, "Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest," instead of commending a zeal which originated only in the excitement of the moment, Jesus answered him, "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." As much as to say to him, "Have you counted the cost, and are you prepared for this? Can you, for my sake, wander homeless and friendless, 'be hated of men, and made the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things?'"

The Savior closes his ever memorable sermon upon the mount with this most beautiful illustration of practical religion: "He that heareth my sayings and doeth them. I will show you to whom he is like. He is like a man which built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock. And the rain descended and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house, and it fell not, for it was founded on a rock." Such is the man that doeth the commands of Christ. And such, too, is the importance, and such the security of practical godliness. Let us settle it then in our hearts that there is no other way but to live our religion, to obey God. He who thinks and acts otherwise, is the "foolish man, who builds his house upon the sand."

II. Practical Religion opposes itself to the sins of the age.

Religion is the great antagonist of sin. Not only as a system, but as manifested in the hearts and lives of its subjects. Their great work is to oppose sin. This opposition they must wage both by precept and example. They must do it. (1.) By example. Our world is in a sad condition, but to be ever finding fault will make things no better, nor to be always disclaiming against sin, while we ourselves are the servants of corruption. The starting point is to get ourselves right. Example is the most effectual preaching. It whets on truth the keenest edge. Without this, it is powerless in the hands of him who uses it. The industry of his neighbor is the severest rebuke to the sluggard; and the godly man's life is the greatest disturber of the sinner's conscience.

And who can reprove sin, who is not conscious of the uprightness of his life? "Thou who preachest that a man should not steal, dost thou steal?" Base, indeed, must be the man whose mouth is not dumb at his neighbor's sin, when he himself does the same things. And if he speak out, it must recoil upon himself, and who will be made the better? It is only he who lives his religion, whose daily life shows that he is what he professes to be, that can exert any salutary influence upon the minds of others. It is here we discover how absolutly essential is practical godliness in opposing sin, and how pure should the lives of all be who would honor Christ. "First, cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye."

He, who thus opposes sin in his life will do it. (2) By precept. A man will hate sin just in the same proportion as he loves God. When he loves God with all his heart, even so will he hate sin. And feeling thus, he cannot suffer sin upon his neighbor. He must lift his warning voice against it, whether in high places or low, in public or private, regardless of love or hate, how muchsoever or whomsoever it may offend. He who has offended no one in rebuking sin, must certainly have pleased the devil, and done little service for God. Less than this can never result from practical godliness. Religion itself is a practical thing, an affair both of the heart and the life, and in its very nature arrays itself in unyielding hostility to sin. We proceed to show,

III. That practical religion is the true source of a peaceful mind.

Such is the philosophy of religion, that it is inseparably connected with happiness. In adversity, it brings the mind sweetly to submit to the storm, and rejoice in the assurance of greater good. In prosperity, infinitely superior is the happiness from the gratitude felt, than from the blessings received. The anxious thought of to-morrow is allayed by a calm trust in God, and the discontent of to day silenced in the thought that our lot was cast by him who rules the storm, and numbers the very hairs of our head; and who has said, "all things work together for good to them who love God." And with a conscience pure as angels have, at peace with God, at peace with man, who could but be happy? But to suppose this joy the portion of him who but calls Christ, "Lord! Lord!" and does not the things which he says, is contrary alike to all Christian experience and the teachings of the Bible. To enjoy religion, a man must live religion. There can be no true peace, but in obeying God. Obedience is better than sacrifice and to hearken, than the fat of rams. "Great peace have all they who keep God's laws." To mourn the absence of heavenly joy, is but to confess our neglect of duty. "For hadst thou have hearkened" unto the word of the Lord, "then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." Dingo right and feeling right are inseparably connected. The purest joy flows to the heart in the faithful discharge of every Christian duty. "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." "For whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." But he who dreams he is serving God, when the great end in view is his own happiness, proves himself quite too selfish to do the one, or to enjoy the other.

The peculiar feature of gospel love is benevolence. He who has it thinks only of making others happy; and is surprised to find that while watering others, he has watered himself, and that of a truth "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Another point we wish to consider is,

IV. That practical religion alone does honor to the Christian system in exemplifying its true nature and design.

We judge of religion as of men—by its fruits. And it is but fair to test any system by its legitimate results. But we should learn to discriminate between what are the natural effects of a system, and those which are altogether casual or foreign. From the lack of this, religion has often been reproached, not for what resulted from it, but from the want of it. And the infliction of the greatest dishonor has often been from the inconsistent lives of those who professed it. How important, then, that the believer's life should reflect the virtues of the gospel. If its excellence is not seen here, in vain shall we look for it anywhere, unless it be as a mere system, good indeed, in itself, but dead and powerless.

The Savior entrusted the gospel in the hands of his disciples with the most solemn charge to do it honor. "Ye," saith he, "are the light of the world. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven. 'Herein is my father glorified that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.'" We must show in our lives that religion has made us better. Better husbands and better wives, better parents and better children, better friends and better neighbors. "The law of kindness" must be on our lips, and every act of life speak the purity of our hearts.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." He who feels for God's suffering poor, and divides with them his portion; that wipes away the widow's tears, and shelters the homeless orphan, and like an angel of mercy is ever at the sick bed side, does more to honor the religion of Jesus Christ than do all the long, formal prayers, saying, "Lord! Lord!" that have been offered since the fall.

How sublime, how God like are the precepts of the gospel. "Love your enemies. Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that dispitefully use you and persecute you. And what ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them likewise." Now, only as these precepts reflect their purity in the believer's life, is Christ honored. And to call him "Lord! Lord!" and neglect them is but to dishonor him. We pass to notice,

V. That practical religion is the ground on which the final destinies of all men will be adjusted at the last day.

The Scriptural argument is too clear to be mistaken. "Not every one that saith unto me Lord! Lord! shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." While a man is in duty bound to seek the truth and believe it, and is responsible for all the light he might have, and for what he may believe; yet his final judgment turns not on the light he had, but upon his improvement of it; not on his belief, but upon his practice. "Faith without works is dead" Living faith brings forth good works, and the fruit becomes the final test. How fitly is this truth taught in Mat. 25 The final decision of, "Come, ye blessed, inherit the kingdom," or "Depart, ye cursed," is made directly on the ground, "Inasmuch as ye did it," or "did it not" In the resurrection, "they that have done good," will come forth to a "resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, to a resurrection of condemnation"

When the Revelator saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened, "they were judged every man according to their works." "And behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

What an influence, then, should this, the most solemn of all truth, exert upon the hearts and lives of men. Can we fail to see how vastly important is practical religion, and how deeply it concerns us? Would we maintain inward piety, and enjoy the favor of God; would we do good, and honor Christ and his gospel; would we oppose sin, and stand acquitted in the judgment, it must be ours. No vain plea of "Lord! Lord!" will answer there. The true character of every man will appear in the light of that day, the secrets of all hearts will be revealed, and "every one receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." "What a man soweth, that shall be also reap." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, AUG. 29, 1871.

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

Jonesboro, Ill., Sep 9 and 10, as Br. Childs may arrange.

Freedmen's Conference, Morgan's Point on the Mississippi River, Ark., Sep. 12–17.

After this meeting I visit Memphis, and then go to Batesville, Ark., and the White River region, to labor for a time with Br. S. Rosebraugh.

A wide door is open in the White River region among the white people. They are poor and have small means; yet the poor must have the gospel. This people lost all by the war, and have not yet recovered. But are making the best of the situation. And best of all, they want the truth on the "blessed hope." The door was opened here providentially by Dr. Fletcher, and the word of the Lord has to some extent had a free course. They have been pleading for help for two years. I shall now visit them.

After this I shall visit the churches in Michigan, as I have promised Br. Wright and others. J. V. H.

"SOMETHING Practical." Our readers will find just this in Our Pulpit, this week, in a sermon by Br. L. C. Collins. It is as clear, lucid and convincing as the doctrinal essays we have published from his pen; and will command the unflagging attention of every reader.

Philosophy and Revelation.

The great problem before the Christian world for solution is this, viz.: "How can we harmonize the apparent clashing of popular philosophical conclusions, with the Bible." That they must and can be harmonized is evident, as no Christian can for a moment think of disbelieving in the least particular, that which is taught by God, and on the other hand no enlightened person wishes at this day to contradict philosophical truths. Nor can he conceive that God's word will ever be found contradicting truth. Two solutions are claimed for this problem, But only one can be right, as the results are directly opposed to each other. Immaterialists stand out as the advocates of one method of solving the problem.

Materialists step forward in favor of the other solution.

Let us notice for a moment their solutions and demonstrations, in comparison that we may determine which party is the best Mathematician. Let us give our immaterialistic friend who is almost as hasty in his desire to hurl his thunderbolt at materialism as he is in his conclusions the first hearing. "I can solve this problem to suit the world, so that even a Spiritist who denies the existence of God, shall be satisfied and even be pleased with it. The Bible is a blind book. God did not intend that man should understand what he meant by what he said. But man must understand a passage differently from what the common definition of the words contained in it would lead him to do. The Bible must be made to harmonize with human philosophy at all events, philosophy I take as truth; its conclusions are infallibly correct. Then to make the Bible true, its doctrines must accord with the teachings of philosophy. Philosophy teaches that the soul of man is immortal and immaterial. To prove this I need only refer to the innumerable hosts of mental philosophers, both ancient and modern. Now I harmonize the teachings of philosophy in this respect with the direct contradictions of this theory found in the Bible by giving to these contradictory passages no meaning, or such a meaning as will make them support any theory. This is the only solution to be given. The Bible must succumb to science; for the latter, speaking to our senses, makes deeper impressions than the former, appealing to our faith, which is not quite up to the "mustard seed pattern."

Now for the materialist's solution: "I take into consideration in the solution of this problem the respective sources from which philosophy and revelation flow. The one comes from man's conclusions based upon observations more or less extended; the other emanates from the author of of all things, Infallible God. The former may be true; the latter cannot be otherwise. I propose to modify philosophical conclusions, in order to harmonize them with Scripture, rather than do what I am forbidden to do—tamper with God's message to man. Scripture is the adamantine pattern to which we must shape all our theories, doctrines and beliefs. We cannot alter the meaning of straightforward passages in the Bible, and at the same time preserve the meaning that God intended to convey, any more than we can take up a philosophical work and twist the author's meaning into the direct opposite of what he says, and still claim that we have the idea he intended to express. And, moreover, as soon as we take the passage out of its literal signification, that moment we throw down God's opinion to pick up man's opinion.

If we read the Bible as it is, but one meaning can be had, that is, God's. If we alter it and make death mean misery, and life happiness, then, as no limitation can be given to the metaphorical use of words, we shall have an innumerable host of opinions as to what the passage means; all of them men's opinions, instead of the one opinion which God gives when we read believing what we read. We see no possible way of bending the Scriptures to suit our philosophy. They are firm and unyielding, being designed as a basis of belief instead of a constituent part, or a prop to a tottering theory.

Let us look at philosophy then, and see if we cannot effect the harmony by modifying its conclusions that men are immortal by the possession of an immaterial nature which cannot die. Ah! We find that philosophers, instead of groving this to be so, have imagined it, and have dreamed that their imagination and fancy were sufficient proof to base their conclusion upon. But facts innumerable array themselves against this conclusions, making it very easy for a person to so far modify this error of philosophers as to change it entirely, and make true philosophy teach that man is material and mortal, by nature; and if nothing but man's natural immortality was ours, no hope of life beyond death could be reasonably entertained.

But thanks be to God, true philosophy finds its complement in Scripture, which tells us of a life beyond, hidden in Christ, and of the only possible way to obtain it.

Here are the two solutions of Christianity's great problem. The popular solution being a remodeling of the Bible to make it agree with supposed truths: the unpopular solution making the Bible infallible truth, and bending men's theories to agree with its plain teachings.

Which solution should be advocated by those who believe that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness?" J. D. JONES.

Communion.

"The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? we being many are one bread, and one body, for we are all partakers of that one bread."—1 Cor. 10: 16, 17. "But behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table." (Lk. 22: 21.)

The question "to whom belongs the privilege to sit at the Lord's table," finds place in many Christian minds; and to answer this question is the object of the writer.

That the above statement is correct when correctly presented we do not deny. But to admit that it is the individual property of this, that, or any other church, as known in this age, we cannot. It is the Lord's institution, and his church are permitted, and required to use it. The first thought then, is, what is the church? and, of whom is it composed? The The church is a congregation of believers in Christ, drawn together by common sympathy, acknowledging Christ as their Master. "A company of believers in Christ." It is composed of any, or all of those in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, whether Jew or Gentile, bond or free, without regard to family names, particular places of residence, kindred, or people. There may be a church in Boston, in Philadelphia, Cincinnatti, Louisville, and in Chicago. In each of these places, then, we have believers in Christ. Now if a few of the brethren from each of these places shall assemble at one point, does their change of locality change their relation to Christ? Are they not as really believers in Christ when at Chicago, as when at Boston? All will answer: If they are really the disciples of Jesus, they are. But suppose they do not at all bear the same name! The community is made up of families; Smith, Jones, and Benson; James, George, and Mahlon. In their work, interest, and sympathy, when together, they are one, apart, they each have their home matters to look after; but even then, they are,—to say the least,—good neighbors.

A close communionist asks me: "May all these families eat together?" In other words: "Are they at liberty to extend their communion beyond their disciples?"

ANSWER. Brother, do you claim the right to invite your neighbor's children to eat with yours? "Yes sir." Do you claim the right to whip them, even though they deserve it, ever so much? "No sir." By this illustration it is seen that we are not consistent when we take the position that we may not eat with the members of other churches, simply because we have no right to deal with them for misdemeanor.

All the children of God are such by virtue of their faith in Christ Jesus, and not by virtue of any church record. (Gal. 3: 26.) The real church of Christ, then, is composed of all the true, in Christ; all that Jesus owns as his. Now as we cannot tell at first sight, whether Jesus owns the man who offers himself as a communicant with us, must we reject him? No! "Let a man examine himself, and so LET HIM EAT." (1 Cor. 11: 28.)

"The cup of blessing which we bless." Who are "WE?" I answer: Not WE Adventists! WE Baptists; WE Methodists! Though these names are perfectly proper, and serve as a matter of convenience, by which we are able to hold the title to our respective congregational property. We are not to worship our name, but we are to worship God. We are not to be bound up in our own name, but in Christ. There is but ONE Christ, one God, one Savior of men. Jesus speaks to all believers in Christ, when he says: "One is your Master, even Christ, and ALL YE are brethren."—(Mat. 23: 8.)

The "we," then, in the text, embraces "all in every place who call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, BOTH THEIRS AND OURS."

The cup of blessing is the communion of the blood of Christ. All who ever reach that blissful Eden's golden strand—will be permitted to stand on those fair plains because they washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. All go in through the same "door." They are one host, saved through the blood of Christ.

"The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" "There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." (Eph. 4: 4.) "For by one Spirit are we all baptised into one body, whether we be bond or free." "For the BODY is not one member but many." (1 Cor. 12: 13, 14.) "Now YE are the body of Christ, and members in particular." (1 Cor. 12: 27.) "And we being many are one bread and one body.

The scriptural communion, then, is the association together, of any, or all the members of the body of Christ (believers in Christ) to commemorate their Lord. "Do this in remembrance of me," was the command of Jesus to them all. So while all join in this service, it is to show that they remember their common Lord.

But, are we not liable to be imposed upon by improper, and unworthy persons? WE imposed upon! Who are we? What is our wonderful dignity? "The disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant greater than his Lord." Jesus said, "Behold the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table." What! Judas? Yes, Judas was there; but that fact does not change the inspired declaration, "he that eateth and drinketh unworthily eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." Here we are told of one who eateth and drinketh damnation. But to whom? To all that sit at the table? No, but "to himself."

The idea of individual responsibility must not be lost sight of. To his own master he standeth or falleth, was a saying of the great Teacher. We, if we are filled with the yearning bowels of Jesus Christ, will embrace in the arms of our love and fellowship all who acknowledge the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; and will believe it better to shake hands with Satan, unwillingly, than to crucify Jesus in the person of one of his little ones. The nearer we come to the real standard of Christian perfection, the less we shall feel disposed to judge others; and the larger our charity will be for all who, though in weakness, are trying to do the will of our Father in Heaven. We shall, as we become more like Jesus, be possessed of that meek and lowly mind that was in him. If now we are really his, his word will have place in us; and, if his word dwell in us, the portion of it to which the attention of the reader has been called in this article will be sufficient to lead him to conclude that there is no restriction in the house of God, but that all the members of heaven's great family are free in Christ Jesus, and equal in the enjoyment of all the rights and privileges of the children of the Most High.

The throne of grace, the baptism, the gifts of the Spirit, the table of the Lord, the word of God in written form, and the active voice from the servants of Jesus, were all given by the great Head of the church, to be shared in common by all that would accept of salvation through a crucified Lord, whose suffering love we commemorate in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. J. R. PRESTON.

The Christian Pulpit.

How great is its power! how immeasurable its influence! how supreme its importance! The mightiest issues are there joined and decided. There are fought the greatest battles; there are won the most splendid victories;—battles which are not recorded in human history, victories which are not emblazoned in earthly story; but which are recorded by angel pens, and sung among the anthems of heaven. Christ and Satan, time and eternity, life and death, heaven and hell, there do battle for the mastery. There is found the great defence of truth and righteousness; there the great means of human salvation; there the great instrument of divine regeneration. There the Christian is armed for the fray; there he is clad with the whole armor of God. The embattled hosts of sin and hell gather themselves around him, until his spirit shrinks within him at the unequal conflict, and the sword begins to drop from his nerveless grasp; but here, week by week, he gathers strength and confidence; here, over his head, the banner of the cross is displayed, whose ample folds always betoken coming victory. Pressed down to earth by the cares and anxieties of every-day life, here he finds the chariot of fire on which he mounts to things eternal and divine, the means ordained of God,

"His softened soul with radiant hope to move,
To light, to life, to promised joys above."

Here, too, are proclaimed the tidings of salvation, by which the perishing are saved, for it hath "pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Here is kindled this is the channel through which doth flow the perennial stream of Divine love. Christian preachers are frail, perishable, "earthen vessels;" but they are filled with the precious water of life so sweet to thirsty, dying men. Feeble they are as sinning mortals must be; but they wield the mighty battering ram of the gospel, so effectual in hurling down the walls of human pride and human sin. From their lips come the trumpet tones of the law, and the silvery voice of pardon; and the dying hear that voice, and live again.

THE FIRE OF ETERNAL LIFE

"There stands the messenger of truth:—there stands
The legate of the skies! His theme divine,
His office sacred, his credentials clear.
By him the violated law speaks out
Its thunders; and by him, in strains as sweet
As angels use, the gospel whispers peace."

He is the embassador of heaven, praying men in Christ's stead to be reconciled unto God.

Here, too, is seen the great instrument of human preservation and reformation. Every moral reform, every advance of freedom and true progress finds, or should find, its staunchest ally in the Christian pulpit; every effort of sin and wrong should here meet the most determined opposition. This is the battery whereon heaven doth mount its strongest artillery, and whence are flung the deadliest missiles at the bastions of evil with which Satan has filled the world. Hence is scattered the seed of truth eternal and divine; here is the light designed by God to illumine here is the instrument whereby the salt of the earth preserves its savor, and the world itself is guarded from every spreading corruption. The waves of the vast ocean of human error and sin, driven as by a whirlwind by human pride, seem to hurl themselves against the church of God with irresistible force: but against the Christian pulpit they beat as against a rock imperishable and unmmovable, its base resting upon the eternal Rock of Ages; and hence they are hurled back, white with useless rage, into the abyss of darkness whence they sprang. Such is the mission, such the power of the pulpit.

Nevertheless, it has been dreamed by many that its days are numbered, that shortly it will be entirely superseded by the power of the press, which by and by will do all the work in the cause of God, morality, and truth; our newspapers, we suppose, forming all the heavy artillery, while all our monthly magazines advance in light skirmishing order to join in the fray. Our pulpits are to be allowed to crumble into decay, one specimen probably being excepted, which will be allowed to stand in the British Museum among the ruins of Nineveh, with a Bible upon the top of it, mementoes of the folly and ignorant superstition of bygone days. We confess we do not share in any such expectations. That the press will exercise considerable influence in bringing about those changes which are necessary and inevitable in our pulpit ministrations we fully believe; but it will never supplant them. Its work is renovation, not supercession. The power of the pulpit will continue as long as the church and world continue.

This for many reasons. For example;—there is a power in the human voice which the press cannot possibly enlist in its aid; a music in the human tongue, however harsh and dissonant, which can never be made to quiver upon the printed page, and which in itself would suffice to secure the perpetuity of the pulpit, in common with every other form of oral instruction. Moreover, the writer can never excite the warm personal interest felt in the Christian minister: he is whom we have to imagine for ourselves; the preacher is generally united with us in the bonds of private friendship or personal esteem; he is not an abstraction, but a flesh and blood reality, thereby exercising immeasurably greater influence and power. Again, spiritual consolation and instruction are necessary concomitants of Christian worship; the same faith and the same experience which continually prompt the Christian man to join in public praise and prayer will lead him to seek encouragement and direction from those qualified to bestow it; the spirit of the worshiper and the heart of the disciple are closely allied. And yet further, the Christian ministry is of Divine ordination, and that which is of Divine institution, will assuredly outlast the decaying influence of all time. Human institutions will totter and fall, human ordinances be forever swept away by the restless tidal wave of change; but that which is of God shall endure. Through the few remaining years of our present dispensation the voice of the preacher will assuredly continue to sound.

Assuming then the perpetuity of the pulpit, it may be interesting and instructive to attempt to forecast its future. Great and radical changes are doubtless to be expected, and, indeed are indispensable. Like all things touched by human fingers, the pulpit partakes of human frailty; like all things earthly, it stands greatly in need of renovation. Already much has been done to this end, that which remains to be accomplished is but a continuation of the work already begun; in the light of the past and the present, therefore, let us look upon the future.

First of all, then, we trust we shall not be deemed presumptuous if we hazard the opinion that we may anticipate for the Christian pulpit a large increase of intellectual power. Stars of the first magnitude have in all ages shone within the ranks of the Christian ministry, and are found here in great profusion still; but of many it must be candidly admitted that they are by no means stars. Too often the ministry has been recruited from sources the most unsuitable, intellectual and even moral fitness being utterly disregarded. Men have thrust themselves upon this sacred office for the sole purpose of gaining a livelihood which their utter incapacity has prevented their obtaining by other means, and for this end have inflicted themselves through many weary years upon their MUCH ENDURING CONGREGATION, an incumbrance to the church, a dishonor to the ministry. The appointment to the office again has too often been in the hands of men who have prostituted it to the same unworthy end; they have used the right for the benefit of some younger son who was too great a coward to be a soldier, too dull to be a lawyer, too respectable to be a tradesman, too idle to be a worker; and so they have made him a clergyman, as the only office congenial with his limited talents and capacities. The lines in which Cowper satirizes preachers such as these are very familiar. In words in which indignation and contempt struggle for the mastery, he describes them as > "The things that mount the rostrum with a skip.

> And then skip down again; pronounce a text;
> Cry—hem! and reading what they never wrote,
> Just fifteen minutes, huddle up their work.
> And with a well-bred whisper close the scene."

The genus was very familiar when the words were penned; it is by no means yet extinct. Among all denominations of Christians, intellectual power in the pulpit is below the proper standard. How often are we compelled to listen to productions which are but a collection of the stalest platitudes, the wearisome reiteration in stereotyped phraseology of well known truths—or errors, feebleness of expression only exceeded by feebleness of thought, without life or earnestness, from which the only derivable lesson is patience, and in which the only acceptable word is "finally." Still, the present excels the past; in a great measure, we believe, the future will excel the present. Ere—long the power of appointing Christian teachers will cease to be AN HEREDITARY RIGHT, or an appanage of political power, and will be given to its only rightful possessors—Christian people; the process of agglomeration so discernable among the nations will so reach the churches, and numerous Little Bethels and Small Zions will be blended into more Scriptural assemblies, which will thus be enabled to exercise that care and discrimination in the selection of spiritual instructors which, in their present feebleness is utterly impossible; the constant ministry of one man to one people,—a ministry which must try the powers of an intellectual giant—will be succeeded by a wiser and more Scriptural plan; the churches will demand and secure men of power, "apt to teach," able to interest and profit their hearers, well instructed themselves in the kingdom of heaven, understanding and practicing that wise axiom of the Great Teacher, "bringing forth out of their treasury things both new and old." This we believe will prove indispensible to the stability and success of the pulpit of the future.

Again, we anticipate an increased regard to the moral character of the ministry. When men of the world appoint to this sacred office, it is not surprising that they sometimes choose those like minded with themselves; that the church has groaned beneath the burden of worldly pastors, that the most solemn themes have been mouthed by unholy lips. Even the world will ere long shrink from the contamination of such hypocrisy; the church will irresistibly demand that the Christian preacher shall at least be a Christian man.

Further, we look for a continued manifestation of increasing earnestness and zeal. Once, before Wesley and Whitfield had stirred up the stagnant mass of English religionism, to be earnest was to be vulgar; only sermons of the mildest and most soothing kind were deemed acceptable. Hogarth satirized a too common delinquency when he pictured a slumbering village congregation, addressed by a half slumbering curate from the words, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Now, happily, earnestness is rather the rule than the exception: by and by, we trust, dealing not in empty declamation, but in thoughtful, earnest, loving words; these alone are fitted to wield the power of the pulpit.

THE SPIRIT OF SACERDOTALISM, which has worked so much harm in the church will, we fain hope, continue to decay until it dies. Like most of our ecclesiastical evils, it has come to us from the corruptions of popery. Priestly assumption is the essence of the system, the pillar supporting the whole fabric. It puts the creature in the place of the Creator, talks of our Lord God the Pope, invests a sinning mortal with the Divine attribute of infallibility, crushes out all that is noble and manly and heaven-aspiring beneath the iron hoof of priestcraft, bids men cower like children before the priest, place all reason and right in his keeping, and march in steady phalanx to the polling booth, prepared with equal readiness to vote for a priest, a tomahawk, or a gatepost, as the word shall be given. Such is popery;—the folds of its huge mantle have but too generally been flung around our Protestant churches. We have disowned the authority of the pope of Rome, only to see other popes occupy his place, framers of "Articles" and "Confessions" writers of "Institutes" and "Sermons," in whose decrees we are all bound to acquiesce. If Christian men are content to move in the old grooves of thought, well; if not, a storm shakes the land. Let a man venture to express the mildest doubt of the wisdom of certain human rulers enjoined by such august authority, and if pecuniary deprivation fail to enlighten him, excommunication must follow;—this being the only form of persecution now allowed. We may have dethroned Pope Pius; but Pope Wesley and numerous others reign in his stead, careful to exclude all adherents of "new views" which are not sanctioned by their authority. Nay, we have not only popes, but priests; ministers of Christ who, indeed, aim to be lords over God's heritage, who are "dressed in a little brief authority," and emboldened thereby, PLAY "FANTASTIC TRICKS," not only before high heaven, but also in the sight of men; mightily concerned for the maintenance of their power; but caring little for the peace or well-being of the church. And may we venture to hint that the light in which Christian ministers are regarded by all denominations savors too much of the same papal spirit, investing them with the attributes of a superior and impossible sanctity, and clothing them with reverential titles which are but rags stolen from the harlot of Babylon. The use of the then usual title of respectful deference borne by religious teachers was expressly forbidden by our Lord to his disciples;—have not his words a meaning for us? "Be not ye called Rabbi; for one is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." (Mat. 23: 8.) Possibly the ministry and the church of the future may gradually arrive at the same conclusion; in any case, we feel assured the rebellion of the people against the priests begun by the Reformation will be carried to its legitimate issue; the spirit of the age and the wisdom of the church will unite to sound the death knell of sacerdotal assumption and priestly power.

Associated with this anticipation is the one we now present;—the pulpit of the future will manifest a better acquiescence with the claims of the Bible as the sole rule of faith and practice. The Reformation of the past did much to ESTABLISH THE BIBLE in its rightful position as the one center and source of religious truth; the Reformation of the future will do still more. The treasure hidden in the field has been discovered; but we have still to learn its priceless value. The Bible is not yet the one sovereign Lord of the Christian conscience. Human tradition, human philosophy, human authority, still exercise great influence in the determination of questions of Christian truth. "Plato, thou reasonest well," is the superabundant evidence presented in behalf of supposed fundamentals of our faith. Doctrines forged upon the anvil of priestcraft,—hideous libels upon a benevolent Deity—are still promulgated as indubitable verities, while the protest of Holy Writ, loud and vehement as it is, is drowned in a chorus of learned 'interpretations," which deprive words of all meaning, and reduce the revelation of God to a mass of incongruous absurdities, capable of any construction which may please the caprice of the reader. The coming of Christ is the destruction of Jerusalem, or the approach of death, or the downfall of the Roman empire, or the decay of Turkey, or the preaching of the gospel, or the gradual wasting of the Papacy. Destruction means continued existence; eternal life signifies happiness; to be "burnt up" like chaff, "consumed," "be no more," "perish," are all consistent with never ending being; "the soul that sinneth it shall die," is to be understood as a declaration that "the soul that sinneth will live forever." Not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully" is the apostolic injunction thus consistently obeyed. But the voice of God will yet prove mightier than the voice of man; the Bible, which has outlived the malice of its foes, will even survive the folly of its friends; reason will yet prove too strong for philosophy. As men of the world more persistently than ever fling off the authority of the Scriptures, men of God will more resolutely than ever recognise ITS SOVERIGN CLAIMS, and refuse to be bound by theories and doctrines of men. To quote the idea of Dean Alford, men will not be satisfied to drink of the water conveyed through the pipes of human tradition; we shall then desire each one to go to the sacred spring up in the everlasting hills of God's own truth. The consequent change will doubtless be great. Many pet theological expressions will entirely disappear; divers doctrines will be banished from our pulpits; our hymn books will undergo considerable revision; the chains of error will be shattered; the word of God will stand in the front of our array; and at last, in fact, as well as theory, will it be recognized that "the Bible, and that the Bible alone, is the religion of Protestants."

And the pulpit of the future will, we trust, display this chief excellence that more prominently and clearly than ever will Christ be its theme and glory. Only thus can it rise to its true importance and grandeur. Very beautifully and accurately does Bunyan describe the Christian minister as one with "eyes lifted up to heaven, the best of books in his hand, the law of truth written upon his lips, the world behind his back, standing as if pleading with men, and a crown of gold hanging over his head;" but one thing more is necessary to the perfection of the portraiture, "with the glory of Christ surrounding him, and the name of Christ surging from his tongue."

CHRIST MUST BE THE TEXT of every sermon, the subject of every discourse, the great end of all our preaching. We may use wefts of various colors, doctrinal, experimental, illustrative, practical; but the one warp running through the whole must be Christ. Those neatly arranged and gentlemanly essays, miscalled sermons, which are sometimes inflicted upon us, remarkable chiefly for their faultless grammar, and the entire absence of Christ, are unworthy of the dignity of the pulpit. From him alone can it derive glory and grandeur. Christ the center figure of the gospel, Christ the hope of the church, Christ the Redeemer of man, Christ the coming Judge, Christ the King on Zion, Christ the song of heaven, Christ our life and everlasting joy;—these must be the themes of our pulpit ministrations. In the midst of the jargon of contradictory creeds must we preach Christ; in the presence of those who are so resolute in the pursuit of gorgeous shadowy ceremonial must we preach Christ; in the face of the uprising tide of atheistic infidelity must we preach Christ; for the removal of all error must we preach Christ the truth; for the dispersion of all darkness must we manifest Christ the light; in the midst of the world's sin proclaim Christ our righteousness; unto the world in its ruin preaching Christ as its redemption; even until the Christ we preach shall come [illegible] to erect his throne, establish hi[illegible]dom, and fill the earth with the songs of salvation.—William W. Skemp, in Rainbow.

Faithful 's Home.

"Has Br. Faithful got home?"

"No but I have been looking for my husband this two days past—perhaps he is detained by an especial interest in the meeting. He is absent most all the time, and I feel very lonely some days. My little girl asked me the other night 'When will the meetings be done, and Papa stay at home?' I felt to say in my heart that there are very few who know the sacrifices connected with the life of the wife of an Advent preacher. You who have your husbands to daily aid you in the many cares and burdens that would otherwise fall on your shoulders, can never learn by theory the trials through which such women pass. It is true that blessings are connected with sacrifice for God as we look forward to the recompense of reward; but day by day there is the vacant chair, and a father's voice is missed at the family altar. When the lamps are lit at evening the family circle is still broken, and often dreary watches of the night are spent with the sick ones.

"They must trust in God."

"Yes but would it not be a relief to have a loving husband to share responsibilities in such an hour: and when the long cold storms of winter shut in on us, or the tempest rages with fearful lightning and thunder which makes the very earth to tremble, though they may feel all confidence in God's protecting power; yet, as we are social beings, how good at such times to hear the consoling voice of a husband and father, and experience the sunshine and good cheer that his counsel and presence brings to the household."

But while I was musing Br. Faithful came in, weary with a journey of toil and care; and said—"How good it seems to get home once more. Here I find rest that I experience nowhere else." But it seemed to me that it was a rest from one kind of work to engage in another; for numerous little duties had accumulated in his absence, which must now be attended to. Wood pile and flour barrel must be replenished, with other things necessary for the comfort of the family; while that parcel of letters on the desk indicates that his stay at home will be short. A., B., C. and others have written for help: they want meetings in their neighborhood; "Please answer soon," they say. Some put in a postage stamp to pay the postage, but the most seem to have forgotten that stamps cost a minister as much as they do other people. I wonder if they do think they are free, like the gospel. A minister who receives on an average one letter a day to be answered has a postage bill of over ten dollars a year to pay.

But let us look into this home once more. It is evening the children are in bed. The wash-tub has been out to-day, and as Br. F. leaves in the morning, his good wife is getting his clothes in readiness, that there may be no delay to-morrow—which will soon be here.

Onward they go hurrying through life. The joys of home are sacrificed that he may carry joy and gladness to many a household, making glad many hearts with the gospel. I have drawn but imperfectly the outlines of this picture. I wish I could portray the reality as it looked to me. Let us who have the comforts of home while we daily gather at our well spread boards and kneel with our little ones around the family altar, remember those who labor among us in the Lord, and esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake.

Surely we can but delight to stay up their hands, and to feel that we are sacrificing with them, while we bear some humble part in administering to their wants from our temporal things, and share the reproval which falls on all who identify themselves with these last-day heralds. TRUTHFUL.

Amidst the deluge of heterogeneous kinds of literature whitch flood society, it is all important to be wise and discriminating in the choice of books or reading matter. Books are companions. Many a person who would avoid a corrupt and corrupting associate seems to think there is no danger to be apprehended from the printed page. Sin, failing to accomplish its ruinous ends when it assumes the human form, easily succeeds in effecting its purposes by insinuating its poison into the soul through the power of the press. Confucius said: "In what part of the world soever thou art forced to spend thy life, correspond with the wisest, associate with the best." If there be a substantial element of wisdom in this counsel, it more fitly pertains to the world of literature than to the world of life. The idle vicious stories that fill many of our popular papers and magazines; the endless number of works of fiction that are writen by third-rate authors, who at best, have but transient reputation, and who only aim to excite a prurient imagination and create a feverish and unhealthy action of the mind, but never enrich and ennoble the reader; the coarse attacks, the vulgar appeals, and the prejudiced views and discussions of our political journals, by which we are so blinded to the truth and turned from the right way—what a mission of evil have these things in our community! How they do minister—do they not?—to our own depraved tastes, and our bitter hatreds, and our discontent of mind! It is something that we need to learn, that there is a kind of reading of which no possible extent will be able to enlarge very much our mental development or intellectual attainment, as there is a kind which surely will, if continuously indulged in, result in our moral undoing.

The Times.

AT HOME.

.... From March, 1870, to June, 1871, out of a population of 180,000 in Buenos Ayres, 20,000 perished from the fever.

.... A probable large increase in the distillation of ardent spirits is announced for the coming season. That means an increase in crime, poverty, suffering and human wo.

.... If the tobacco used in this country, during the year ending June 30, 1871, had been equally divided, it would have been two pounds and a quarter to each individual, besides thirty-five cigars apiece.

.... It is said that Napoleon and the infamous Christine, of Spain, are negotiating for homes—magnificent estates—in this country. Let us hope they will keep away. We do not wish their society.

.... One of the basest things we know of is the base ball fever of this country. Over 20,000 people recently attended a Chicago exhibition of this latest form of gambling. Papers, otherwise quite respectable, devote whole columns to the reports of contests here and there. What folly!

.... A correspondent of the Reflector, writing from Brooklyn, estimates that 37,000 people in that city go to church every Sunday, and 75,000 go to the 1635 grog shops every day in the week! Truly, a sad picture. Is there no power in the gospel to reach these 75,000 and lead them to a better life The Brooklyn churches raise thousands of dollars a year to send the gospel to convert the heathen. They believe they can be converted. Can the Brooklyn heathen be converted by the same means? Or the Boston heathen?

.... We are in an era of casualties. Disaster follows disaster with frightful rapidity. The New York riot, with its fifty deaths, was followed by the Westerfield explosion, with twice as many. The Railway accident in Maine—the more terrible because inexcusable—is supplemented by a fire damp explosion at Pittston, Pa., with seventeen deaths. Besides these, a host of minor accidents are recorded, which with the details of crime, make one almost wish that the telegraph would cease to work, and relieve us from its every day's report of wrong, outrage, suffering and death, at home and abroad.

.... In making the soundings of the Atlantic Telegraph between Newfoundland and Ireland, a small tube with a valve was fitted to the end of the line, so as to bring up a little of the sediment from the bottom of the sea, and when this was dried it was found to be a dust so fine that on rubbing it between the fingers it would disappear in the cracks of the skin. On placing this dust under a microscope each particle was seen to be a shell—the home of a sentient being! When these shells are highly magnified, little holes are discovered in them through which delicate filaments protruded, that were the animals' organs of locomotion. As these filaments branch out like the roots of a tree, the animal is called a rhizopod, from two Greek words which signify root-footed. As the rhizopod is the simplest form of animal life, it is probably the oldest. The shells are found in all of the geologic periods, and as we go down in the strata, or backward in the ages, they regularly increase in size and numbers.

.... In its late issue, for Aug. 8, the Boston Herald says: There has been a larger number of cases entered on the docket of this court and disposed of for the week ending to-day, than for any other week since the court was established. This is indeed remarkable, and to people who may be interested in compiling and analyzing the statistics of vice and crime in this city, it opens up a broad and instructive field for study and remark. With all our boasted agencies of reform, churches, sabbath schools, Christian associations, and charitable and philanthropic institutions for the reclamation and salvation of the fallen and the unfortunate, the ladder of crime and vice in the city of Boston is larger and more

Christ the Corner-Stone.

God has laid a Corner-stone,
And on it, by faith, I rest;
Saved by Christ, through grace alone,
In my Father's love I'm blest!

Nothing to the Stone I bring,
But from it my all receive;
Trusting in its strength, I sing
Of the grace which bids me live!

Bearing all my sin and guilt,
This tried Stone shall never move,
And the blood which Jesus spilt,
Shall my claim to mercy prove.

On this Stone I rest secure,
Though a flood breaks at its feet,
My foundation standeth sure,
Though the winds in fury beat.

Precious Stone! I rest on thee,
Though by men thou art despised,
Wonderful thou art to me,
Of all gifts most dearly prized!

Coming to the living Stone,
Casting off my fear and pride,
Nothing have I of my own,
In my Savior's wounds I hide!

Correspondence

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

TUESDAY, Aug. 8. On my way to Chicago, I had a long conversation with a respected citizen of St. Joseph, Mo., on the nature and destiny of man. It was the first clear light he had ever seen on the question. The conversation commenced in this way. I was reading Mr. Constable's work on future punishment. While sitting behind me, his eye caught the following words: "Rise of the theory of eternal life in hell." When I laid the book down, he said. "Pardon, me sir; my eye caught a few words in the book you have just laid down, which deeply interest me. Will you allow me to look at the work." Of course it afforded me great pleasure to do so. After reading a while, he said, "Is this work for sale at the Book stores?" I told him I thought not, but that I imported them, and could send him one. "Please do so," said he; "for I want to get more light on the subject. It has been a distressing thought to me, that any of God's creatures should suffer forever in flames of fire."

I now opened the Bible, and we read, and compared the Scriptures on the themes of the future of the righteous and the wicked, till we arrived in Chicago, when we parted—he a much happier man for the light he had received from the Bible. The direction of the Savior is a good one: "As ye go preach."

On arrival I went to the Green St. prayer meeting, which was good. What a contrast between the privileges of the church here, and those of the people with whom I have been laboring, on the Western frontier. After enjoying the hospitalities of Eld. Burr for the night, I came home by the early train, and found all well, with plenty of work for me; which during the twenty-four hours of my stay, I finished up, and on Thursday, Aug. 10, left for

BROCKPORT, N. Y.

On the way I called at Detroit, and upon Sr. Alley and Br Lindsay, among the isolated and waiting ones, to give them a word of cheer. Being almost prostrated with illness, I rested and recruited under their care, till night, or the time for my train.

Br. Wm. Lindsay, is from Scotland, and is a living concordance of the religious state of society and their various opinions, as existing in Edinboro, and vicinity fifteen and twenty years ago. He was personally acquainted with Dr. Wardlaw, one of the chief of the doctors and fathers of the denomination of the English Independents. His narrative of him and others was of the liveliest interest to me. I shall never forget [illegible] time when at the World's Alliance in Free Mason's Hall, London, in 1846, when I was bitterly assailed by my own countrymen, in the Alliance, for seconding and supporting the motion of John Howard Hinton, of London, how kindly and heartily he gave me the hand of fellowship, and exhorted me to stand firm to the principle. He was the friend of the oppressed and the slave, and boldly maintained his position to the end of life. But he died before the jubilee of the American bondmen, for whom he prayed, and plead, arrived. A blessed man! We shall see him when Jesus comes.

Br. Lindsay got hold of the truth before he came to America, and here became more enlightened, and saw the whole Advent view clearly: and he lets his light shine. At present he is with the Disciple church here; but mourns that he gets nothing to feed the faith he holds; and he longs for gospel preaching. I trust that he and others will yet have the truth in Detroit. But there is no opening just now.

While taking bodily repose my mind was active, and I seized two new works just issued from the Advent press, by the Western Association.

HADES AND SHEOL, AND THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS, BY ELD. L. C. COLLINS; this came first in order. I had read the first edition, which was called for and taken up before we could supply the orders. It is the new, and second edition that I have just read. I must say that it is a solid and reliable addition to our Advent literature. In the main it cannot be gainsayed. It will be a seasonable help to all who wish to have a right view of the intermediate state. It will be seen by the notice in another part of this paper, that there is now afull supply.

The second book is a new work, by Br. Wm. Sheldon.

THE LIFE BEYOND DEATH, IN THE HOME OF THE HOLY. This subject is treated in his usual clear, terse style, and, withal, and best of all, is treated not from the standpoint of Platonic, or human philosophy, but the plain word of God. He shows clearly if there is a future life, it comes through the resurrection of the dead. And this is beyond all question the truth. And this resurrection is not the elimination of something from the dead, as Swedenborg, Spiritists, progressive Universalists, and Unitarians, and latterly many Orthodox teachers hold, but it is the resurrection of the dead, who come out of the sea, and the earth, which "give them up" at the "sound of the last trump."

This last work of Br. S. will be read with as much, or more, interest as any of his former productions. Let it be widely scattered and read.

FRIDAY, Aug. 12. Was welcomed to Brockport, N. Y., by Brn. Davis and Brownell, of the Advent church here. The church in this city has had many trials in time past, but has outlived them all. A few faithful ones have stood as pillars and the weaker ones have been helped to hold on, and stand fast in the faith. The Lord opened the way for them to obtain a convenient chapel, built by the Baptists, but not used by them any longer. It is every way suited to their wants: and so the Lord provides.

SABBATH, Aug. 13. Spoke this a. m., on baptism for the resurrection of the dead, showing that it was a symbol of the resurrection. "Buried with him in baptism, that like as Christ was raised up by the glory of the Father, even so, we should walk in newness of life." It is not sprinkling, or pouring; it is a burial. An immersion of the body in water, as a symbolic burial with Christ in his death, and rising again, all of which is symbolic of the real resurrection at the last day, the ground and hope for the future life. This was the apostolic idea. This was apostolic Christianity; [illegible] now: but how few see, [illegible] and believe it. Yet it is the truth.

I have immersed six persons to-day, who were sprinkled thirty years ago, who with their families, have since been groping in darkness and doubt, dissatisfied, hesitating, waiting for some light, or help to get out of the mist and confusion of papal error, by which sprinkling, which means nothing, was substituted for God's plan, of immersion for the resurrection of the dead, to the endless life.

Br. F. F. Brownell and family were among the happy ones, thus after a long suspense, to put on Christ. We had a glorious day. We used the beautiful flowing river for the immersion. The people lined the bank, on both sides, and during the service there were many who wept, while others rejoiced. Six happy souls put on Christ, understandingly.

I spoke at night on the signs of the speedy coming of Jesus, and at the close we ate the Lord's Supper. It has been a day of much blessedness for the Brockport church. Praise God for his goodness!

An Address.

Beloved Brethren: At the second annual Conferance representing the southern section of the state held at Jeffersonville in May last, a resolution was adopted, enlarging the boundaries of the Conference so as to include the whole State. The attendance was so large and encouraging, that all felt that we could safely arrange for the meeting of all the brethren in the state next year, somewhere near its geographical center. For this purpose, it was thought best to make an effort to lease or buy a small tract of ground, about four or six acres, convenient of access, and fit it up as a permanent place of meeting, where all can feel at home and pitch their tents, and be independent of the owners of land on which we have heretofore been dependent for a place to worship, and hold conferences. On this plat of ground a large shed could be erected to be used as a shelter from both sun and rain. Around it visitors could pitch their tents, and board themselves, or take their meals at a common boarding tent. This plan for the future, if carried out would greatly strengthen our State organization. We would all feel that we had a joint interest in the property, and each one would contribute more cheerfully to improve and and beautify the consecrated spot.

Brn. Cass E. C. Andrews, and myself, were appointed a committee to negotiate for the purchase of such a place. And here I would say, that if this should meet the eye of any brother near the center of the state, and he should know of a desirable piece of ground that can be had upon reasonable terms we would thank him if he would give the desired information to one or all of the committee. To consummate this arrangement we would want several hundred dollars, which we would expect to raise by voluntary contribution. I believe the money can be had, and would be subscribed by the brethren in the State. Aid could also be obtained from friends who enjoy the benefit of our ministry. Now let us all determine to have such a place, and we can get it and pay for it.

I would remind you of the fact that Br. E. C. Andrews, was appointed State Evangelist, with instructions to solicit contributions wherever he labors, to sustain him in the field. Having just emerged from an unorganized and chaotic state, we are of course in our infancy, and consequently without means to do any thing in the way of missionary work. But believing that God will bless our good intentions, and put it in the hearts of our dear brethren, poor though they may be, to assist our state evangelist, and get their neighbors to contribute, we appointed Br. Andrews and committed him to the chances of support.

Now, brethren do your best and God will prosper you in your business, fill your barns and storehouses with an abundance of the good things of the world, and your hearts with peace and joy. Remember that Br. Andrews has a family to support, and his temporal possessions and means are very limited. They must not be allowed to suffer want, while he is in the Lord's vineyard. Do not wait for him to ask for assistance, but see to it yourselves that contributions are taken up at all his meetings. Give liberally, not grudgingly. He will report all his receipts at the next annual Conference. God loves a cheerful giver.

I would add that not only Br. Andrews, but all our young preachers laboring in a limited district, should also be encouraged, not only by words of cheer, but by more substantial aid. We need laborers in the harvest, and we cannot have them if we neglect our duty to them. Men cannot devote their time, talents, and all they have to a starving occupation. No man can, or ought to go a warfare upon his own charges. It is an oracle of Scripture and reason, that the the laborer is worthy of his hire. Therefore, let me exhort you to open your hands wide unto our preachers, and thereby induce them to study to be useful and efficient workmen for the Lord.

Finally, brethren be ye all of one mind, stand together. Maintain our organization, without which we cannot prosper. We have seen the ruinous consequences of dissensions and divisions,—of making opinions, and hobbies tests of fellowship, terms of union and communion. The best and the holiest cause in the world can be ruined and disgraced by the pride and ambition the human heart. One factionist, vainly puffed up with his fleshly mind can pull down faster than ten men can build up. Shun all such men as you would a leper, or a pestilence. We want union upon common ground,—Bible facts and Bible commands and promises,—not on impracticable and distracting theories. As a body of people we are engaged in the proclamation of one of the most sublime and soul stirring truths of revelation, —the personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to set up an everlasting Kingdom on earth and save and glorify his waiting people. All who love his appearing and kingdom and are daily and hourly looking for it, ought to be one people regardless of differences of opinion.

In the providence of God, we have been raised up to harbinger the day of the Lord, and to wake up the world to that event. Let the cry still go forth, then from all Adventists, "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him! He cometh to judge the earth with his truth, and reward every man according to his works. N. FIELD.
President of the Indiana State Conference:

Good News of The Kingdom.

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."

These words were spoken by our Savior, and addressed to the disciples, as he sat upon the Mount of Olives. They were spoken with special reference to the end of the world; for we find that the disciples came to Jesus, privately saying, "Tell us, when shall these things be? And what shall be the sign of thy coming [second coming], and of the end of the world?" In answer to these questions the Savior goes on to tell them that certain things should transpire, or take place prior to his second advent, or end of the world. And after enumerating these things he used the above quoted language. "And this gospel." The disciples not really understanding the force of the language seem to say in their minds, What gospel? [illegible] the Savior says, "This gospel [illegible] kingdom." Well what about it? Why the good news and the glad tidings of the kingdom are to be preached in all the world.

Now, Savior, we want to know what the good news and glad tidings of the kingdom is to be preached in all the world for. Well my chosen and faithful servants, you to whom it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God, I will tell you. It is "for a witness unto all nations," that I am going to come again to set up my everlasting kingdom. Well what is to be done after the gospel of the kingdom shall have been preached in all the world for a witness, unto all nations? We wish to know all about it. Why the end is to come. What end? Why the end of the world.

That being the case what are we to do under the circumstances. Are we to preach that men go to heaven and hell at death, and that we possess innate immortality? Not by any means; for that would be preaching another gospel, and they that preach any other gospel shall be Anathema, when I shall come the second time, without sin unto salvation.

But some will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts will they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, and they will turn their ears away from the truth, and they shall be turned unto fables. That does not make any difference: preach the word. Be instant in season and out of season, rebuke, exhort, and reprove with all long suffering and doctrine. And lo! I am with you always, by my Spirit, even unto the end of the world.

What a blessed thought that Jesus, the divine Son of God, is with his people always, even unto the end.

"The kingdom." We would like to know what you would have us understand by the kingdom. Don't you know that the prophet Daniel, that man full of the Spirit of the holy God, has told us in his prophetical writings that in the days of these kings (not in the days of this king, or of that king, but "in the days of these kings,) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom that shall not be destroyed, neither shall it be given to other people: but it shall break in pieces an and consume all other kingdoms [earthly kingdoms], and it shall stand forever?"

Yes, certainly. Is that the kingdom you have reference to, that we should preach about?

Of course it is. Do you not know that there came John the Baptist. or John the immerser [not John the sprinkler, nor John the pourer; for who ever heard of such a thing as pouring and sprinkling men and women into the river Jordan in the wilderness]; and saying, Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand?

Yes we have known of it.

Have you forgotten that while I was with you I went about all Gallilee, teaching in your synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom.

We remember those things: hence when we pray, we pray, "Thy kingdom come," even as thou hast taught us.

Now, my faithful ones, being the Son of the Most High, I adjure and commission you by the power in me vested from him that sent me, that you go forth into all the world, and as you go, preach the kingdom of heaven at hand. Tell them that certain kingdoms have arisen which have borne rule over all the earth, commencing with the Babylonian kingdom, with Nebuchadnezzar at its head, which bore rule over all the earth for one hundred and thirty-nine years. Tell them that the second in the scale of universal empires was the Medo-Persian kingdom, which commenced its reign before me five hundred and thirty-eight years, which overcame the Babylonian, so that it was nomore. This kingdom bore universal sway for two hundred and seventy years. Tell them that the third universal kingdom was the Grecian, which began its reign before me three hundred and thirty-one years, and continued to rule the nations of the earth for one hundred and seventy years. Tell them that the fourth and last kingdom which is to bear universal rule is the Roman or iron kingdom, which commenced its reign before me one hundred and sixty-one years, and which it shall become divided, according to the language of prophecy of Daniel.

Tell them that God through the prophet Ezekiel predicted the overthrow of the throne of Israel, by saying, "He would overturn, overturn, overturn it, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." It was overturned from the Babylonian to the Medo-Persians; from the Medo-Persians to the Grecians; from the Grecians to the Romans. It is now being trodden down by the Gentiles, and will be until he come whose right it is, and God shall give it to him.

The New Birth.

Some of our brethren advocate that the new birth is not in this life; but at the resurrection. I believe in a birth at the epoch when "a nation shall be born at once," and we become the children of God in a physical sense, "being the children of the resurrection." I also believe in a moral or spiritual birth, which will constitute us the "children of God by faith." It seems strange to me that a doctrine so essential of itself, should need any argument. But so it is. I claim this new birth for every child of God, because I think the Scriptures teach it. Let us see. In 1 John 4: 7, we read: "And every one that loveth is born of God." Also 2: 29. "Ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." Again, 5: 4: "For whosoever is born of God overcometh the world." We have the assurance in the above quoted texts, that every one that loveth, and is doing righteousness, and overcoming the world is born of God. Let us believe what the word says.

Once more. John in his 1 Epistle 3: 2, says: "Beloved now [present tense] are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall [future tense] be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is." If we are now the "sons of God" as John says, that we have had a birth of some kind. The resurrection has not taken place; consequently we have had no resurrection birth. Therefore I conclude that we must have a spiritual or moral birth, which I call the new birth. Peter in his 1 Epistle 1: 22, 23, addresses the elect thus: "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently; being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." And then the exhortation: "As new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word." (ch. 2: 2.)

John says (1 John 1: 12, 13): But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name, which were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." James says (ch. 1: 18): "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures." Paul to Titus says: "According to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit."

Have we experienced this "washing of regeneration,' or new birth? If so, happy are we. But, can we know any thing about it? I think we can. What says John? "Marvel not my brethren, if the world hate you.... We know that we have passed from death unto life [How?] because we love the brethren." (1 John 3: 13, 14.) Again (ch. 4: 7): "Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God." Once again 5: 1, 2, 3. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him. By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grevious."

Now the question arises, Do we love the brethren? (Not only those that believe as we do; but all that love the Lord Jesus, and his appearing.) Do we keep his commandments? If so, rest assured that we have "passed from death unto life," and have become "unto our God kings and priests," and can now offer our spiritual sacrifices, and by and by "we shall reign on the earth" in its purified state.

We may not be able to tell just how we received the new birth. It is as the Savior told Nicodemus. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof; but canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the spirit." (John 3: 8.) We know (those of us who have experienced this change) "that whereas we were once blind [spiritually] we now see, and the things we once loved we now hate."

I would warn all to seek and to obtain regeneration in this life. It will be too late, if we wait until the resurrection. We have the promise, that if we seek we shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto us. Let none delay. Make haste. Time is short. What we do, must be done quickly. If we have this spiritual birth, we shall have the physical birth which will be a change from mortality to immortality at the appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ.

G. E. MERRILL.

[It may be proper to say, that the word rendered 'born' in John's first epistle would be more justly translated by begotten. So many render it.] ED.

"My Times are in Thy Hand."

Assurances of timely succor and protection are not more sweet and comforting to the weary and lonely traveler, as he wends his doubtful way through the dangers of a foreign and hostile shore, than are the promises of the precious Bible to the way-worn Christian as he makes his perilous journey through the wilderness of this world to the mansions which the Savior has gone to prepare, and which he will bring with him when he comes "to make the place of his feet glorious," "and to be admired of all them that believe." And though while in this state of preparation the saint finds himself in an enemy's land, surrounded by innumerable foes, who are ever ready to impede his progress, and effect, if possible, his final overthrow, yet in all the mysterious dealings of his heavenly guide, which in his weakness he is not able to comprehend, coming as they frequently do in floods of deep waters and storms of adversity, he is cheerful as he moves onward amid the fearful struggle, if only able to look up, and with implicit confidence, repeat, "my times are in thy hand!"

Oh! what words of peace are these; bringing with them a blessed state of repose and assurance to the soul. And though a fiery ordeal of sorrow and persecution may sweep over the pilgrim, it is only that more beautiful traits of the Christian character may be developed, that deeply hidden qualities and sublimer virtues may be discovered. The brightest examples of constancy and integrity that ever adorned our world, have shed their luster through sorrows and afflictions, more than in prosperity. A beautiful writer has remarked: "Was it not so with John in his exile? His character was more fully displayed, than when the popular preacher at Ephesus. Was it not equally so with Bunyan? No one would have heard of him had he not been shut up in Bedford jail. And thus there are thousands who are brought out by the trials of life. You have seen the seed cast into the bosom of the earth; you have also seen it bring forth a plentiful harvest. The rain, the wind, the dark night, all have some part to act in producing that grain in abundance from a single kernel. The uninterrupted sunshine would not have done it; the heat of summer, undiminished and constant would not have done it. But night came with its dews, the wind with its breath, and the rain its moisture, and they all combined to produce the harvest."

So out of trials have come at times, the finest specimens of true Christian character, and the rarest instances of pure devotion to God. The moral storms that dash over the world now and then, have much to do with training men and women for usefulness here and a rich reward hereafter. Who then would shrink or falter from treading in the pathway, trodden by the illustrious good and great, of all ages. All had the same reliable promises to lean on in their darkest hour, their hardest discipline of pain and sorrow, the sternest teaching of experience, the struggle against the consequences of their own errors, and the chastisements inflicted by the faults of others; yet their times, the disposing of their lives for time and eternity, were in the hands of the great Omnipotent without whose knowledge, not a sparrow falls to the ground.

Then shall not our trembling hearts be encouraged, our weak faith strengthened, and our souls comforted, as we realize that all things work together for good, and that our times are in the hands of him who careth for us, and "will withhold no good thing from them who walk uprightly."

The Best of Days.

Earthly palaces may boast their princes emblazoned in all the array of jeweled splendor, while carnal mirth and festive glee intoxicate the brain with fancied pleasure. Crowned monarchs may sway a scepter, and rule the destiny of kingdoms, while cringing subjects with fear and trembling, bring their obsequious homage, bowing at their sovereign's feet; and the tyrant feel while he is enjoying the obedience of enslaved millions, that he is happy and wholly exempt from the corroding cares which rend other bosoms whose birth-place has been given them beyond the limits of despotic power. But such happiness is only fancied, and will pass away with the using, leaving a sting behind in anticipation of the righteous retribution, that will fall upon the wicked, whether ruler or subject.

There was once a king who ruled an earthly kingdom, with wealth and riches at his command. All that his most capacious wish could desire was within his grasp; the trumpet of fame heralded his deeds, and his name in all the earth was more honorable than that of any who had preceded him. The power and grandeur of his kingdom had never been equaled, and yet in all his princely glory he never forgot that he himself was the subject of a heavenly and coming king, to whom he owed and gave joyful allegiance. Fidelity to his heavenly Master, constituted the great business of his life. He seemed to forget that he was a ruler, in his desire that the God of heaven should rule, and his kingdom be over all. His subjects were all taught the knowledge of the Most High by his divine precepts and example. Even the little children were made the objects of his care. Hear him breaking forth in the midst of their infantile ranks: "Come ye children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord." And again in the fullness of his soul, he called upon all within his reach to join in the praise of the Lord. This is his invitation: "Oh! magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together."

But the services of the sanctuary seemed to form his highest enjoyment. There his eyes were opened to behold the destiny of the wicked. He says: "Then understood I their end." "But the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off." Not so with the righteous." "They shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."

How greatly he enjoyed the service of God's house. "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." And is it not still thus with all true followers of Jesus? Do they not love the service of the sanctuary more than the tents of wickedness or the pleasures of the world? Surely they do; and frequently when together, enjoying a spiritual feast, and through faith beholding the glory soon to be revealed, their cry is, with the revelator, "Even so come Lord Jesus." Then, while it is our privilege to enjoy the blessings of the sanctuary in our journey to the Celestial city, "let our lights be burning, and we like unto men who wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, we may open unto him immediately." "Blessed are the servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching." MARY A. TIBBETS.

Why is It?

I was pained in reading the letter from Br. Reed in reference to the One day believers in San Francisco. It is the old tale, distractions and divisions. Can such be called the work of God? Almost every week we read letters from the brethren in different parts of the country, of similar import, concerning effort, if not result. In view of this fact we are led to propound the inquiry at the head of this article, Why is it, that when they can, the above named people follow in the wake of our preachers, when they have succeeded in raising up an interest in new fields? And why is it they take advantage of the absence of our preachers, in their efforts to place the "Yoke of bondage" on the necks of believers? And why is it they so seldom succeed in making converts in new fields.

These questions are important, and evolve well known facts. The history of their work in Arena is, no doubt, the repetition of many similar instances. This was an entirely new field. At the close of a three weeks protracted meeting I organzied a church of about twenty-five Advent believers, some of whom had previously been infidels, and not one of the number were connected with any other church, to my knowledge. I was then living fifty miles away, and had to go home leaving an appointment to return in three weeks. In my absence, the above named people came along with their "yokes." One of their "biggest guns," was fired into the ranks of the little ones, and the result was, the minds of some were unsettled; two or three had got their necks into the "Yoke." But, thank God, they did not stay there long. On my return, I exposed the whole thing. The "captives" emerged again into full liberty, and happier souls you never saw.

The policy is just here. Converts just come into the faith, having learned many new things, are anxious to learn the whole truth, and are easily imposed upon by counterfeits. Why do they not succeed in proselyting from a church which has been organized a year or more? The reason is obvious. The converts become settled in the the truth.

At the same time that I was holding the meeting in Arena, they were holding a discussion and meetings in another village, four miles distant; and so far as I can learn, failed to secure one convert. I do not deny that these people may be Christians, even with the "yoke" on. But I think that they should pursue a more honorable course in introducing and pressing their theories. GEO. THOMSON.

We are pushing this along as fast as possible. It will be better printed than the last, for our new press is doing good work. We are now adjusting fresh and liberal orders. $1 for four copies, by mail. Five copies, by express, $1. Thirty copies for $5. $16 a hundred. We once heard of a demand for "cheap preaching." We think this is cheap enough. Every one can afford to have Whitmore, and Collier, and Sheldon preaching, and that, too, in places the authors themselves cannot possibly visit. Buy and distribute, or lend their works.

Falmouth Hotel—Portland.

FALMOUTH HOTEL, Portland, Me. }
June 28, 1871. }

F. W. Farwell, Sec'y, 128 Washington st., Chicago:

Your Extinguishers were very effectual at a fire in this house this morning, which was well under way before discovered, having undoubtedly been burning between two and three hours. The room in which the fire caught is on the fourth story, and when I reached it, all the casing and door was on fire, the partition between the adjoining room was burned, the floor and timbers were more than half burned off, and the fire had spread some distance from where it started.

If it had not been for the Extinguishers, it would have been a very disastrous fire, and the loss by water, through damage to the walls and furniture, would have been very great, whereas now it will cost less than one thousand dollars to put everything in as good condition as before the fire.

Respectfully yours,

P. E. WHEELER.

Marriages.

WILLIAMS—STARBOARD. Married, by Eld. E. Boyce, at his residence in Altona, Ill., Aug. 24, 1871, Mr. Thomas J. Williams, of Lathrop, Mo., and Miss Mary O. Starboard, of Galva, Ill.

crowded to-day than ever before. Ring that note through your sanctuaries, vestries and halls of learning, before there is any more boasting in the land. Let our ministers when they get back from the seaside and the mountains with good, strong lungs and rested brains, put out a little arithmetic, showing that though there are many good people in Boston yet there are none too many, and that the wrong doers are getting the best of the race. As figured up by the Clerk of this court to-day, 533 men, women and children have been on trial in this court for the past six days for various offences against our laws. Of this large number, 422 came into the dock through the doors of the prison house, and 111, mostly liquor dealers, were brought direct to the bar of justice. This is nearly 100 per day, and of itself is enough to surprise, if not startle, every correct thinking person in the city. At all events, they should think of these things, and ask what can be done to stay the waves of wickedness, and reduce the volume of vice and crime in educated and christian Boston.

---- The Evangelical Alliance has been snubbed—very decorously, but still plainly snubbed by the Russian Government. It presented a petition that the Czar would grant to enforce toleration of religious sentiment by law throughout all the Russias. Gortschakoff very kindly said, that the reception of the petition would be establishing a very embarrassing precedent for the Autocrat, and hence he firmly though politely, gave the petitioners "leave to withdraw." We are sorry for this result, as it will injure the prestige of the Alliance, throughout the world.

—Perhaps it is just as well, after all. The Alliance itself is anything but 'tolerant.' It admits to its fellowship only the 'strictly evangelical.' No one who doubts the natural immortality of man, or eternal conscious misery of the wicked, is admitted within its orthodox limits. And when it was decided to hold one of its quadrennial sessions in America, a scheme was at once devised to still keep it sectarian. It was arranged that in this country no denomination should be received as such but that subordinate organizations to the Alliance should be found by local 'evangelical' churches who desired to be represented in the great orthodox council. Thus the Alliance is safe from affiliation with the smaller or more unpopular sects of our country.

ABROAD.

THE APPROACH OF CHOLERA.

If we may credit the accounts we receive from every quarter, a terrible and subtle enemy is approaching our shores by an accustomed and well-marked track. For some time past cholera has been ravaging Persia, where famine has contributed to nourish the pestilence. It has crept on slowly through the steppes of Southern Russia, until it has grasped Poland, and has made its appearance in a virulent form in the Eastern Provinces of Prussia. We are well acquainted with the history of all recorded epidemics of Asiatic cholera. They have never taken us unawares. They have always given warning of their death dealing approach, and have allowed us ample time, if we choose, to set our houses in order before their coming. In tropical Asia, among a teeming population, to whom sanitary precautions are unknown, cholera has a permanent home. A correspondent, recently returned from India, called attention a day or two ago in our columns to the state of things by which the disease is propagated in the East. In India there is no system of drainage, no purified water supply, except in the great cities. The germs of disease are never destroyed or removed, they are transferred by water or wind from one household to another, and allowed to fester freely in the close and darkened habitations of the natives. When an unhealthy season causes a particularly virulent outbreak of cholera in India, the epidemic rapidly crosses the Himalayas, spreads among the nomad tribes of Central Asia, whose primitive habits do not tend to check the pestilence; makes its way steadily along the shores of the Caspian into Southern Russia, is matured among the miserable peasant population of that region, and finally penetrates by way of Poland and Pomerania, into the heart of Western and civilized Europe.

This fatal drama has been repeated several times within the memory of the present generation. Four times we have seen the approach of cholera, by regular gradations, from the East; we have watched it coming upon us, and, until we were actually wrestling with the epidemic, we took no measures to avert the threatened devastation. Yet we know what a horrible scourge it is. The outbreak of 1849 carried off 53,000 lives; the milder epidemic of 1854, 20,000; the latest visitation, in 1866, was disastrously felt in all the pauperized quarters of the metropolis. Against such a danger as this it has been our practice to take no general precaution, although medical science, almost powerless to cope with the disease when it has once appeared, has demonstrated that its ravages can be absolutely averted, or, at all events, restricted within the narrowest limits, by most simple preventive measures. Cholera is an enemy which, once permitted to enter the citadel of life, can be dislodged by no effort of the physician; when the disease has stricken down even the youngest and most vigorous, there is only a faint hope left that the latent energies of nature may be powerful enough to resist the fatal state of collapse, and to initiate a healthy reaction. It is surely better not to challenge a contest so unequal as this. If cholera is a preventable disease, those who maintain the conditions which foster and propagate it are almost as culpable as those who resist the prevention of small-pox by a general system of vaccination. We have suffered enough lately by the neglect of sanitary precautions before an epidemic has taken a permanent hold on the country. It can hardly be questioned that cholera is to be ranked among preventable diseases. We know thoroughly the means of its propagation, and the most fatal of these is completely under public control. Before the principles of sanitary science were well understood, it was a matter of marvel that epidemics of cholera, in their progress from the East, followed the course of the great rivers. This observation, once a difficulty, has now been recognized as an additional proof of the theory, supported by many other observed results, that the germs of cholera are mainly propagated by polluted water. The excreta from patients suffering from the epidemic are allowed to mingle with the common drainage, and thence find their way to some river, which further on its course furnishes the water supply to populous towns, and thus distributes the seeds of the disease. In other cases "cholera dust," the dried excreta from infected persons, is carried by the wind into some well, pond, or river. Cholera germs thus distributed are an organic poison, and the destruction they create can as surely be prevented by proper methods of isolation and disinfection as the life of any person can be secured by the exclusion of an ordinary poison. In the East, as we have said, the absence of personal cleanliness among the population and of public sanitary measures allows the poison to circulate freely, and to spread ruin over half a continent. In England we have made some slight attempts to control diseases by enforcing sanitary precautions. We have it in our power especially to check the spread of the cholera poison by a vigilant inspection of the drainage system and the water supply. But how little will what we have done hitherto avail us against the dangerous foe whose invasion we now see impending if once the scourge sets foot on our shores.

A case of Asiatic cholera has appeared in London and creates an extra ordinary sensation among the people. A dispatch from Paris says cholera has also appeared in that city.

The news from Persia is still contradictory. The Levant Herald declares that the famine and pestilence are worse than ever; that there have been 27,000 victims at Ispahan alone; that the crops have been destroyed, and that one-third of the population had been annihilated. The details are said to be heart-sickening.

—The ravages of the cholera are steadily increasing at Konigsberg. The disease has also appeared at Dantzig, but no cases have as yet appeared in Stettin, and the South of Prussia is still free from the disease.

The Mayor of Montreal has ordered the strongest measures regarding the cleansing of the city in view of the possible approach of cholera. Lime and other disinfectants are supplied gratuitously to the inhabitants.

The Pope's new encyclical has been published at Rome. It thanks the Bishops and Catholics of the entire world for their attachment made on the occasion of the Pontifical Jubilee, when, from all parts of the globe, and defying every danger and threatened outrage, they repaired to the Eternal City to offer their congratulations.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 5, 1871.

Kingdom Of Heaven.

"Thy kingdom come."

Much has been said and written upon this subject and its cognates—"Kingdom of God, and Kingdom of Christ—which terms doubtless refer to the same idea, presenting various aspects, and viewed from various standpoints. This is clear from the fact that, 1. Each is to be located on earth; 2. Each is to be established at the judgment; 3. Each is to endure forever.

The Scriptures indicate that they shall occupy the same territory, take their date from the same epoch, and are eternal, in their nature; hence the identity of those kingdoms, or ideas, cannot be evaded, being covered by the axiom: "things equal to the same thing, are equal to each other," which though specially applied in mathematics, applies, with equal force, as in this case, as to the location. "Given to the saints under the whole heaven" (Dan.); hence, it is to be established upon the earth. Its duration is indicated by the promise that it shall be "their everlasting heritage." It is called "the Kingdom of Christ," because he is to be their immortal king; called "the Kingdom of God," because it will be set up for his glory. It is called "the Kingdom of Heaven," because of its nature, when and where God's will "will be done on earth as in heaven." Also its heavenly and moral characteristics will be entire righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

2. The phrase Kingdom of God and its cognate terms, doubtless refer, directly or indirectly, to the future or coming kingdom; but who will claim that these terms invariably refer to a perfectly organized condition?

There are, and must be, three essential elements, at least, to constitute a kingdom: first, a king; second, subjects, and third, territory.

Now we hold that in Scripture, reference is made to one of these elements in certain relations, and that the future kingdom is referred to through the medium of one of these relations, or elements, taken separately, or in combination with some one of the other elements of the kingdom, or of all. As for example: one element of the kingdom is referred to as the entire kingdom. "Thou, O King art this head of gold," said Daniel; "after thee shall arise another kingdom." Thus one element, the head or ruler is referred to as "the kingdom."

Again God says: "at what instant I speak concerning a kingdom, to destroy it." He evidently refers to the people or subjects, not to the territory. And we read of God's gift, of "all the kingdoms of Canaan to Israel." In this, reference is made to the territory only as the "kingdom."

The context, in every case, will define the sense of the words used; and if we will artlessly take heed to the rules of interpretation, there will be no confusion as to the use of the term "kingdom of God," and its cognate expressions; but the mystical rules of interpretation, a vapid spiritualizing system, has introduced much corruption and false doctrine in regard to plain, common sense views of Scripture.

Commentators and theologians have generally warped very much the sense of Scripture in regard to the status of the subjects of the kingdom of heaven. They will not admit that there will be a material kingdom. They affirm that the kingdom will be entirely spiritual, and hence teach that the wicked world, the kingdom of Satan, will be gradually merged into a kingdom of "righteousness and peace," and will exist strictly and only of spirit forms, void of "flesh and bones." If theologians insist that the kingdom will consist of these abstract qualities, apart from their personalities, then, let such take the logical consequences of such reasoning, and they will have a kingdom of abstract qualities, only, recognized by spirit essences, which is contrary to Scripture teaching. If they choose the other horn, and say, of course we mean those qualities united to proper personalities, which constitute the true subjects of the "kingdom," they yield the argument, for material things can and do possess those qualities necessary to constitute the kingdom.

Again, the little horn is described as making war with the saints and prevailing against them "until judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came, that the saints possessed the kingdom." But a mystic theology would place the "time of the saints, possessing the kingdom, at the introduction of the Gospel." This cannot be, for the event of giving the kingdom to the saints is everywhere represented as being at the judgment, when the saints receive their state of immortality and incorruptibility. "Flesh and blood (human weakness, frailty and sin—a Hebraism) cannot inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 15: 50.) By a figure of rhetoric-metonymy, "flesh and blood" is put for "mortal man." Paul says, "immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." [Mortal man.] (Gal. 1: 16.) "He wrestled not with flesh and blood" [mortal man.] (Eph. 6: 12.) Our Savior said to Peter, "flesh and blood [mortal man], hath not revealed it unto you, but my Father which is in heaven." (Mat. 16: 17.) And this same figure is used in Heb. 2:14 to signify a mortal nature—an organization subject to death.

"My kingdom is not of this world," said Christ to Pilate—"not from hence." How is it that some people say that "Christ's kingdom is of this world," when the King has declared that his kingdom is "not of this world?" Some of the elements of the coming KINGDOM are found in this deranged world of evil elements This is the territory which is to be given to the saints, and a few of the subjects are being gathered from "all nations, kindreds and tongues;" and Peter says, "he hath visited the Gentiles, to take out from among them a people for his name." (Acts.) But the territory of the kingdom is yet in the hands of rebels and usurpers, who refuse to accept the King's proffered mercy, and he has gone "into a far country, to receive a kingdom," and sends words of amnesty to his enemies—thus: "Be wise now, ye kings: be instructed ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way [not be converted], when his wrath is kindled but a little." All their possessions are promised to the Son, the future king, by the Father. "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." He tarries now for a while in "a far country," but when he cometh to receive his kingdom, his regal inheritance, "he shall break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." In perfect harmony with the above, we cite the prophet's vision of the future installment of Christ in his kingdom. (See Dan. 2: 44.) "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all peoples, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." (Dan. 7: 13, 14.) Words cannot be stronger to express eternal duration, and Daniel asserts that it shall be upon this earth. "And the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." (v. 27.) If the kingdom is to be under the whole heaven, it cannot be in it. Micah, in the fourth chapter and eighth verse, says: "and thou, O tower of the flock, the stronohgld of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." In this quotation, we have Jesus as the "tower of his flock," the rock of refuge and defense. "Daughter of Jerusalem" includes those only whose names are written in "the book of life;" for in "the New Earth" only the righteous shall dwell. (2 Pet. 3: 13.) The first dominion is that given to Adam as ruler of the earth. (Gen. 1: 26.) The second Adam has purchased the kingdom, and will, in due time, take possession of it. Meanwhile his subjects—those who are alive and remain—are comforted with the earnest of the inheritance in him, waiting with patience his return to take full possession of his kingdom. (Eph. 1: 13, 14; Rom. 8: [illegible]-23)

This is the proper view of "the kingdom"—the coming kingdom—that which we are commanded to pray for—"thy kingdom come," in the which saints shall have their inheritance, not in a state of mortality, "flesh and blood," as mortal men, which Christ says "cannot inherit the kingdom" of life; but the blessed Spirit shall come and quicken our mortal bodies" at his coming and kingdom." So now "we with patience wait," "through faith," in "the coming" rward which awaiteth us at the establishing of his kingdom's glory.

This view of the kingdom we like; but that of the old immaterial theology of the Whitbyan school, is overturned by Christ's exposition of the wheat and tares—thus: "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that soweth them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world [age or dispensation]; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of the world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." (Matt. 13. 37–43.)

This explanation needs no comment. There are some salient points, however, which we propose to notice—those in relation to "the kingdom," now under discussion. The point is settled when the kingdom shall be established—at the end of the world.

In this parable, which ranks this age, or dispensation, as "the world," the sower of the tares is Satan, but the sower of the good seed forbids the tares to be rooted out and destroyed until the end of the age or world (aionas.) Mark this! The tares are left to grow with the wheat! Where, then, is the chance for the world's conversion, according to the pre-millennial theory? The theory of this world's conversion is, by the explanation of this parable, excluded; for there is no period previous to the harvest (the judgment), when the field (the world), does not contain tares, growing with the wheat—the righteous and the wicked living together. Nor is there any time declared before the coming of the sower, be that coming when it may, that he will convert the tares into wheat. But, there is abundant testimony that he will destroy, utterly destroy them; that "he will gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity," and that he will burn them in a furnace of unquenchable fire—when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat" (Peter), when the wicked "shall be destroyed, and all the nations that forget God." When? "At the harvest," the end of the age—dispensation (aionas). When? "At the judgment of the great day;" when the wheat shall be separated from the tares; when Christ shall sit upon the throne of his kingdom—the throne of David. "Then thall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Then shall be the inauguration of the "kingdom of God," and of Christ. And Christ shall sit upon the throne of his kingdom, and the saints, who are now but heirs of the kingdom, shall come into full possession of the promise of their heirship, with their elder brother—"the Son of God"—"the Son of man." And "the day cometh that shall burn as an oven," and the wicked, and all they that do iniquity, shall be burned up, and there shall not be left of them "either root nor branch." (Malachi.) This is the kingdom, the consummation of which Christ taught his disciples to pray for—"thy kingdom come." No other kingdom will then exist, for "Christ came to destroy the works (or kingdom) of the devil." Satan, his works and kingdom, will then be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, "which is the second death."

The gospel age cannot be the age of the kingdom of God, for the gospel is simply "good news," "glad tidings," of the approaching kingdom, and the news or tidings of the thing cannot, by any torture of language, be made to mean the thing itself.

A warped theology assumes that a state of grace in the heart, while man is in the state of "flesh and blood," is the true state of Christ's kingdom; that the gospel dispensation is the "kingdom of Christ," "of God," of "heaven;" that a spiritual reign of Christ on this earth, with all its leprosy of sin and corrupt flesh, is "the kingdom;" that a heavenly world above is the location of the saints; that as soon as death supervenes, the celestial gates do fly open to admit the heir to immediate possession and participation of kingly glory, ignoring the great day of accounts and the resurrection, and the loud emphasis of Christ's words, "My kingdom is not of this world"—"not from hence"—not from this, onward—but from the judgment.

The poor saints are only "heirs of the kingdom," "rich in faith"—that faith which looketh for a kingdom wherein "dwelleth righteousness."

We have said that the phrase "kingdom of God," and its cognate terms, where reference is made to them generally in the Scripture, is not alluded to as the perfected and organized state; but some phase or element of the future kingdom; as "the kingdom of God has come nigh you," or come unto you. Reference in such cases is plainly made to an heirship in it, or to the offers of the kingdom, by its being preached.

So, also, "the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power." (1 Cor. 4: 20.) This phraseology is explained in the context, as Paul says of his work: "My preaching (of the gospel of the kingdom) was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and in power." (1 Cor. 2: 4.) It was a demonstration of the power of the future coming kingdom, when he, and all that "shall love his appearing," shall receive their crowns of glory.

Some one may say: "But did not Paul say, And hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son?" We answer, Yes; and the prophet once said, "Unto us a child is born;" but we know that hundreds of years elapsed before the promise (in the present tense) was accomplished in the future. This is frequently the style of expression in prophecy—using the present tense, while the facts are considered prospectively; and this is a very common figure in Scripture, called Prolepsis. In Col. 3: 24 verse he tells his disciples, "they shall receive the reward of the inheritance," of which they had been made "meet to become," partakers not already in it; and in the fifth chapter, 4th verse: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear (in his glory), then shall we also appear with him in glory," which is the same thing —"the kingdom." "Then shine forth in the kingdom." (Mat. 13: 44.)

But we read of some taking the kingdom of heaven with violence—"the violent take it by force." If we will look at the connection, we shall see clearly that reference is here had to the murder of John the Baptist, Christ and his disciples.

But how could John and Christ preach "the kingdom at hand," when clearly eighteen hundred years and more have elapsed, and still the kingdom is not yet come? Daniel prophesied that it should come, near three thousand years ago: "it shall break all other kingdoms and fill the whole earth." The Lord Jesus gave certain signs when it should be near, and when it should be "nigh even at the door." The Sabbath is at hand on Friday—at Saturday evening it is nigh. It was relatively "at hand" in those days, as it was "nigh at hand."

There was a dream expounded by Daniel, the prophet, of a great image, composed of parts referring to kingdoms that should arise and fall, and a great stone that represented a fifth kingdom. All the parts of the image, or the kingdoms it represented—four in number—have now passed into history, except the feet and toes "of iron and miry clay," which in another vision, are represented by the "ten-horned beast," or certain governments of Europe, and the "little horn," which came up in the midst of the "ten horns;" and this little horn "wore out the saints," but is now upon the eve of passing away. And we think the time of "the kingdom is nigh," truly "even at the door"—that the "stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, is on the eve of falling upon the kingdoms of earth" (feet and toes of the image), and that itself (the stone) will become a kingdom "that shall fill the whole earth."

Again: "There be some standing here that shall not taste death until they shall see the kingdom of God." (Lk. 9: 27.) Three evangelists record this fact. Mark says, "until they see the kingdom of God come with power;" Matthew says, "until they see the Son of of man coming in his kingdom." We remark here that this variation of expression advances unimpeachable evidence that what we have assumed in this thesis, that the kingdom of God and all its cognates are identical is correct.

Now, we have abundant testimony that this "kingdom" does not come in its perfect state until after the resurrection. Shall the common exegesis of this passage lay across all others, on this point, and declare that the kingdom of God, of Christ and of heaven, has already come? Let us rather suppose that, for purposes of wisdom, Christ did prepare a miniature kingdom, for the view of three of his favorite disciples in the mount of transfiguration. Let us examine this vision of the kingdom in miniature. There was the "King in his beauty;" there were the saints in glory (represented by Elias), who "shall be alive and remain" at the judgment; and there was Moses who represented those who died and are "asleep in Jesus." Peter descants with great confidence

Kingdom Of Heaven.

"Thy kingdom come."

Much has been said and written upon this subject and its cognates—"Kingdom of God, and Kingdom of Christ—which terms doubtless refer to the same idea, presenting various aspects, and viewed from various standpoints. This is clear from the fact that, 1. Each is to be located on earth; 2. Each is to be established at the judgment; 3. Each is to endure forever.

The Scriptures indicate that they shall occupy the same territory, take their date from the same epoch, and are eternal, in their nature; hence the identity of those kingdoms, or ideas, cannot be evaded, being covered by the axiom: "things equal to the same thing, are equal to each other," which though specially applied in mathematics, applies, with equal force, as in this case, as to the location. "Given to the saints under the whole heaven" (Dan.); hence, it is to be established upon the earth. Its duration is indicated by the promise that it shall be "their everlasting heritage." It is called "the Kingdom of Christ," because he is to be their immortal king; called "the Kingdom of God," because it will be set up for his glory. It is called "the Kingdom of Heaven," because of its nature, when and where God's will "will be done on earth as in heaven." Also its heavenly and moral characteristics will be entire righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

2. The phrase Kingdom of God and its cognate terms, doubtless refer, directly or indirectly, to the future or coming kingdom; but who will claim that these terms invariably refer to a perfectly organized condition?

There are, and must be, three essential elements, at least, to constitute a kingdom: first, a king; second, subjects, and third, territory.

Now we hold that in Scripture, reference is made to one of these elements in certain relations, and that the future kingdom is referred to through the medium of one of these relations, or elements, taken separately, or in combination with some one of the other elements of the kingdom, or of all. As for example: one element of the kingdom is referred to as the entire kingdom. "Thou, O King art this head of gold," said Daniel; "after thee shall arise another kingdom." Thus one element, the head or ruler is referred to as "the kingdom."

Again God says: "at what instant I speak concerning a kingdom, to destroy it." He evidently refers to the people or subjects, not to the territory. And we read of God's gift, of "all the kingdoms of Canaan to Israel." In this, reference is made to the territory only as the "kingdom."

The context, in every case, will define the sense of the words used; and if we will artlessly take heed to the rules of interpretation, there will be no confusion as to the use of the term "kingdom of God," and its cognate expressions; but the mystical rules of interpretation, a vapid spiritualizing system, has introduced much corruption and false doctrine in regard to plain, common sense views of Scripture.

Commentators and theologians have generally warped very much the sense of Scripture in regard to the status of the subjects of the kingdom of heaven. They will not admit that there will be a material kingdom. They affirm that the kingdom will be entirely spiritual, and hence teach that the wicked world, the kingdom of Satan, will be gradually merged into a kingdom of "righteousness and peace," and will exist strictly and only of spirit forms, void of "flesh and bones." If theologians insist that the kingdom will consist of these abstract qualities, apart from their personalities, then, let such take the logical consequences of such reasoning, and they will have a kingdom of abstract qualities, only, recognized by spirit essences, which is contrary to Scripture teaching. If they choose the other horn, and say, of course we mean those qualities united to proper personalities, which constitute the true subjects of the "kingdom," they yield the argument, for material things can and do possess those qualities necessary to constitute the kingdom.

Again, the little horn is described as making war with the saints and prevailing against them "until judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came, that the saints possessed the kingdom." But a mystic theology would place the "time of the saints, possessing the kingdom, at the introduction of the Gospel." This cannot be, for the event of giving the kingdom to the saints is everywhere represented as being at the judgment, when the saints receive their state of immortality and incorruptibility. "Flesh and blood (human weakness, frailty and sin—a Hebraism) cannot inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 15: 50.) By a figure of rhetoric-metonymy, "flesh and blood" is put for "mortal man." Paul says, "immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." [Mortal man.] (Gal. 1: 16.) "He wrestled not with flesh and blood" [mortal man.] (Eph. 6: 12.) Our Savior said to Peter, "flesh and blood [mortal man], hath not revealed it unto you, but my Father which is in heaven." (Mat. 16: 17.) And this same figure is used in Heb. 2:14 to signify a mortal nature—an organization subject to death.

"My kingdom is not of this world," said Christ to Pilate—"not from hence." How is it that some people say that "Christ's kingdom is of this world," when the King has declared that his kingdom is "not of this world?" Some of the elements of the coming KINGDOM are found in this deranged world of evil elements This is the territory which is to be given to the saints, and a few of the subjects are being gathered from "all nations, kindreds and tongues;" and Peter says, "he hath visited the Gentiles, to take out from among them a people for his name." (Acts.) But the territory of the kingdom is yet in the hands of rebels and usurpers, who refuse to accept the King's proffered mercy, and he has gone "into a far country, to receive a kingdom," and sends words of amnesty to his enemies—thus: "Be wise now, ye kings: be instructed ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way [not be converted], when his wrath is kindled but a little." All their possessions are promised to the Son, the future king, by the Father. "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." He tarries now for a while in "a far country," but when he cometh to receive his kingdom, his regal inheritance, "he shall break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." In perfect harmony with the above, we cite the prophet's vision of the future installment of Christ in his kingdom. (See Dan. 2: 44.) "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all peoples, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." (Dan. 7: 13, 14.) Words cannot be stronger to express eternal duration, and Daniel asserts that it shall be upon this earth. "And the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." (v. 27.) If the kingdom is to be under the whole heaven, it cannot be in it. Micah, in the fourth chapter and eighth verse, says: "and thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." In this quotation, we have Jesus as the "tower of his flock," the rock of refuge and defense. "Daughter of Jerusalem" includes those only whose names are written in "the book of life;" for in "the New Earth" only the righteous shall dwell. (2 Pet. 3: 13.) The first dominion is that given to Adam as ruler of the earth. (Gen. 1: 26.) The second Adam has purchased the kingdom, and will, in due time, take possession of it. Meanwhile his subjects—those who are alive and remain—are comforted with the earnest of the inheritance in him, waiting with patience his return to take full possession of his kingdom. (Eph. 1: 13, 14; Rom. 8: [illegible]-23.)

This is the proper view of "the kingdom"—the coming kingdom—that which we are commanded to pray for—"thy kingdom come," in the which saints shall have their inheritance, not in a state of mortality, "flesh and blood," as mortal men, which Christ says "cannot inherit the kingdom" of life; but the blessed Spirit shall come and quicken our mortal bodies" at his coming and kingdom." So now "we with patience wait," "through faith," in "the coming" reward which awaiteth us at the establishing of his kingdom's glory.

This view of the kingdom we like; but that of the old immaterial theology of the Whitbyan school, is overturned by Christ's exposition of the wheat and tares—thus: "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that soweth them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world [age or dispensation]; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of the world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." (Matt. 13. 37-43.)

This explanation needs no comment. There are some salient points, however, which we propose to notice—those in relation to "the kingdom," now under discussion. The point is settled when the kingdom shall be established—at the end of the world.

In this parable, which ranks this age, or dispensation, as "the world," the sower of the tares is Satan, but the sower of the good seed forbids the tares to be rooted out and destroyed until the end of the age or world (aionas.) Mark this! The tares are left to grow with the wheat! Where, then, is the chance for the world's conversion, according to the pre-millennial theory? The theory of this world's conversion is, by the explanation of this parable, excluded; for there is no period previous to the harvest (the judgment), when the field (the world), does not contain tares, growing with the wheat—the righteous and the wicked living together. Nor is there any time declared before the coming of the sower, be that coming when it may, that he will convert the tares into wheat. But, there is abundant testimony that he will destroy, utterly destroy them; that "he will gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity," and that he will burn them in a furnace of unquenchable fire—when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat" (Peter), when the wicked "shall be destroyed," and all the nations that forget God." When? "At the harvest," the end of the age—dispensation (aionas). When? "At the judgment of the great day;" when the wheat shall be separated from the tares; when Christ shall sit upon the throne of his kingdom—the throne of David. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Then shall be the inauguration of the "kingdom of God," and of Christ. And Christ shall sit upon the throne of his kingdom, and the saints, who are now but heirs of the kingdom, shall come into full possession of the promise of their heirship, with their elder brother—"the Son of God"—"the Son of man." And "the day cometh that shall burn as an oven," and the wicked, and all they that do iniquity, shall be burned up, and there shall not be left of them "either root nor branch." (Malachi.) This is the kingdom, the consummation of which Christ taught his disciples to pray for—"thy kingdom come." No other kingdom will then exist, for "Christ came to destroy the works (or kingdom) of the devil." Satan, his works and kingdom, will then be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, "which is the second death."

The gospel age cannot be the age of the kingdom of God, for the gospel is simply "good news," "glad tidings," of the approaching kingdom, and the news or tidings of the thing cannot, by any torture of language, be made to mean the thing itself.

A warped theology assumes that a state of grace in the heart, while man is in the state of "flesh and blood," is the true state of Christ's kingdom; that the gospel dispensation is the "kingdom of Christ," "of God," of "heaven;" that a spiritual reign of Christ on this earth, with all its leprosy of sin and corrupt flesh, is "the kingdom;" that a heavenly world above is the location of the saints; that as soon as death supervenes, the celestial gates do fly open to admit the heir to immediate possession and participation of kingly glory, ignoring the great day of accounts and the resurrection, and the loud emphasis of Christ's words, "My kingdom is not of this world"—"not from hence"—not from this, onward—but from the judgment.

The poor saints are only "heirs of the kingdom," "rich in faith"—that faith which looketh for a kingdom wherein "dwelleth righteousness."

We have said that the phrase "kingdom of God," and its cognate terms, where reference is made to them generally in the Scripture, is not alluded to as the perfected and organized state; but some phase or element of the future kingdom; as "the kingdom of God has come nigh you," or come unto you. Reference in such cases is plainly made to an heirship in it, or to the offers of the kingdom, by its being preached.

So, also, "the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power." (1 Cor. 4: 20.) This phraseology is explained in the context, as Paul says of his work: "My preaching (of the gospel of the kingdom) was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit and in power." (1 Cor. 2: 4.) It was a demonstration of the power of the future coming kingdom, when he, and all that "shall love his appearing," shall receive their crowns of glory.

Some one may say: "But did not Paul say, And hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son?" We answer, Yes; and the prophet once said, "Unto us a child is born;" but we know that hundreds of years elapsed before the promise (in the present tense) was accomplished in the future. This is frequently the style of expression in prophecy—using the present tense, while the facts are considered prospectively; and this is a very common figure in Scripture, called Prolepsis. In Col. 3: 24 verse he tells his disciples, "they shall receive the reward of the inheritance," of which they had been made "meet to become," partakers not already in it; and in the fifth chapter, 4th verse: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear (in his glory), then shall we also appear with him in glory," which is the same thing—"the kingdom." "Then shine forth in the kingdom." (Mat. 13: 44.)

But we read of some taking the kingdom of heaven with violence—"the violent take it by force." If we will look at the connection, we shall see clearly that reference is here had to the murder of John the Baptist, Christ and his disciples.

But how could John and Christ preach "the kingdom at hand," when clearly eighteen hundred years and more have elapsed, and still the kingdom is not yet come? Daniel prophesied that it should come, near three thousand years ago: "it shall break all other kingdoms and fill the whole earth." The Lord Jesus gave certain signs when it should be near, and when it should be "nigh even at the door." The Sabbath is at hand on Friday—at Saturday evening it is nigh. It was relatively "at hand" in those days, as it was "nigh at hand."

There was a dream expounded by Daniel, the prophet, of a great image, composed of parts referring to kingdoms that should arise and fall, and a great stone that represented a fifth kingdom. All the parts of the image, or the kingdoms it represented—four in number—have now passed into history, except the feet and toes "of iron and miry clay," which in another vision, are represented by the "ten-horned beast," or certain governments of Europe, and the "little horn," which came up in the midst of the "ten horns;" and this little horn "wore out the saints," but is now upon the eve of passing away. And we think the time of "the kingdom is nigh," truly "even at the door"—that the "stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, is on the eve of falling upon the kingdoms of earth" (feet and toes of the image), and that itself (the stone) will become a kingdom "that shall fill the whole earth."

Again: "There be some standing here that shall not taste death until they shall see the kingdom of God." (Lk. 9: 27.) Three evangelists record this fact. Mark says, "until they see the kingdom of God come with power;" Matthew says, "until they see the Son of of man coming in his kingdom." We remark here that this variation of expression advances unimpeachable evidence that what we have assumed in this thesis, that the kingdom of God and all its cognates are identical is correct.

Now, we have abundant testimony that this "kingdom" does not come in its perfect state until after the resurrection. Shall the common exegesis of this passage lay across all others, on this point, and declare that the kingdom of God, of Christ and of heaven, has already come? Let us rather suppose that, for purposes of wisdom, Christ did prepare a miniature kingdom, for the view of three of his favorite disciples in the mount of transfiguration. Let us examine this vision of the kingdom in miniature. There was the "King in his beauty;" there were the saints in glory (represented by Elias), who "shall be alive and remain" at the judgment; and there was Moses who represented those who died and are "asleep in Jesus." Peter descants with great confidence

The Time is at Hand.

Rev. 22: 10

Christian awake from your slothful reposing,
Lift your voice loudly wherever you stand.
Can you not see that the Lord is disclosing,
The prophet's glad language "the time is at hand."

Do not you hope to be one of that number,
Who will inherit the long promised land?
O then arouse from your sloth and your slumber,
Work while you may, for "the time is at hand."

Many will tell you that he is delaying,
For wickedness spreadeth all over the land;
Even God's children are fearfully straying,
Faithfully work, for "the time is at hand."

As in the old time when good Noah wondered,
While sinners would not obey his command
So it is now, and dear friends must be sundered.
The trumpet will sound and "the time is at hand."

Remember the promise the Savior has given,
Never relying on earth's brittle strand,
Soon he is coming with glory from heaven,
O never forget that "the time is at hand."

They who overcome all temptations to evil,
Will witness this vision so fearfully grand;
The Lord will destroy all works of the devil,
For he is your God, and "the time is at hand."

He that is righteous must be righteous ever,
If he expects to be changed with that band;
Or should death o'erwhelm him beneath its dark river,
It will not be long for "the time is at hand."

John saw the New city from heaven descending,
Prepared as a bride is; O may we all stand
Within its loved walls, with our voices all blending
And shouting hosanna, "the time is at hand."

Nothing that troubleth, or pains, or defileth,
Shall enter that city so gloriously grand,
Christians awake! speak to him that revileth
And warn him of danger, "the time is at hand."

The glory of God will enlighten the city,
Those who obey are upheld by his hand,
Those who are wicked he then will not pity,
You must tell them all so, for "the time is at hand."

All tears will be wiped from the eyes that are weeping;
Death never can enter that city so grand;
Those in the dark grave so peacefully sleeping,
They soon will awaken, "the time is at hand."

Wanderer return to the God you are grieving,
Oh quickly return to his waiting band;
Sinner repent; it is time for believing,
The Savior still calls, but "the time is at hand."

If you delay it may be unto sorrow
Be not like the builder who built on the sand:
If he should come ere you see the to-morrow,
He comes to destroy, and "the time is at hand."

Hope.

The Christian's hope lays hold of the most desirable riches the universe of God contains. Part of the things hoped for are coming day by day. As an heir of eternal life he realizes that he is saved by hope. But he finds that he cannot live upon the hope of future good alone and so he seeks for present blessing. He desires that God shall hear his prayer, and he expects he will. Nor does he desire that God will hear him only, but that he will give him the desired blessing. He expects God to do as he says he will, and he hopes for the blessing for which he asks. He has read from the book of God "Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." He looks then in hope for blessings day by day, and as days pass by, he records the faithfulness of that God who bade him hope; until, in the spirit and power of his Redeemer he defies the storms of earth, and the wrath of demons to prevent his entrance to the future glory, for which—upon the same promise—he hopes. The place of his present occupation and from which his hope begins to rise, is a realization of his own mortality and utter helplessness. He considers these, until he feels that he is justly compared to "a worm crushed before the moth" and cries with David "surely every man at his best state is altogether vanity." While in this condition of mind, he is reached by Heaven's glorious message to man, that "Christ hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel;" and that Jesus the son of God, came into the world to seek and save that which was lost,—That means me! he cries, and hope begins to lift him up. But he sees that the earth is cursed for his sake, and that man dies, and he enquires: Who can show us any good! Here Heaven's messenger cries in his ears: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." But he answers, Man dies! The same messenger cries again: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were DEAD YET SHALL HE LIVE." But the earth is cursed! The heavenly guide speaks of earth renewed, and says: "There shall be no more curse." At this point, while his heart is so filled with joyful astonishment that he feels as though he could not contain the swelling emotions that rise, he says: What! no curse! no death, no tears! nought of human wo? The guide answers: "The former things are passed away." No wonder the apostle calls this a "blessed hope." With Jesus' coming, comes the consummation of this hope. But before we enter that home, we must be clean. "None but holy ones can enter to that pure celestial sphere." The pure in heart shall see God. The fountain of cleansing is open now, let us wash and be clean. Come to the marriage, with wedding garments on,—robes washed in the blood of the Lamb.

Reader: does your faith and hope embrace this work of cleansing? As the days follow each other, dropping from time's revolving wheel, are you realizing the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ—perfect love? If so, you understand the secret of victory: and, while you wait for Jesus to come, it is your happy privilege to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. Then be faithful, gird up the loins of your mind and be sober and HOPE TO THE END for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Meet the foe with holy boldness! Be an an overcomer, and, according to the promise of God, the crown of life will be yours.

"Be Strong."

One of the evils of our day that need be noticed is like that which prevailed in the days of Jeremiah, as recorded in that prophecy: "But they are not valiant for the truth." (ch. 9: 3).

The world abounds in professors, but of the "feeble knee" kind. In order to strengthen them we must induce them to add "courage" to their faith, or "fortitude" as some translate it. Present strength can be doubled by making use of the strengthening elements of the dispensational truths which distinguish us from the world. The more we proclaim the fact that Jesus is about to appear in his glory, so much the more real strength we have; and if we allow some fancy to divert our minds away from it, then we place ourselves in a position which weakens us. I know it is unpleasant at times to "sound the trumpet of alarm," but it must be done after the following directions: "Be strong, fear not: behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense: he will come and save you." (Is. 35: 4.)

We are told to say this to them who are of a fearful heart, who are weak. Were we to make use of a remedy to strengthen some weakness of faith, it must be the one prescribed by the great physician, for we often hear of preachers "hurting" the weak ones. Then the day in which we live is made one of weakness in consequence of the foolish divisions we find everywhere. What will heal? What will strengthen? What will make us valiant men for the truth? Say, "Behold your God will come"—prove it by the signs of the times; prove it by the running out of the great prophetic lines; prove it by facts which have proved it before to you, and made you strong; any other remedy will not answer the purpose. If you desire to build up a church which shall be found sound in the faith and able to stand in the great day of wrath, do the work on the basis laid down in the testimony of Isaiah and thus confirmed by our Savior: "When ye see these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads." Certainly weak knees could not hold up the head in its natural position; but strong ones can. "Look up," implies freedom from the depression of spirits which weakens our influence. "Lift up your heads," implies gladness which true strength enables us to express. So to my dear friends who read this journal, let me say, "Be strong" in the faith of Jesus' soon coming: the Lord needs valiant-hearted men who are not afraid to go with their pitcher and lamp, and cry the alarm that arouses the sleepers from the lethargy in which unbelief has bound them.

Would you be holy? What can make us any more holy than a firm faith in the message, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." How can we meet him unless we understand the nature of that meeting? When Isaiah and Daniel and John saw the Lord in vision did they not fall to the ground? Was it not because of the discovery of their sinful nature in comparison with Christ's? But they were touched by the angel, and told to "fear not." Christ has told us the same. Oh! how blessed it sounds: "fear not little flock." His blood-cleansed flock can look up, and be strong, and "FEAR NOT."

Business.

In the daily avocations of life, there must be a large amount of activity, of stir and energy, if we expect to succeed. In our temporal affairs, we as a people are noted for our hurry and bustle. And, whatever in our line of labor has to be really performed, we begin it with all our might and power, and carry it clear through with a determined rush.

Engage a man to labor for us, and if he has not got a large amount of life about him, nine chances to one he is speedily dismissed. And this continued endeavor to crowd two or three days work into one, and thereby make money, is called business.

Now this is considered all right, and perhaps it is. But in the Master's cause, how would it work? Do we take hold of the work with true heavenly zeal, or even with common zeal?

It seems by the actions of many, at the present day, that as soon as we engage in the Christian's work, we must in this branch of business at least, take a slower pace. We must let our duties and our time, be governed by our other interests. Why is this? Are we exhorted to be slothful? To be calm and slow? Nay verily, for Paul in making a comparison between the Grecian race and ours says, "So run that ye may obtain." How is this Br.? Why just live temperate, and run as if there was but one crown to be given; run with all your might, make a full and complete business in this better race.

Again, Paul exhorts us not to be slothful in business, but to be fervent in spirit. When? When serving the Lord. And we read, the apostles labored day and night; also, Jesus says, "I must be about my Father's business." (Lk. 2: 49.) And surely, if Paul had been as dilatory as many professors are to-day, he never would have fought so good a fight nor so nobly finished his course. And instead of keeping the faith, he would have lost it, and missed the blessed crown at last.

And we are looking for the same prize that the apostles ever had in view, and professing to love the appearing of Jesus, and knowing that the time is very short. What I ask, are we doing? Are we awake? Are we pulling at the oar with all our ransomed powers? Are we doing everything that we can to make sure of the life beyond? O drowsy one, awake! O slothful one, arouse! Gird on the armor anew, spring into the work, for we are on the very threshold of eternity, and you are not prepared. You will never hear the "well done" said to you, unless you do better than you are doing now.

May God enable us by his divine grace, to push with zeal the business on our hands, until the trumpet's mighty sound calls from our labors, and we enter forever the heavenly rest.

"The Death that Never Dies."

I recently heard a good, earnest, pointed Scriptural sermon preached from Col. 1: 21, 22. A hymn, from the pen of Charles Wesley, was given out to be sung. In the first stanza we could all heartily unite:

"Almighty God, eternal Lord,
Thy gracious power make known;
Apply the virtue of thy word,
And melt the heart of stone."

Then came the second stanza:

"Speak with the voice that wakes the dead,
And bid the sleeper rise;
O, let his guilty conscience dread"—

Very good so far; but what next?

"The death that never dies."

I was led to inquire: What kind of "death" can that be? I think I have somewhere read a line like this:

"And death itself, shall die."

In accordance with Rev. 20: 14, it would seem this latter declaration must be true; for we read: "And death and the underworld," or hades, "were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire. And if any one was not found written in the book of life, he was cast into the lake of fire." Not only the impenitent, then, but even death itself must, along with them, expire, under the sentence from the "great white throne" of judgment. And then will the righteous "inherit all things," of the "all things new," in the "new heaven and new earth:" for we read, "I heard a loud voice out of the throne, saying: Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God-with-them [Immanuel] himself will be their God. And he will wipe away every tear from their eyes; and death shall be no more, nor shall mourning, no crying, nor pain be any more; because the former things have passed away." (Rev. 21: 1–7.)

How beautiful and inspiring is such a prospect as this! But that other;—what is it? "The death that—never—dies."

I look around me, and see the little insect flitting in the bright sunbeams, and enjoying a brief existence for a few days or hours, and then—it dies. I see the larger animals ushered into being, come to maturity, fill their appointed places and period, and then—die. Man, too, comes into existence, passes through infancy, childhood, youth, manhood, old age; and then his life departs, and his body goes to corruption, and no more shows a sign of perception or feeling. He, also, experiences the common fate;—he dies. And if there were to be no resurrection from the dead, then his hope of life and happiness beyond the grave must likewise die.

"But thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Praised be his name, "the dead will be raised incorruptible." "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality, then will be brought to pass the saying, that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory." (1 Cor. 12: 52–57.)

What then becomes of that imaginary thing, "the death that never dies?" Better curb the imagination, sacrifice a little in the measure of the poetry, and, in harmony with the first line, and with the teachings of both reason and Scripture, plead with the God of truth:

"Speak, with the voice that wakes the dead,
And bid the sleeper rise;
O, let his guilty conscience dread"
THAT DEATH FROM WHICH NONE RISE!

Behold the Bridegroom Cometh.

"Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Are we all ready to meet the Bridgroom? Have we got our work all done? Do we realize the value of these last moments? Millions are going to certain destruction, and there are but a few of us to give the alarm and the time is so short. Oh! how we ought to work, how we ought to improve every opportunity to warn our fellows of their danger. "Let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober," it is life or death with us. How do persons run who run for their lives, are they careless and unconcerned, loitering by the way? No! they run with alacrity, just as fast as their strength will allow. Then how earnest ought we to be! The Christian race is not merely a race for a few short years of this life of pain and sorrow, but it is a race for eternal life, a life of perfect bliss in the presence of our blessed Savior. May God help us to realize how precious the passing moments are.

If we can't preach we can pray, and if we have got ten cents, that we do not absolutely need, it belongs to the Lord that bought us, and we had better see to it that we do not pilfer the Lord's money to squander on our own lusts.

The True Union and the False.

There is an old story, upon which some seem to lay more stress than on the parables of Jesus, which tells of a philosophic father teaching his sons the strength of union, by showing them how easy it is to break a bundle of sticks, taking them one by one, and how difficult taking them all together. Had the venerable gentleman bound up fire with his sticks, he might have shown also the dangerous unwisdom of union where the elements are not homogeneous. Had he exhibited a Roman prisoner chained to a dead carcass, he might have shown the still further lesson of the disability and pestilential horribleness of some unions.

The Bible also tells of a union-furor which prevailed among men in a very early period of the world's history, when "the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose." We do not read, however, that the result was particularly advantageous. Giants, indeed, were produced by the coalition, but judgment came upon its heels, and all the "mighty men" and "men of renown" were drowned from the face of the earth.

The mingling of that which is of God with that which is of man, is a special form of evil to which people are quite too prone; and it is a very effective engine in Satan's hands for marring the truth and destroying souls. It may often wear the appearance of something very desirable and promising. It may look like success, triumph, and; augmented efficiency but, in reality, it is surrender, compromise, and defeat. Satan's first effort to frustrate the purpose of God was to kill the holy seed; when that failed, he tried peaceful synthesis and unseemly unions, in which he was much more successful. From this it would appear, that union, if not the proper sort, is worse than murder.

It is one of the vices of our day and our country, that men are ready to compromise and sacrifice, almost anything, just for the convenience, grandeur, and supposed strength of union. It matters not how truth suffers, and the Church's testimony is obscured, only that people are united, and dwell in peace, and appear in grand combinations, in which the worst are on the same level with the best, ignoring all distinctions. And, it sometimes happens, that the most antagonist o the more readily unite to put out of the way troublesome truth. Herod and Pilate make friends when the Christ is to be crucified.

We have no hesitation in saying, that much of the unionism of our day is thoroughly anti-Christian. That which the true man of God is bound to maintain above all things is, The Truth—The Truth at all costs. If there can be union in the maintenance of the pure and undamaged Truth, so much the better, and such union should be sought and promoted; but union, on any other conditions, is immoral, and not of God. The miserable expediency which views union as the chief end, and seeks union first, union last, and union all the time—union in the truth if convenient, otherwise, union on half truth, or union on no distinct truth at all, only so there is union,—is simply the old story over, by which the devil involved the ancient world in the dreadful condemnation of God.

Inspiration says, "the wisdom which is from above is first pure, then peaceable." The implication is, that the wisdom which puts "peaceable" first, and teaches us to purchase peace and union at the expense of pureness in faith and testimony, is not "from above," but from beneath. Oh, what union is so beautiful—so pleasant—so heavenly! Yes, so were "the daughters of men," but that did not satisfy God, nor keep off the ugly judgment that followed. Peace is a good thing, but it dare not be bought at the expense of God's truth, or at the sacrifice of fidelity in the preaching and confession of that truth. Otherwise, peace is not peace, but a lie, and a devouring sword.—Sel.

Hints To Young Converts.

1. Consecrate yourself to Christ completely. Time, talents, opportunities, powers of body and mind, are all to be given to Him.

2. The grand daily question of life is to be, "Lord what wilt Thou have me to do?"

3. Never pick and choose among the Commandments of God.

4. To learn duty, read the precepts of the Bible in the light of an earnest piety.

5. Never let mere want of feeling hinder you from following out a plain path of duty. If duty calls, follow, and let feeling alone.

6. Never be afraid or ashamed to say "No."

7. Hold up your light bravely, though it be but a rushlight.

8. Let nothing hinder daily reading of the Bible; with prayer.

9. Do not fear to examine too closely your own heart and motives.

10. Speak to the impenitent of Christ and his salvation.

11. See to it that your religion makes you a better son or daughter, a better clerk, a better student, a better friend, a better workman.

12. Strive to show forth the "beauty of holiness," by sympathy, by courtesy, by a delicate appreciation of others' feeling, by a constant forgetfulness of self.

13. Do not set yourself up as a standard.

14. Let nothing keep you from the Savior.

15. Never resolve in your own strength.

The withering effects upon the mind and heart of very much of the light, trashy literature of the day, are pointedly set forth in this paragraph from the Liberal Christian:

Our Young Folks.

An Angel in Disguise.

Idleness, vice, and intemperance had done their miserable work, and the dead mother lay cold and stark amid her wretched children. She had fallen in upon the threshold of her own door in a drunken fit, and died in the presence of her frightened little ones.

Death touches the springs of our common humanity. This woman had been despised, scoffed at, and angrily denounced by every man woman and child in the village; but now, as the fact of her death was passed from lip to lip in subdued tones, pity took the place of anger, and sorrow of denunciation. Neighbors went hastily to the old tumble-down hut, in which she had secured little more than a place of shelter from summer heat and winter cold;—some with grave-clothes for a decent interment of the body, and some with food for the half-starving children, three in number. Of these, John, the eldest, a boy of twelve, was a stout lad, able to earn his living with any farmer. Kate, between ten and eleven, was a bright active girl, out of whom something clever might be made, if in good hands; but poor little Maggie, the youngest was hopelessly diseased. Two years before, a fall from a window had injured her spine, and she had not been able to leave her bed since, except when lifted in the arms of her mother.

"What is to be done with the children?" That was the chief question now. The dead mother would go underground, and be forever beyond all concern of the villagers. But the poor children must not be left to starve. After considering the matter, and talking it over with his wife, farmer Jones said that he would take John and do well by him, now that his mother was out of the way; and Mrs. Ellis, who had been looking out for an apprentice girl, concluded that it would be charitable in her to make choice of Kate, even though she was too young to be of any use for several years.

But no one, said "I'll take Maggie." Pitying glances were cast on her wan and wasted form, and thoughts were troubled, on her account. Mothers brought cast-off garments, and, removing her soiled and ragged clothes, dressed her in neat attire. The sad eyes and patient face of the little one touched many hearts, and even knocked at them for entrance. But none opened to take her in. Who wanted a bed-ridden child?

"Take her to the poor house," said a rough man to whom the question, "What's to be done with Maggie?" was asked. "Nobody's going to be bothered with her."

"The poor house is a sad place for a sick and helpless child," answered one.

"For your child or mine," said the other, "but for this brat it will prove a blessed change. She will be kept clean, have healthy food, and be doctored, which is more than can be said of her past condition."

There was reason in that, but still it didn't satisfy. The day following the day of death, was made the day of burial. A few neighbors were at the miserable hovel, but none followed the dead cart as it bore the unhonored remains to the pauper grave. Farmer Jones, after the funeral was over placed John in his wagon and drove away, satisfied that he had done his part. Mrs. Ellis spoke to Kate with a hurried air—"Bid your your sister good bye," and then drew the children apart ere scarcely their lips had touched in a sobbing farewell. Hastily others went out, some glancing at Maggie, and some refraining from a look, until all had gone. She was alone. Just over the threshold, Joe Thompson, the wheelwright, paused and said to the blacksmith's wife, who was hastening off with the rest:

"It's a cruel thing to leave her so."

"Then take her to the poor house; she'll have to go there," answered the blacksmith's wife, springing away and leaving Joe behind.

For a little while the man stood with a puzzled air; then he turned back and went into the hovel again. Maggie, with a painful effort, had raised herself to an upright position, and was sitting on the bed, straining her eyes upon the door out of which all had just departed. A vague terror had come into her thin, white face.

"Oh, Mr. Thompson," she cried, "don't leave me alone!"

Though rough in exterior, Joe Thompson, the wheelwright, had a heart, and it was very tender in some places. He liked children, and was pleased to have them come to his shop, where many a wagon was made or mended for the village boys without a draft on their hoarded pennies.

"No, dear," he answered, in a kind voice, going to the bed and stooping down over the child, "you shan't be left alone." Then he wrapped her with the gentleness almost of a woman, in the clean bedclothes which some neighbor had brought; and, lifting her in his strong arms, bore her out into the air, and across the field that lay between the hovel and his home.

Now Joe Thompson's wife, who happened to be childless, was not a woman of the sweetest temper, nor much given to self-denial for others' good, and Joe had well grounded doubts touching the manner of greeting he should receive on his arrival. Mrs. Thompson saw him approaching from the window, and with ruffling feathers met him a few paces from the door, as he opened the garden gate and came in. He bore a precious burden, and he felt it to be so. As his arms held the sick child to his breast, a sphere of tenderness went out from her, and penetrated his feelings. A bond had already wonded itself around them both, and love was springing into life.

"What have you here?" sharply questioned Mrs. Thompson.

Joe felt the child start and shrink against him. He did not reply except by a look that was pleading and cautionary, that said, "Wait a moment for explanations, and be gentle;" and, passing in, carried Maggie to the small chamber on the first floor, and laid her on a bed. Then stepping back, he shut the door and stood face to face with his wife in the passage-way outside.

"You haven't brought home that sick brat!" Anger and astonishment were the tones of Mrs. Joe Thompson; her face was in a flame.

"I think women's hearts are sometimes very hard," said Joe. Usually Joe Thompson got out of his wife's way, or kept rightly silent and non-combative when she fired up on any subject; it was with some surprise, therefore, that she now encountered a firmly set countenance and a resolute pair of eyes.

"Women's hearts are not half so hard as men's," replied Mrs. Thompson.

Joe saw, by a quick intuition, that his resolute bearing had impressed his wife, and he answered quickly, and with real indignation: "Be that as it may, every women at the funeral turned her eyes steadily from the sick child's face, and when the cart went off with her dead mother, hurried away and left her alone in that old hut."

"Where are John and Kate?" now asked Mrs. Thompson.

"Farmer Jones put John into his wagon and drove off. Katie went home with Mrs. Ellis, but nobody wanted the sick one. 'Send her to the poor house,' was the cry."

"Why didn't you let her go to the poor house then? What did you bring her here for!"

"She can't walk to the poor house," said Joe, "somebody's arms must carry her, and mine are strong enough for that task."

"Then why don't you keep on? Why did you stop here?" demanded the wife.

"Because I am not apt to go on fools' errands. The guardians must first be seen, and a permit obtained," replied Joe Thompson.

"When will you see the guardians, and get the permit?" was asked, with irrepressible impatience.

"To-morrow."

"Why put it off until to-morrow? Go at once for the permit, and get the whole thing off your hands to-night."

"Jane," said the wheelwright, with an impressiveness of tone that greatly subdued his wife, "I read in the Bible sometimes, and find so much said about little children—how the Savior rebuked the disciples who would not receive them; and how he said that whosoever gave them even a cup of cold water should not go unrewarded. Now it is a small thing for us to keep this poor, motherless little one for a single night; to be kind to her for a single night; to make her comfortable for a single night."

The voice of the strong, rough man shook, and he turned his head away, so that the moisture in his eyes might not be seen. Mrs. Thompson did not answer, but a soft feeling crept into her heart.

"Look at her kindly, Jane; speak to her kindly," said Joe. "Think of her dead mother, and the loneliness, the pain, the sorrow that must be on all her coming life." The softness of his heart gave unwonted eloquence to his lips.

Mrs. Thompson did not reply, but presently turned towards the little chamber where her husband had deposited Maggie; and, pushing open the door went quietly in. Joe did not follow; he saw that her state had changed, and felt that it would be best to leave her alone with the child. So he went to the shop, which stood near the house, and worked until dusky evening released him from labor. A light shining through the little chamber window, was the first object that attracted Joe's attention on turning toward the house. It was a good omen. The path led him by this window, and when opposite he could not help pausing to look in. It was now dark enough outside to screen him from observation. Maggie lay a little raised on a pillow, with the lamp shining full in her face. Mrs. Thompson was by the bed talking to the child; but her back was toward the window, so that her countenance was not seen.

From Maggie's face, therefore, Joe must read the character of their intercourse. He saw that her eyes were intently fixed upon his wife; that now and then a few words came, as if in answers, from her lips; that her expression was sad and tender; but he saw nothing of bitterness or pain. A deep drawn breath was followed by one of relief as a weight lifted itself from his heart.

On entering, Joe did not go immediately to the little chamber. His heavy tread about the kitchen brought his wife somewhat hurriedly from the room where she had been with Maggie. Joe thought it best not to refer to the child, nor to manifest any concern in regard to her.

"How soon will supper be ready?" he asked.

"Right soon," answered Mrs. Thompson, beginning to bustle about. Her voice was gentle.

After washing from his hands the dust and soil of work, Joe left the kitchen and went to the little bedroom. A pair of large bright eyes looked up at him tenderly, gratefully, pleadingly. How his heart swelled in his bosom! Joe sat down, and now for the first time examining the thin face carefully under the lamplight, saw that it was an attractive face, and full of a childish sweetness which suffering had not been able to obliterate.

"Your name is Maggie?" he said as he sat down and took her soft little hand in his.

"Yes, sir." Her voice struck a chord that quivered in a low strain of music.

"Have you been sick long?"

"Yes, sir." What sweet patience was in her tone.

"Has the doctor been to see you, Maggie?"

"He used to come, sir."

"But he hasn't come lately?"

"No, sir."

"Have you any pain, Maggie?"

"Sometimes I have pain, sir, but I have none now."

"When had you pain?"

"This morning my side ached very much, and my back hurt when you carried me in your arms."

"It hurts you to be lifted or moved about, does it?"

"Yes, sir."

"Your side doesn't ache now, does it, Maggie?"

"No, sir, it doesn't hurt now."

"Did it ache a great deal, Maggie?"

"Yes, sir; but it hasn't ached any since I've been in this soft bed."

"The soft bed feels good?"

"O, yes, sir—so good!" What a satisfaction, mingled with gratitude, was in the poor sick child's face!

"Supper is ready," said Mrs. Thompson, looking into the room a little while afterwards.

Jo glanced from his wife to that of Maggie; she understood him and answered:

"She can wait until we are done; then I will bring her something to eat." There was an effort at indifference on the part of Mrs. Thompson; but her husband had seen her through the window, and understood that the coldness was assumed. Joe waited, after sitting down to the table, for his wife to introduce the subject uppermost in both of their thoughts, but she kept silent on that theme for many minutes, and he maintained a like reserve. At last she said abruptly:

"What are you going to do with that child?"

"I thought you understood me that she was to go to the poor house," replied Joe, as if surprised at her question.

Mrs. Thompson looked rather strangely at her husband for some moments, and then dropped her eyes. The subject was not again referred to during the meal. At its close Mrs. Thompson toasted a slice of bread and softened it with milk and butter; adding to this a cup of tea, she took them in to Maggie, and held the small waiter on which she had placed them, while the hungry child ate with every sign of pleasure.

"Is it good?" asked Mrs Thompson, seeing with what a keen relish the food was taken.

The child paused with the cup in her hand, and answered with a look of gratitude that awoke to new life old human feelings which had been slumbering in Mrs. Thompson's heart for years.

"We'll keep her a day or two longer; she is so weak and helpless," said Mrs. Joe Thompson, in answer to her husband's remark, at breakfast time on the next morning, that he must step down and see the guardians of the poor about Maggie.

"She'll be so much in your way," said Joe.

"I shan't mind that for a day or two. Poor thing!"

Joe did not see the guardians of the poor on that day, nor on the next day, following! In fact, he never saw them at all on Maggie's account, for in less than a week Mrs. Joe. Thompson would as soon have thought of taking up her abode herself in the poor house, as sending Maggie there!

What light and blessing did that sick child bring to the home of Joe Thompson, the poor wheelwright! It had been dark, and cold, and miserable there for a long time, just because his wife had nothing to love and care for out of herself, and so became sour, irritable, ill-tempered, and self-afflicting in the desolation of her woman's nature. Now the sweetness of that sick child looking ever to her in love, patience, and gratitude, was as honey to her soul, and she carried her in her heart as well as in her arms, a precious burden. As for Joe Thompson, there was not a man in all the neighborhood who drank daily of a more precious wine of life than he. An angel had come into his house disguised as a sick, helpless, and miserable child, and filled all its dreary chambers with the sunshine of love.—British Workman.

Our Pulpit.

A Sermon On the Bible,—With Three Texts.

BY EDWIN T. HIMES.

1. Thy word is truth (Jno. 17: 17.)

That which is infallible is exempt from error, and this is the claim we make for the word of God. The translation of that word is a fallible work, and consequently not exempt from error. While skeptical critics may point to imperfections as invalidating the truth of the sacred page it should be understood that their argument rests on the false premise, that Christians recognize the translation of the Bible to be infallible. All may learn to the contrary by reading the title which instructs us thus, "translated out of the original tongues and with the former translations diligently compared and revised." What, says the infidel, revise the word of God? No! it is an absurdity to talk of such a thing, but it is perfectly consistent to correct mistakes that may have been made in translating it.

Although the several versions of the Bible give a different rendering to several passages, yet the fact cannot be denied that they present a general harmony on fundamental truth, whether it be historic, prophetic or experimental.

2. "But as God is true, our word towards you was not yea and nay." (2 Cor. 1: 18.)

Truth is harmonious, while error is discordant, thus the Bible student is enabled to discern the errors of translators, whether they be in the rendering of the text or in its punctuation; and though they are comparatively few, and do not effect the vital harmony of the Bible, yet they are seized upon by skeptics as sufficient to condemn it, and also justify them in their unbelief.

Matt 19: 28, was formerly punctuated to read thus, "ye which have followed me in the regeneration," but the comma has been changed in later editions of the Bible and placed after "me," thus materially altering the sense of the text, and making harmony where discord previously existed. The disciples could not follow Christ in regeneration for he was sinless, and so could not be regenerated, but they could follow him, and for so doing had a promise made to them to be fulfilled in the regenesis, when Jesus will come again and occupy his throne of glory. With the former punctuation the text taught "yea and nay" but with the latter it teaches "yea, yea."

Again, in Heb. 10: 12, the comma was once placed after sins, thus, "But this man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God." Such a punctuation made Paul contradict himself, for in the last verse of the previous chapter he had just declared that Christ would come again, the second time; but the difficulty is removed when the comma is placed after forever; thus showing that the sacrifice was forever, and that Christ had sat down with his Father temporarily until his enemies should be made his footstool.

The supposed or pretended contradictions in the Bible have been set forth from time to time and effectually answered by abler pens than mine, I simply cite the above to show how easily harmony may be found where there was an apparent discord.

3. "Thy word is settled in heaven." (Ps 119: 89.)

Neither the works nor the word of God can be changed by man. As we behold the sunlight by day, and the moon and starry heavens by night, the fact that the heathen worship them as gods does not change their true nature, we behold in them the work of the Creator. So, also, as the light of the Bible comes shining on our pathway, though some may regard it as "cunningly devised fables," our own experience in the truth of its promises, and the fulfillment of its "sure word of prophecy" forces us to the belief that it is of divine origin. It is true that its rays of light have sometimes been obscured by clouds of tradition and superstition, but these, like the morning vapor that becloud the sun, are dispersed and vanish away as we search the word seeking the light of God.

A history of the Bible would not of itself establish its truthfulness any more than the history of a coin would prove the genuineness of the metal that composed it. Truth, like pure gold, carries its own identity, and we do not believe the Bible because great men have said it is true, or because our fathers, or the church has so declared. In reading its sacred page we find the same solid evidence of its truth that others have obtained before us, and a personal experience in it will make us not only earnest, but also intelligent believers in God, and his word.

JOSHUA V. HIMES, ... EDITOR.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Sept. 5, 1871.

EDITOR'S NOTICES.

Jonesboro, Ill., Sep. 9 and 10, as Br. Childs may arrange.

Freedmen's Conference, Morgan's Point on the Mississippi River, Ark., Sep. 15–17.

After this meeting I visit Memphis, and then go to Batesville, Ark., and the White River region, to labor for a time with Br. S. Rosebraugh

A wide door is open in the White River region among the white people. They are poor and have small means; yet the poor must have the gospel. This people lost all by the war, and have not yet recovered. But are making the best of the situation. And best of all, they want the truth on the "blessed hope." The door was opened here providentially by Dr. Fletcher, and the word of the Lord has to some extent b[illegible] course. They have been pleading [illegible] for two years. I shall now visit th[illegible]

After this I shall visit the [illegible]es in Michigan, as I have promised Br. Wright and others. J. V. H.

THE article on the Kingdom of Heaven, which we give elsewhere, will be read with interest, spite of its length, as coming from the leading Baptist paper of the Southern States. It is the substance of an article which first appeared in the Advent Quarterly.

A WORD TO FARMERS.—"When thou cuttest down thine harvest in the field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the works of thine hands." (Deut. 24:19.)

—In other words, remember the poor.

IT is probable that the publication of Dr. Leonard Tafel's interlinear and literal translation of the entire Scriptures, will be commenced before the close of this year. It will give the original, and a literal word for word English translation. All Bible students will welcome the appearance of this work.

IF our opponents will persist in calling us Sadducees, for the sake of exerting the influence of a bad name against, may we not, at least, insist that they spell the name right. The Morning Star used to show its contempt by spelling Adventist with a small 'a.' The Christian Record calls our views 'Sadduseeism.' Possibly he refers not to the ancient sect, but to his sad feelings at seeing the growth of our cause.

IT is said that a Congregationalist Society in New Bedford distributes weekly two hundred copies of religious papers. That, we will warrant, is a live society. We know of only one Advent church engaged in a similar work. The church at Chicago takes 6 copies of the TIMES weekly, for free distribution. A live paper is a very effective agency for disseminating ideas. Every church ought to see to it that all willing readers are supplied.

IN a debate on the nature of man, not long since, Mr. Treat says his reporter admitted that 'the body returns to dust, and is then unconscious.' Indeed! Was it then conscious while alive? Does consciousness inhere in a material body? He said Eccl. 9:5—'The dead know not anything'—referred to the body. So then, we should read Solomon thus—'Live bodies know that they shall die: dead bodies know not anything.' If this is a specimen of Eld. Treat's power as a reasoner, we think Br. Green will have no difficulty in his debate with him.

THE following locals appeared in the Courier the week following our late visit to Seneca, Kas:

> 'The subject of discourse at the Universalist church next Sabbath evening will be: What did Jesus Christ come into the world to do?'
> 'The second advent of Christ in its relations to the immortality of the soul, its consciousness after death, and to the dogma of the final annihilation of the wicked, will be the subject of the discourses in the Congregational church Seneca, next Sunday, morning and evening. All are invited.

—We said nothing in public on the life and death question; but are glad that our presence has resulted in the agitation of the question in that community. Agitation is what we want, for it leads to inquiry, and that leads to light!

'THE Coming Race' is the title of an English work just republished in this country. It purports to be a sketch of the manners and customs of a people living inside the globe. Really, it appears to be a presentation of the author's ideas of what the race existent upon earth's surface ought to be. In his sketch of their manner of disposing of the dead, he relates that the funeral hymn is called a 'Birth-Song;' and the survivors do not feel sad, but rejoice over the good fortune of those whom death removes to a better clime. Immaterialists will please take notice of this hint, so clearly designed as a bit of satire upon their inconsistency in mourning for those whom death has removed into the presence of God.

THE Advance thus states a very plain truth:

> The advocates of easy divorce can scarcely be considered ingenuous. They tell us harrowing stories, and too true, of "delicate women chained to brutes," of "legalized prostitution," etc. And then, assuming that there is no other relief, they clamor for a door that shall not only offer both sinned and sinned-against release from each other, but open them to new alliances. They studiously ignore the fact that the laws of many States do, and that the laws of all States might, provide for separation without divorce, in certain cases. This offers a sufficient relief. More than this finds no sanction in God's word nor in the good of society. It is poor surgery that insists on amputation at the neck, when it might get along with taking off the fore-arm or a finger.

THE Golden Age says of certain late experiments in England:

> Mr. Home, the celebrated medium, has been honored with an examination by a party of scientists in London, and we learn from the 'Popular Science Review' that the sitting satisfied the most skeptical of 'the importance of further investigation.' Mr. Crookes, editor of the 'Review,' and Mr. Serjeant Cox both testify to having witnessed the most extraordinary phenomena at the sitting, and were convinced that the wonders were performed by some power or powers apart from the volition of Mr. Home. Some of the tests were so carefully scrutinized and severe that they put the matter of jugglery out of all question. But whether the phenomena in question were caused by 'psychic force' is a question for further experiments to determine. If there is such a a force, proceeding directly from the nervous system of specially constituted persons, and exerted independently of the muscular system, its discovery will have a scientific value of the greatest moment; but it must be a remarkable force indeed that possesses so many of the attributes of intelligence as the phenomena of Spiritualism present.

OVER a year ago, Methodist journals were exulting over the introduction of immaterialism among Adventists, by means of a pseudo-Adventist, who, after untiring exertions upon the part of Dr. Clark and Prof. Lummus, became a pseudo-immaterialist. The last mention of him by a Methodist journal, was to the effect that he was attending our camp-meetings, and making proselytes—in Southern phrase—by the 'heap.' But we have yet to learn of one genuine pervert from our ranks.

On the other hand that people turned Br. Collins out of their communion, and refused him the fellowship we readily extended. As a result, his Address has led many souls among us; and his later work on the Rich Man and Lazarus bids fair to add to the number. A second edition was called for in a few weeks, and is now ready. We are hoping the 'heresy-hunters,' like Dr Brooks, will send us more men of the same stamp.

PROPHETIC CHART.

The frequent calls for a map of the symbolic prophecies, for the use of lecturers, have led us to plan one more Prophetic Chart, which, if published, will be the finest thing of the kind ever offered to the church.

As a publication of this character involves a large outlay, and can, in any event, but little more than repay its cost, we propose to issue it upon the basis of a subscription, and shall not commence work upon it until a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to secure the Association from any loss.

All our experience in publishing charts, in the past, will be brought into play, to make this the perfect and complete chart. It will contain illustrations of Dan. ch. 2 (the image); 7 (the four beasts); 8 and 9 (the ram and he-goat and the 2300 days and prophetic weeks); Christ's great prophecy in Mat. 24; Rev. chs. 5–7 (the seals); chs. 8–11 (the trumpets, and two witnesses); ch. 12 (the woman, the child and dragon); ch. 13 (the leopard and two-horned beasts); ch. 16 (the vials); ch. 17 (the scarlet beast); etc., etc.

The prophetic periods will be illustrated, but not in a manner to confine them to any special dates. But they will be so arranged that any lecturer can adapt them to his own views of their rise and temination.

In short we purpose to make it invaluable to every preacher upon prophecy; a help to church and ministry that no Advent chapel can afford to do without; and that will be a preacher in every household where it is hung up.

We wish for one hundred subscribers, to ensure its financial success; but will commence work upon it as soon as FIFTY RESPONSIBLE NAMES are secured.

TERMS.—$10 for a single chart; one half to be paid when work on the chart commences, and the remainder upon delivery.

We trust this liberal proposition will meet a prompt and equally liberal response. Let ministers bring the subject before the churches, and take collections, or pledges to secure its speedy issue. Let brethren who are able subscribe in behalf of preachers who are not able to buy one. Let us obey the prophetic injunction, to "write the vision, and make it plain upon tables," after a fashion that shall command the attention and respect of all to whom the chart may be displayed. Let us hear from all interested, at once.

ADDRESS, ADVENT TIMES, Buchanan, Mich.

Tour East.

O. R. FASSETT.

Starting from home, Minneapolis Minn. Aug. 4, to attend my first appointment on the way, I reached Prescott, Wis. the same evening, and was conveyed by Br. Hamblin to his residence, a distance of seven miles, where I tarried one night enjoying the kind hospitalities of his family. The next day we attended a barn meeting on the farm and near the residence of Br. Shephard, in the town of Clifton. Meeting continued from Friday evening Aug. 4, over the Lord's day. I found Eld. E. T. Himes on the spot, as a Quarterly Meeting had been appointed by him in connection with this barn meeting. The location of this meeting was between Prescott and River Falls. For two years we have held a meeting once a month in this region, in Glass and Pearce valleys, with good success. Mrs. Fassett latterly has supplied several times, and preached also in Trimbelle, a distance of eight miles beyond. The congregations have become large and gather from all the region around for several miles. This barn meeting was appointed by the request of Br. Shephard, who has just completed a large barn, and wished to have a meeting in it as soon as it was finished so as to accomodate the people. The meeting on the Lord's day was a most interesting one. There were three services held. Eld. L. C. Collins preached a most excellent sermon in the morning, to a large and attentive congregation. I followed in the afternoon, and Br. Himes in the evening. He will no doubt give a sketch of this meeting. Br. Shephard has spared no pains nor expense to get the Advent truth before this people, in the form of books, tracts, and sustaining liberally the living preachers. He is begining to witness the fruit of his long and patient labors of love. He bore the burden of this meeting, as he had other meetings, with a hospitable and benevolent spirit, aided by his ever faithful wife and children. May the Lord reward them here and hereafter, but especially at the resurrection of the just, for their many kindnesses.

My next appointment, though not in the published list, was on Monday Aug. 7, at Winona, where now Eld. E. T. Himes is located as pastor. A heavy shower an hour before meeting hindered many from being present. Yet we had a good number to preach to, and after meeting sat at the communion and celebrated our Savior's death, in view of his return. This was a blessed meeting. Eld. Himes was necessarily absent, but sister Rowell was present, together with a part of her family, though living at a distance of six miles in the country. Sister Rowell is doing a noble work for God in this region. Eld. Himes has yet hardly got settled into the harness here, but has paved the way for a regular siege and battle with the enemy, and will be of great help to the church in this beautiful city. His family are pleasantly situated in the midst of kind and generous friends. The Lord prosper the cause and church at Winona.

LaCrosse. Owing to the stage delaying, the time of my appointment was not answered by my presence so punctually as should have been, and the small congregation which had convened dispersed before I arrived. I, however, talked to a little company at the house of Br. Reese, a candle whom the Lord has set in this city to help light it. Br. Brown of Brownsville was present and gave us good cheer. LaCrosse must yet have the gospel of the kingdom preached there by some faithful servant.

In West Salem, ten miles west of LaCrosse we held meeting on Tuesday evening. Had a good hearing, and the truth preached must tell on those who heard it for God assisted us. Br. and sister Wood, who have showed us so much kindness, repeated their charity. The Lord bless the few noble ones in Salem, all of whom we would be glad to mention in this sketch, but must not. Had Br. Wellcome known that when he tarried at New Salem he was in the midst of some of the best of earth's sons and daughters, and within a stone's throw of those who would have Welcomed him indeed, he would not have put up at the Inn. Why did he not inquire for——Christians? No, but "Christian Adventists," or "Adventists," and he would have been pointed directly to their houses. Our brethren are known by the latter name every where. For they are a "sect every where spoken against."

Sparta. Yes, Sparta! Oh how good times have we had there in the name of the Lord. Found the brethren and sisters there as usual. And Br. Thurber as their pastor. God bless him and his companion. Our meeting Thursday evening was a good one. The prospects of this church are brightning, provided they keep ministerial help, and do all that is required of them. Oh, how I love these Christian friends!

Milwaukee, Friday evening. Preached to a few believers, and two or three unbelievers. Alas! for this great city. What shall be done for it? Something should be done to awaken that wicked city to its coming doom. Who will be, or is the Jonah? Br. Christenson is about to remove to Kennebunkport, Me. He will be missed by the little band of praying ones. Lord send help to Milwaukee.

Chicago. Arriving at the depot, who should I meet but Br. F. Burr, who inquired of me 'is this Eld. Fassett?' We met after several years of separation and hardly knew each other. He took me home to his own hired house and hospitably cared for me. I had no appointment for the evening, and also had to leave for Buchanan.

Buchanan. Seated in the cars at Chicago Br. W. Himes appeared to my surprise, and happily so. We had a good social season on the way. Arriving at B., Br. Mansfield was at the depot with horse and carriage to convey me to my appartments for the night, at Eld. Himes' residence. We were glad to meet each other as co-laborers in the best of causes. The Sabbath services were conducted by Eld. Mansfield, William Himes, and myself. Br. and Sr. Mansfield inviting me to preach during the day, I tried to preach for Jesus twice. The congregations were good, and very attentive to the word. The labor bestowed by Eld. Mansfield and his faithful helpmate on the cause here is seen in the character of the congregations, and in the interest in the Sabbath school. Their church is a light in the great west. The Lord bless the faithful pastors. They need rest from their long and arduous labors. They intend an absence of a few weeks. Br. Himes was not at home. I hoped to see him. I was kindly cared for by sister Himes and the family as I ever have been. On Monday morning Aug. 14, before setting out on the remainder of my journey I took an inspection of the Advent Office. All is like clock-work here. The new press works well. It will be a faithful servant. I hope the means will be forthcoming to pay up the remaining indebtedness upon it. No person can do a more worthy deed for the cause than to do this. This office is doing much for our cause in the great west. And I am now, as I have been for some time of the opinion that it should be moved to Chicago. The paper issued from that city would have a hundred fold more influence and a far wider circulation. And the same may be said of all its publications.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. The cause in this city I found in a prosperous state. Much more so than I had expected, having learned that it had suffered reverses which had considerably weakened it. I had a good day with the church, and a large congregation to hear the word. There is a flourishing Sabbath-school connected with this society and earnest workers for God in it. I was much pleased with my visit in this beautiful city in my native county and State. I put up with Br. M. McCullock and family who kindly ministered to my necessities, while the church aided me on my way. This congregation of believers need a faithful pastor. I hope God will send them one who will build them up in the faith of the gospel.

SPRINGFIELD CAMPMEETING. I arrived at this national anniversary Advent meeting in due time. Met a hearty welcome from old friends with whom in former years I labored in this Eastern field. It was a joy to meet the ministering brethren who had battled for the truth against the errors of the age, and borne the burden and heat of the day unflinchingly in defence of the gospel. Familiar faces greeted me from the former fields of my individual labors in the earlier history of our blessed cause. From Providence, R. I., Boston, Westboro, Hartford, Ct., I found old and tried friends. In the Hartford tent we had a season of weeping over those who had fallen in death, while we thought of sacred ties severed for a season by the last enemy; but we sorrow in hope, blessed be the Lord! and rejoiced together in the bright prospect of "the better resurrection."

The spirit of this meeting was good. It seemed better than any I ever attended at this annual gathering. The preaching was excellent, subjects being well chosen, and faithfully delivered, and in the power of the Holy Spirit. Sinners were under deep conviction, others were converted to God, and the saints wept, shouted and rejoiced. The missionary spirit has greatly increased since the calls from Europe, the South, and California have become so urgent. And the contributions to sustain missions were hearty and liberal. The object of my attending this meeting was to ascertain if any one would enter the mission field of California. Urgent solicitations have been pressed again and again upon me to enter that field from Christian friends in that distant State. I excuse myself feeling that I could not leave my present field of labor. And I had hoped that I might be excused. But coming here, the brethren say that I must go.

Well, I have consented so to do, and labor there for a season; and Mrs. Fassett and myself intend to start about the first of November, next, for that new field. May the great head of the church direct, and go with us, if we depart for that coast. We have labored on the Atlantic coast, in the New England, Middle States, and Canadas, and now the Lord counts us worthy to carry "the Gospel of the Kingdom" to the ends of our beloved land. Amen.

But "who is sufficient for these things." Brethren let your prayers accompany us, that we may win souls to Christ and gather sheaves for the garner of the Lord. O. R. FASSETT.

The British Association and Christianity.

The "British Association for the advancement of science" has closed its sitting at Edinburgh. These meetings have been interesting and will be memorable. Amidst papers of interest on many subjects, a better spirit than usual has prevailed in regard to religion. There is every reason why true science and true religion should act in concert. True knowledge of all kinds must ever exist in the most perfect harmony and agreement. The blessed God who made the Bible is the same God who spread out the sublime and wonderous fields of science, and "his invisible things, even his eternal power and Godhead are clearly seen, being understood by the things which he hath made." Nevertheless, there has been a strong disposition in certain quarters, and perhaps especially in connexion with some of the meetings of this very Association, to separate those things which God has thus united; and which can only be seen in their true glory when seen in union. In particular, a most strenuous effort has been made to get rid of the existence of God by the theory of spontaneous generation, and of the continued action and providence of God by theories of evolution and development. Men have seldom gone so far indeed as to attempt to prove the impossibility of the divine existence. It was justly remarked long ago that before such a daring attempt could be made, men would require themselves to possess divine attributes. If they do not know all things, the thing which they do not know may be that there is a God. If they have not penetrated into all space and lived throughout all time, what they have left undiscovered may be the glorious existence and providence of Jehovah. Atheists have, therefore, taken generally a lower ground, and merely attempted to prove from science that all the phenomena of nature can be sufficiently accounted for without supposing the existence of an intelligent first cause. This attempt has been made by two processes to which we have already referred, and sometimes, latterly, with considerable boldness.

It is a happy thing to discover, however, from the results of the recent meeting, that the tide has now fairly turned against the infidel philosophers. In some of the sections no doubt a less satisfactory spirit prevailed on the part of a few, but it cannot fail to be gratifying that much sounder views prevailed upon the whole, and that the leading man of the association, Sir William Thomson, the chairman, and a man who occupies the first rank in science, repudiated in his opening address the central principle of the speculative Atheists as quite untenable on scientific grounds. Let our readers carefully read and consider the following passage in which Sir William Thomson deals with and settles the question of spontaneous generation.

"A very ancient speculation," said he, "still clung to by many naturalists (so much so that I have a choice of modern terms to quote in expressing it), supposes that under meteorological conditions very different from the present, dead matter may have run together or crystallized or fermented into 'germs of life,' or 'organic cells,' or 'protoplasm.' But science brings a vast mass of inductive evidence against this hypothesis of spontaneous generation, as you have heard from my predecessor in the presidential chair. Careful enough scrutiny has, in every case up to the present day, discovered life as antecedent to life. Dead matter cannot become living without coming under the influence of matter previously alive. This seems to me as sure a teaching of science as the law of gravitation. I utterly repudiate, as opposed to all philosophical uniformitarianism, the assumption of 'different meteorological conditions'—that is to say, somewhat different vicissitudes of temperature, pressure, moisture, gaseous atmosphere—to produce or to permit that to take place by force or motion of dead matter alone, which is a direct contravention of what seems to us biological law. I am prepared for the answer, 'our code of biological law is an expression of our ignorance as well as of our knowledge.' And I say yes: search for spontaneous generation out of inorganic materials; let any one not satisfied with the purely negative testimony of which we have now so much against it, throw himself into the inquiry. Such investigations as those of Pasteur, Pouchet, and Bastian, are among the most interesting and momentous in the whole range of natural history, and their results, whether positive or negative, must richly reward the most careful and laborious experimenting. I confess to being deeply impressed by the evidence put before us by professor Huxley, and I am ready to adopt, as article of scientific faith, true through all space and through all time, that life proceeds from life, and from nothing but life."

And the same speaker further remarked:—

"I feel profoundly convinced that the argument of design has been greatly too much lost sight of in recent zoological speculations. But overpoweringly strong proofs of intelligent and benevolent design lie all around us, and if ever perplexities, whether metaphysical or scientific, turn us away from them for a time, they come back upon us with irresistible force, showing to us through nature the influence of a free will, and teaching us that all living beings depend on one ever acting Creator and Ruler."

This is surely definite speaking, and it is alike important and satisfactory as coming from such a high authority. But, at the same time, what does this important admission amount to? If it be a great truth "through all space and through all time that life proceeds from life, and from nothing but life," it follows inevitably that there must necessarily exist a great first cause from whose original and underived life all other life has sprung. This is the irresistible conclusion, as indeed Sir William Thomson himself frankly admits. All the dreams of the speculative Atheists are thus cut up by the roots by the demonstrations of their own sifting experiments. But are we to rest here? If there is a great first cause working everywhere around us, what need is there for the ingenious and extravagant speculations of Sir William Thomson himself, claimed also since by Mr. Peter Bayne, about the life of this world having come from seeds wafted from the debris of other shattered planets—a theory for which there is not a particle of evidence or foundation. It is quite unnecessary even to say that this may have been. Besides, who planted life in other planets? If God exists and acts, does not this sufficiently account for all? To hint that it is derogatory to the glory of God that he should continually be brought upon the stage in connexion with every small event is really a derogation from his true greatness, and an attempt to exclude him from the practical government of his own world. The peculiarity of God is that his infinite mind can at once comprehend all, and superintend all the vast arrangement of the universe without effort or confusion, not only the planets in their orbits, "worlds on worlds afar," but at the same time the sparrow that falleth to the ground, the very hairs of our heads, and the grass and lilies of the field. This is a far more sublime idea than that at which Sir Alexander Grant stood amazed. But this is not all. Having ascertained the existence of God, the philosopher may well inquire in regard to other phenomena upon which all mere natural science can throw no light—the mystery of sin and suffering, the action of conscience pointing towards a future judgment—the grand question connected with life and immortality, which are not only solved, but solved clearly in the Bible. If he simply rests with the fact that God exists, extorted from him, perhaps, as the result of his experiments, he knows less in reality than any child in our Sabbath schools. If he rests satisfied after having undoubtedly ascertained this stupendous fact of a great eternal center of life in the universe, without prosecuting his inquiries farther, he belies the first principles of true philosophy.

The other speculations in regard to evolution and development, which, if thoroughly successful, would cut very deep, overturning the constant agency and providence of God, are, as might have been anticipated, also breaking down, and will no doubt, be ultimately abandoned as thoroughly untenable. It is a strange proof of human folly and depravity that, mainly, perhaps, from a desire to escape from the inevitable responsibilities of the future, men should seek so eagerly to prove that they are descended from apes! The whole theory upon which this proceeds is, however, manifestly unfounded. Why have not all the apes in the world long ago risen to the rank of men if this theory be correct, just as an orchard of blossoms to-day becomes an orchard of apples to-morrow? Why does there exist still not only a multitude of apes but every variety of them? Why is it found impossible to break up, even by the utmost exercise of human skill and ingenuity, the fixed order of nature; the regularity of its classifications, all the steadfast and beautiful arrangements in the animal world which the wisdom and power of God have established? The dreams of Darwin—unnatural and degrading as they are—must no doubt end as all similar speculations have ended in their effectual refutation by unbending facts, and in the stronger and more intelligent establishment of the truths of God.

It is pleasant to turn from the crude suggestions of these "filthy dreamers" to the noble language of Sir David Brewster, the founder of the British Association, and who was himself at once one of the most distinguished philosophers of modern times and a humble and devout Christian. Writing to Sir Walter Scott, he thus expresses himself:—"It is one of the darkest spots in the history of man that these noble gifts [secular and religious knowledge] have been so seldom combined. In the young mind alone can the two kindred seeds be effectually sown, and among the improvements which some of our public institutions require we yet hope to witness a national system of instruction in which the volumes of nature and revelation shall be simultaneously perused." Again, adds this great man, "Knowledge indeed is at once the handmaid and the companion of true religion. They naturally support and adorn each other, and beyond the immediate circle of our secular duties they are the only objects of rational ambition. While the calm deductions of reason regulate and adorn the ardour of Christian zeal, the warmth of a holy enthusiasm gives a fixed brightness to the glimmering lights of knowledge."—The Rock.

The Prospects of Disarmament.

In this nineteenth century after Christ, man seems to remain the fighting animal that he was in the days of Nimrod, the mighty hunter, whose game was man. Christianity and civilization, which should be but the application of Christianity to the daily life of individuals and of nations, have not yet brought about the reign of peace and good-will on earth. Christianity, indeed, has in some degree mitigated the horrors of war in the particulars of the treatment of prisoners and the care of the wounded, though it was a good many centuries before it had this much effect on the old barbarous usages. But civilization has multiplied and made more murderous the infernal enginery of war, and exhausted its wealth of genius and stores of science to make destruction the surer and the more fatal. It is true, as we have heretofore urged in these columns, that the very deadly certainty which science and skill give to the machinery of war may be overruled to its ultimate abolition, as men will not consent to go to the field of battle if it be a mathematical certainity that they will never leave it alive. But this is not the idea which inspires the inventors or influences the principalities and powers that set them in operation. It will be in their despite, and not with their good-will, if this blessed miracle should ever be worked.

The surfeit of blood which the first Bonaparte gave to Europe it was hoped would have the effect of disgusting her with the cup of abominations. And it did keep the peace for a good many years, as far as the nations engaged in these wars of the giants were concerned. It needed an interval of repose to recruit their physical and material forces—their men and their money—before they felt strong enough to try conclusions again. It was forty years from the battle of Waterloo, which closed that era of bloodshed, to the battle of the Alma, which opened the late one. Since then the history of Europe has been written in blood, and mighty changes wrought by the sword—victories which they that wielded it did not mean or wish to win. The unity of Italy, the abolition of the temporal power of the Pope, the humiliation of Austria, and now the more than humiliation of France. Never, hardly, was there so much history compressed within about a score of years. And we cannot say that the results have not been, on the whole beneficial to the European race. But whether they are likely to promote the cause of peace on earth is much more problematical. Out of the heart of man come wars and fightings, and until the heart of man has undergone a very radical change wars and fightings will continue to issue forth from it in deadly procession. It is the passions, rather than the interests of men, that provoke them to deadly conflict; and the humiliation of defeat does not usually incline men to submission, but to revenge.

This very predominance of Prussia at the present moment is a case in point. She resolved more than fifty years ago that she would be avenged for Jena and Berlin, as well as guarded against any possible recurrence of that disgrace. Waterloo was a joint victory, and it was with "the shaft of banded nations" that the imperial eagle of France was pierced through. So she bided her time, but made active use of it. She trained up a whole generation of men from the cradle to take part in her great revenge when its hour struck. The hour came, and brought the man with it, as the hour always does. Never, even in the days of the great Napoleon, was a victory of one modern nation over another more complete and more utterly carried out. Sedan well avenged Jena, and the occupation of Paris that of Berlin. But the heart of the Frenchman has not been changed, nor its passions calmed, by the agonies it has suffered. It already meditates revenge, and its passions are kept in leash only till the time come to let slip those dogs of war. France avows she is looking forward to the day of retribution, and she has not the self-command which Prussia showed to keep it to herself. As soon as she can raise her head above the ruins which now encompass her, she will look about to see how best and soonest she can assault her hated enemy. And this must be by imitating her policy of making the country a camp of instruction, and bringing up her sons to the trade of war. Many years must elapse before this can be effectually done. In the meantime Prussia must keep herself prepared for the day of retribution. The nations round about must be also on their guard against the new arbiter of their destinies, and ready to unite in their common defense, if a common danger threaten them. For the time, therefore, it cannot but be that the military establishments of Europe will be increased rather than diminished, and that disarmament must be even more of a dream than it has been in times past. But we will look at this subject again.—Independent.

on that "coming and kingdom." He was an eye-witness of the scene. It was a "coming of the great God," in power, to give his saints a foretaste of the majesty and glory of his consummate kingdom. Peter says, on another occasion: "We have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known the power and coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount." (2 Pet. 1: 16–18.)

Our premises being taken, that the kingdom, as promised to the saints throughout the Scriptures, has not yet appeared, we claim that our argument has been advanced to prove our premises. Therefore we feel warranted, in the conclusion, that the kingdom of heaven has not been revealed, as yet, according to the promises set forth in the Scriptures, but is yet future, to be revealed after the judgment, at the close of the gospel dispensation.—Geo. M. Prime, in Baptist (Memphis).

EDITORIAL GLEANINGS.

We learn that Br. A. F. Dugger has, at Mount Ayr, Ringold Co. Iowa, just constituted an Advent church, of a good reliable element. One Christian minister united.——Br. E. H. Durand writes from Caro, Mich.: "Our Q. M. has just closed; eight were baptised, and nine added to the church. Br Mackie remains to help. The interest is increasing."——Br. Reed writes that affairs in San Francisco are not so bad as at first reported; and that some who were first carried away with the Seventh-day delusion, have recovered from the snare.——We have good reports from the meeting at Hornellsville, N. Y., in the hands of Brn. Phelps. Fenn, and Moore. A great interest has been awakened. Quite a number of Methodists, Baptists, and others, have revolutionized their theology, and rejoice that the test came there. Some sinners converted; and the dust removed from many neglected Bibles. Sixteen were baptised.

More Accidents.

The newspaper headings of the past month have seemed like a horrible nightmare, so thickly strewn are they with sickening accounts of accidents and disasters.

First came the Westfield disaster, with its 100 dead, and as many more wounded; and no sooner does that cease to attract attention and excite indignation from the multitude, than another explosion, as startling in its sickening details, and even more criminal in its causes, is published to the world.

Then appears, by way of change, a railroad accident, where an express train runs into an accommodation, killing, mangling, and burning to the extent of fifty or more lives. Then another railroad accident, where five are killed, and then buried with as little ceremony as though they had been dogs.

Then a hurricane, terminated by an earthquake, which desolates and nearly destroys two of the West India Islands. For this of course, there is no remedy, but the others have been caused by such criminal carelessness, or profound ignorance on the part of their managers, that they deserve all the opprobrium of an outraged public, and the punishment of violated law.

We subjoin particulars.

THE OCEAN WAVE DISASTER.

The low-pressure steamer Ocean Wave exploded her boiler at 5½ o'clock on Sunday afternoon at the wharf at Point Clear.* There were about 200 excursionists on board, fifty to sixty of whom were killed and wounded. A portion of the bodies were brought to this city (Mobile) by the steamers Fountain and Annie last night. The others will be brought here to-day. Efforts are making for the recovery of the bodies drowned. The cause of the disaster has not been ascertained, and an investigation will be made. Out of seven persons comprising one Creole family, six were killed. The captain, engineer, and pilot were killed. Only three of the officers escaped.

The steamer Ocean Wave left on Sunday morning with about 200 persons on board, for an excursion to Fish River, about twenty miles from the city. On the return trip the boat reached Point Clear at 5 p m., and was made fast. The band and part of the passengers went ashore; and, after the lapse of half an hour, the whistle was blown, and all returned to the boat. They had just got on board when the boiler exploded with great force, followed by a rumbling, hissing sound, and fragments of the timbers of the boat and the metal of the boiler were blown in every direction. The forward part of the cabin was carried away, and the chimney fell upon the after-cabin and crushed it. The boat sunk almost immediately, and her bow is now submerged

Sixty or seventy persons were killed or injured by the explosion. So far the bodies of nineteen dead, eight of whom are ladies, have been recovered. Twenty-eight of the wounded have been brought to the city; one of them, a girl, has since died The scene was appalling and heartrending. Wilder exhibitions of grief have been seldom witnessed. The frantic cries of the survivors, in lamentation for their lost wives, children, parents, brothers, and sisters, were agonizing to the last degree. Many of the passengers were little children, and little hats and bonnets came ashore to tell of the victims beneath the waves

The captain, Wm. Eaton, swam for some distance with both legs broken. A boat reached him just too late, and he went down. The two pilots were killed; the firemen were all killed, and the engineer and his wife severely injured. It is impossible to estimate correctly the loss of life. By some it is supposed that at least thirty or forty persons are still buried in the debris of the wreck or at the bottom of the Bay. A diver has gone to the scene of the disaster.

The accident has cast a gloom over the whole city, and universal sadness prevails. Streets are crowded with people, and the excitement and feeling are intense. The Ocean Wave has been for some time considered an unsafe boat, and has always been an unlucky one. A criminal responsibility rests somewhere, and it should be visited upon those to whose recklessness and incapacity the disaster is attributable. The appearance of the boiler indicated that it had yielded through rottenness, as it had been torn apart in a long seam. Had it exploded with greater violence the destruction would have been more general. The force of the explosion was directed upward and forward.

The Nautical Gazette reports that the Ocean Wave was built at Hoboken in 1854, and was a low pressure steamer of 333 76-100 tons register, employed as a freight-boat in Mobile Bay, and frequently used as an excursion steamer. She was seventeen years old, and was not in a very good condition. The U. S. Local Inspectors of the Tenth Supervising District have had occasion several times to compel her owners to comply more fully with the steamboat laws. The first complaint made against this boat last year was for not having on board the required number of life-preservers, and subsequently the Local Inspectors, John W. Youman (of hulls) and Edward P. Sprague (of boilers), ordered extensive repairs to both hull and boilers. These Inspectors report that not a single explosion or loss of life by steam occurred in their district last year. It is not known that the Ocean Wave's boiler has been changed since she was built in 1854.

THE REVERE DISASTER.

EDITOR'S JOURNAL.

BROCKPORT, N. Y.

MONDAY, Aug. 14. Spoke at night on the prophecies. Good interest. The Episcopalian minister was in, with others who took an interest in the subject.

TUESDAY, Aug. 15. Went to Rochester, and spoke in the New Hall, on State St., now occupied by the Advent Christian Church. It was stormy, but the people turned out well, and I had some freedom in showing that the signs of this time, indicated the nearness of the kingdom of God. It was received by many with joy. It is always good to hear that the Master is nigh. I am glad to be able to say that though the church here have passed through trials, they still hold on to the faith and keep up their meetings. What they need is a chapel, and a good pastor.

I was happy to greet many old friends, and receive warm greetings. I missed Br. B. K. Byam, who was suddenly taken away last month by drowning. But I cannot add to the faithful notice by Br. Fenn, in THE TIMES of Aug. 15. My acquaintance with Br. Byam was chiefly in his work among the Freedmen in Memphis. He was one of the best of young men, and as devoted a Christian as any one of my acquaintance. How mysterious that he in the midst of life and usefulness should be snatched away from beloved parents, and the church of which he was a useful and an honored member. But God doeth all things well. May others be raised up to fill his place. I saw his stricken parents, and spoke comforting words to them.

The heat was so intense that I could not get about to see as many of the flock as I wished to do.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 16. Went to East Shelby, where I had a happy visit with Br. J. H. Whitmore, the author of the able work on the Doctrine of Immortality. This was the home of his childhood. He was educated for the Bar, but became interested in the subject of preaching the gospel, and at the Michigan Camp-meeting at Jonesville, some three years ago, he conferred not with flesh and blood, but put on Christ in baptism, and was ordained, and returned home and began to preach the gospel of the kingdom in the old school-house where he had received the first rudiments of education. His old neighbors, and schoolmates all crowded to hear him, showing that, in one case at least, "a prophet" has "honor in his own country and among his own kin." Having no place to fully accommodate the people, he went to a Presbyterian neighbor, Judge Jackson, and asked him if he would present an eligible site for a church. He said "yes." He then started a subscription, and raised $800 that day, and followed it up till he got $4,000; and in a few months saw the church completed and PAID FOR.

Br. Whitmore now speaks to two congregations, and is prospering in the Lord. Although it was a hot day in harvest, the church was crowded, and better attention I never had, while I poured out the truth from a full heart for half an hour. I then told them that I had only given a part of the warm stream that was bubbling up from the depths of my heart, whereupon they said, "Go on, go on;" and so I obeyed them, and gave a LONG, but yet most said a SHORT sermon. It was a time of refreshing.

The results of Br. Whitmore's work show what an enterprising young man can do when he puts his heart and hands to the work.

Another fact should be stated here The way was prepared for this good work many years ago by Eld. P. A. Smith. He used to have crowds to hear him proclaim the truth, which took effect in many hearts, and but for his labors, that for a time seemed to be lost, we should in all probability never have had Br. Whitmore, or his book, now scattered by the thousand all over the land, or the fine chapel and church in East Shelby and West Barre.

THURSDAY, Aug. 17. Visited with Br. W. a number of excellent Christian families, some of whom had known me in other years, when I was with the Christian connection, between thirty and forty years ago. Our conversation on other times was sweet and edifying.

At noon Sr. Mansfield arrived to fill an appointment on the Sabbath, on her way East. Her presence gave the church great pleasure. After a short interview, I left for Brockport, with Sr. Josie Brownell, to speak at night and baptise. I preached on perfect peace. (Is. 26: 3.) But the water being shut off from the Race, we had to put off the baptism till an early hour in the morning. So we all went home in peace for rest.

FRIDAY, Aug. 18. At an early hour we "gathered at the river," and sang this beautiful hymn, after which I immersed after the old apostolic order, when we all went on our way rejoicing. This made seven souls that have "put on Christ in baptism" during my visit here. The little church have had a feast, and feel strengthened to keep up the service of God regularly, and are looking for greater and better things. Among the members are some of my oldest and best personal friends; and some of these, Brn. Davis and Brownell, and their families, came with me to the cars, with others of the same spirit and love which the disciples felt when parting with Paul. But soon we shall meet where all shall be immortal, and the parting come NEVER!

On Saturday a. m. I was in the office of THE TIMES, with plenty of work, and letters of friends giving words of good cheer.

In my visit to Western New York I had tokens of divine favor in behalf of the office and cause. One good brother, hearing that we were getting a new press, said he thought he should try and send us one hundred dollars in good time. And I think we shall have help in other directions, of which I may not speak now. God is with us. Blessed be his holy name.

My attention has been called within a few days to a pamphlet published by Eld. J. Blain, Buffalo, N. Y. In looking it over, I observe that he has adopted some views held and published by the Rev. H. Dunn, of England. One of these views is, that the Jews are to be restored in an age of probation yet to come. And in that age mortals and immortals are to dwell together. It is similar to the Millennarian view of the kingdom, a view in which we never saw any scriptural light or truth. The Jews had their dispensation FIRST. The Gentiles are having theirs. The first ended in apostasy, and the overthrow of the Jewish polity, and the second, according to the prophetic word, is also to end in apostasy at the coming of Christ, when he will set up his kingdom and reign forever and ever. The restoration of the Jews took place at the end of the seventy years captivity, under the commandment of Cyrus, king of Persia, B. C. 488. See Dan. 9: 25; Is. 44: 28; 45: 13; Ezra 1: 1-8.

The next point is of more interest. It involves the question which so many have asked in all ages; and also the struggle of the human mind to find evidence from the Bible that the great mass of mankind will after all be saved, and that only the incorrigible, who have had the privilege of the full light of the gospel, and refused it, will be lost. Mr. Dunn has gone largely into this question, as a restorationist. He has given the best proof he has for his theory, which consists of inferences from assumed premises.

SABBATH, Aug. 20. Spoke to the church in Buchanan. I love to meet with this church. It is my home, although I am not much with them, but the more pleasant when I am.

MONDAY, Aug. 22. Called at Chicago, on my way to the Amboy camp meeting. I enjoyed the hospitality of Br. H. G. Thompson. While in the city, among other things my attention was called to the material growth and prosperity of this emporium of the West It has plenty of brains, and unexempled enterprise. Its growth is without a parallel. In thirty years it has has come up from a few shanties, as a trading post with the Indians, to a city of three hundred thousand and the fourth in population, and said to be the second only in business, on the western continent.

The Chicago River, running through the city, has been lined with wharves and store houses on either bank, for a number of miles. An immense trade in grain is carried on. This river has run into the Lake, till of late, when it has been turned by a canal into the Mississippi, so that it is now a clear stream, instead of a stagnant cesspool, as before. Immense docks are building on the front, far out into the Lake, for the accomodation of the increase of commerce. And yet they are not satisfied with this. They have plans in operation to construct new docks on the Lake at Calumet, ten miles south, which will be superior to those of Chicago. They will, also, construct wharves and warehouses on the banks of Calumet River, which is wider and deeper than that of Chicago. A new city is to come up here, which if time continues, will soon be blended with the parent city. Chicago is not behind in her schools, colleges, and churches. But in a city of enterprise, pride and worldliness, it is not to be expected that there will be much humble, or self-denying religion. Fashion, show and worldiness prevail in the temples of worship. There are, however some exceptions, and we may find humble, devoted, and praying souls in all the churches. And some wait and watch for the coming of Jesus.

The African Episcopal Methodists are holding their conference here this week. Bp. Campbell is presiding. This branch of the church consists of some three hundred thousand members, and includes the most enlightened and pious portion of the colored people in America. There have been some efforts by the white Methodists of the north to have this body unite with them. But as yet the Africans hesitate. A deputation from the white conference was kindly received.

In reply Bishop Campbell said he loved the Methodist church as the mother of Methodism. As the reformation was the work of God, so Methodism was the work of God, as Martin Luther was raised to champion Protestantism so Richard Allen was raised to found the African Methodist church. So far as a union was concerned, he was frank to say that he was not educated up to a marriage—nor were the people in the white church. The time was coming when the people would recognise the fact that Br. Brown and Br. Campbell could preach a tolerably fair sermon in the churches. His son and Br. Brown's daughter would live to see the time when both races would be socially equal. In fifteen years' time it would be so. He did not wish any legislative interference between them on questions of social quality; the questions would settle themselves.

TUESDAY, Aug. 22. Left Chicago for Amboy, Ill. On arrival at the blessed old camp ground, I found all well. The meeting was in successful progress On the Sabbath, the first day of the meeting, the Lord poured out the healthful revival spirit. All hearts seemed to blend in unity and love. The preachers were filled and poured out the truth like rain. And the people could not tell which preached best, only they thought the last sermon was ever the best.

From F E Sturgeon, Warsaw Iowa.

I feel very unworthy and very incompetant to write to an editor, and an old experienced Christian minister, but please to bear me for Christ's sake, not that I am worthy. I too, am getting old, one year past half a century, few and evil have been the days of my life. But I feel to praise the name of my heavenly Father for giving me religious parents, they taught me to love God and hate sin. They were Methodists—I joined the M. E. church when quite young, was convicted of sin, felt my need of a Savior, but had no evidence of my acceptance till after I was married and had several children, the Lord gave me an evidence of my acceptance which I have never doubted. I have had trials, troubles, losses and crosses, lost a dear good husband and six little children. Have five children living, three married, two at home with me—all in the Advent Christian faith (praise the Lord). After I was converted I wanted to be baptised by immersion, but being sprinkled in infancy they could not, consistently with their views; so as I was raised in the church I could not have my conscience satisfied, while those who were raised out of the church could—I did not like to leave the church, I thought that would be too bad. I enjoyed myself very well, only when I would think of not having my conscience answered then I felt condemned. But the good Lord whose I am, and whom I am trying to serve, brought it about just right. I bought all my children a Bible a piece, tried to raise them to love and serve God, but they read very little. When I would go to see them and ask for the Bible, they would have to search the deepest recess of trunk, drawer, or chest for their Bibles, I have thought they thought because mother bought them they were too sacred to read. But our good Father brought it about just right. My eldest son-in-law was raised a Roman Catholic, but about four or five years ago he was converted, and he and his wife were baptised by a Baptist minister. There being no church in their neighborhood he gave them a certificate of baptism, they did not join any church for a while. They got acquainted with Br. S. Baldwin, an Advent st, and they embraced the Advent doctrine. Many a talk has he and I had, but he could not make me believe but what I had an immortal soul that would live forever. I thought they were ruined. I thought if they had only joined the Baptist church and been satisfied, how glad I would have been; but God had better things in store for us. They talked to my other son-in-law, got him interested, and he and Br. Baldwin wrote for Br. Wm. McCulloch to come and preach for us. He came, and God blest his labors. The night he preached on immortality I felt as if my brain would take fire. Some would not go hear him, but I thought I dared to hear him for he preached Christ and the resurrection the first sermon; the Scripture says "try the spirits." Oh, he got up such an interest here, searching the Scriptures and talking on them, I never saw the like; there were a good many converted, and I think about fifteen baptised. My son-in-law who sent for Br. McCullock, my son and his wife, and I are among those that were baptised on Jan. 9, 1870. I was in my fiftieth year. The night he preached on immortality I told my children if we believed that doctrine, and went to hear that preaching, we would be forsaken by all our friends, and be considered the filth and offscouring of the world. I went to bed, but not to sleep. I prayed and besought God to show me the right way I felt willing to give up every thing for my Savior and the truth, only show me what is truth and then sustain me. These sweet words came into my heart; "the Lord will give grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." Oh, how I rejoiced and praised God for his mercy and goodness to unworthy me. I got up and told my son and his wife how the Lord had blest me and promised to give me grace. He says he told his wife "mother is against us," and if he did not join the Advent church he never expected to join any.

Br. McCullock did a good work here. Six of my family went into the organization. I thought I would stay where I was, I was satisfied, and did not think of leaving the M. E. church. I went to every meeting, as has always been my custom, and encouraged all I could to go, and join the church, but did not think of joining myself. I thought I could live as well where I was and did not think it right to go from one church to another, and I suppose I might as well say I was a little afraid of persecution. But some of our members got to whipping others over my shoulders, because they would ask the Methodist preachers questions they did not like to answer. Some said they would not belong to a church whose doctrine they did not believe. I began to think where I stood, I thought perhaps they were giving me good advice. So I began to study about it. Br. McCullock came and preached for us again last summer, we were all glad to see him, and bear words of comfort and cheer from him and would be glad to see him again. He wrote to Br. S. K. Gibson about us. He came and preached for us last October, and is preaching for us yet. He is a real good preacher, we all like him well. I joined with them last October, I began to think it best to belong where I believed the doctrine. We meet with opposition, and some persecution, but the Scriptures tell us they that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. I tell them I am thankful if I am only worthy of persecution. I have great pleasure now with my children, have no trouble now to find their Bibles nor to get them to read them. It is nearly the first thing when they come, to get the Bible and read and talk on the Scriptures. Oh, what hath God wrought! Praise his name.

From A. F. Dugger, Clarmont Mo:

The third Sabbath in July we spent with the Brn. in Davis Co. Held a two day's meeting. We had a pleasant time visiting among the brethren and presenting present truth.

The fourth Sabbath spent with the church in Alanthus. In the a. m., and p. m., I spoke from the prophetic chart, showing that we stand upon the eve of the judgment, where we may expect the coming of Christ. Two were baptized. May they ever walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called.

Ringgold Co. Iowa, July 28. Commenced a meeting which lasted ten days. This was my first visit to this place, and the first time the Advent views were ever preached in this section. We put up with C. Humphreys, Elder of the Christian Church, whose kindness I shall never forget. He is a man of intelligence, and his orderly walk and holy conversation show him to be a Christian. At the close we organized a small church made up of a good reliable element. Eld. John Senatice, Christian minister, united with the organization. He is an old veteran in the cause of Christ, and will do the churches good, wherever he may labor. Also, Wm. H. Sullivan, a young man of erudition and learning, made a profession of religion and united with the church and is now traveling and preaching the word with great ability, rejoicing in the blessed hope of life and immortality through Christ alone. Before the close of the meeting he gave two lectures, one from the chart, and the other on the authenticity of the Scriptures. So you see he went right to work. May the Lord crown his labors with success, and send others into the field, should be the earnest prayer of every one who has the cause at heart, and earnestly desires to see the work of the Master prosper.

On my return I stopped in the town of Fairview, with Brn. S. C. B. and Enoch Williams, who are believers in the Advent views. Here I met Eld. W. P. Shockey, to whom I referred in my last letter, which he had seen and seemed somewhat displeased because I had written what I did. The elder preaches the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, and from what I can learn, the non-resurrection of a portion of the infant race. Neither does he believe in Church organizations. He is a detriment to the Advent cause in this Western country. I speak from experience, having traveled and preached in a number of fields where he has been, I can testify that I always find a strong current of prejudice which is quite difficult to overcome. O let us who profess to be followers of Christ be content with the plain teachings of his word, which declares that both classes shall come forth: the good to the resurrection of life, the evil to the resurrection of damnation. John 5: 28, 29.

From Virgil Hunt, Ancona. Ill. Aug. 4.

It is always with the greatest pleasure that I write to THE TIMES, and I must say that I love the cause of God's truth: truth is much better than error.

Last Sunday I heard a young Methodist minister say, "O what a glorious thought, that when our trials are ended here, we can go to heaven—we can fly off to glory." Well, it is not such a glorious thought after all, when we come to consider the matter; for it would prove to be eternal annihilation to him, just as sure as there is a God in heaven. Jesus has entered in there once for all. I always thought the annihilation of the Christian worse than the annihilation of the wicked, and they cannot tolerate that at all.

But it is only a thought, and Solomon says their thoughts shall perish. It is like the house built on the sand, when the storms of the last day come it will fall.

If we want a home that never will fade, let us secure the one the Bible tells of, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

From M J McDonald, Newark, Aug 25.

My heart feels to rejoice in the thought that Jesus will soon come. Oh! how I long for that day when he will come to receive us to himself, that where he is we may be also. Oh! what a blessed hope, how cheering to the Christian as he toils on from day to day. I feel sad when I look around and see so many rejecting this truth. They do not want to think of his coming. It seems very strange that any one professing to love Jesus cannot rejoice in his coming. Some say we believe he will come sometime, but they put it so far off it seems as though they hardly believe it. I do thank God that he inclined my heart to believe this great truth, and my prayer is that I may live faithful until the end, that I may meet all those of like precious faith when Jesus comes to set up his kingdom.

From L S Conner, Forest Bay, Mich. July 23.

I am happy to say to all the faithful ones in Christ that the Lord is at work here. We have witnessed much of his power.

We held a grove meeting on July 16, about one and a half miles west of Center Harbor, about six miles from this place. The services commenced at 10 a. m., with a congregation of about eighty, who paid good attention to the gospel spoken by Eld. W. J. Cummins, from Rom. 5: 11. At 2 p. m. he spoke to about 125 from Acts 23: 6, "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." This hour I spent with much happiness, and I trust there were many others who received rich blessings from God on high, while they listened with eagerness to his word.

At 6 p. m. he spoke at the residence of Br. Enggles, from Ps. 42: 11, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul; and why art thou disquited within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God." After the services we celebrated the Lord's supper. There were fourteen gathered around the table, to show forth his death till he comes again. After this we went on our way to our homes, feeling that the Lord had blessed us; and we are now looking forward to the covenant meeting, which I hope will be a profitable time.

Brethren, pray for us in this place, that we may always be found ready to meet the Lord in peace when he comes. We must keep ourselves unspotted from the world. May God help us to so live that we may have a right to the tree of life at his coming. Praise God.

From James Mann Troy N Y

I am an Adventist, because I love the word of God better than that of men. For ten years I was a Baptist; it was all the light I had, and I thought it was all the light there was. Now I feel very thankful to my heavenly Father for clearing away the mist, and helping me to see that he meant just what he said, and said just what he meant. The wages of sin is death, and Jesus came to give us life. He came once and paid the price of our sins, and is coming again to give us the life he purchased for us. I long for his coming, for I shall be clothed with immortality when I awake in his likeness.

I am glad there are men on the earth to-day that are willing to be despised and scoffed at for the sake of maintaining the honor of God's word. I find those who professed to love me in the church are very cold to me now, since I believe God's word rather than theirs, but none of these things trouble me. I love Jesus, because he first loved me. May God bless all that write through THE TIMES, and give wisdom to all that preach the word of God. Pray for me. Yours, in the hope of Jesus coming soon.

From Wm. A Hodgman, Aurora, Ill Aug. 13.

When I embraced this blessed doctrine of the Bible it was in '43, and I have been a pilgrim and stranger in a strange land, but still holding on to the truth.

Then I left the nominal church I was so persecuted by the Methodists I could not stay in it. But the King of kings can deliver even as he did Daniel in the lion's den.

Dear Brn. and Srs. I am glad there are so many who like Jesus' faith, scattered all over the land. Let us be faithful. Dear pilgrims, a few short months, or years, and the Master will come whose right it is to reign.

From Julia Shaw, Dayton O.

I am still trying to live for Jesus. He is my only hope. I am watching, hoping, and looking for the return of our blessed Redeemer. It makes me rejoice to read the letters from the dear Brn. and sisters of like precious faith. How good the Lord is! My prayer is that God will bless the Advent church and make them a holy people for himself. O that the Advent church would come up in her strength to the help of the Lord. O the time is short. Let us be faithful while time lasts. O how much I wish I could hear some one of the Brn. preach. But I must be content for a while. Pray for me that my trust may ever be in Jesus, that I, with you, may be saved in his kingdom. Bless the Lord O my soul. Praise his holy name.

From "A Subscriber." Aug 6.

We find advertised in THE TIMES the liberal offer to send it post-paid to any address in the United States or Canada on trial for three months for thirty-five cents. If each subscriber to THE TIMES would send two copies to their friends for three months each year, one quarter of the time there would be three papers in circulation instead of one, bearing the blessed truths of the Bible, spreading the good news of our coming Lord. We who love the Lord let us get others to love him too. We do not want to enjoy his blessings alone, if we have the spirit of Christ. And if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his. Let us see what James says about saving sinners from death. "Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins. (Jas. 5: 20). Can we expect to stand accepted before God in the great day of accounts by leaving others to struggle on alone in spreading the news of his coming kingdom. If we have faith in the soon coming of Christ, and are consistent Christians, we will show our faith by our works. "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead being alone" (Jas. 2: 17). How much better we will feel when Christ comes if we are working for him. I don't know how the publishers of THE TIMES can afford to send out their paper three months post-paid for thirty five cents. Let us help them by sending fifty cents for each paper, if we can. Let there be built up at Buchanan an Advent Christian Office that our Advent friends may well be proud of. We pray God to help us.

From Wm. B Schermerhorn. Schenectady, July 29.

Dear Br. Himes. Although you and myself are almost total strangers personally, yet I have great reason to bless the Lord that I ever became acquainted with the Advent views of the Bible, and the Advent cause of which father Miller and yourself were the leaders. To my personal knowledge I have spoken to you but once, and that was at the time of your tent meeting on Arbor Hill, at Albany, N. Y. These were glorious times, the way to the future state seemed to be new, and yet the word of God was the same; but, ah! there were no light-houses to show up the coast clear as they should. But, blessed be our Father in heaven, the true light now shineth, and it will shine unto the perfect day. Yes, it lights up to the very portals of the kingdom. Glory to God above. But from your pen, and the press; and through the Signs of the Times and the Advent Herald I have become well enough acquainted with you to know that you can row against wind and tide. This I think you have had your share of, and your case proves the fact that perseverence in God's cause will bring about the desired end, and in THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN TIMES we have the light that brings us to the point the Savior instructed Nicodemus in, the Spirit birth, the resurrection from the dead, the consummation of our hopes, the salvation of our souls. Hold on brother a little longer, endure unto the end; then Paul gets his crown, and you will receive yours too, when all the ransomed get home. Then we will sing the new song which we cannot sing here in this mortal state, then shall we shout victory over death and the grave. Blessed be Jesus, all praise to him.

I am most likely the only Adventist in this city, surrounded by all the popular mysticisms of the day; I am teaching a Bible class of about a dozen ladies and gentlemen. I teach the Bible as we find it, not as they view it, and it makes a stir among them, they can't get over the truth. Now Br. I want you to send me some tracts to aid me to drive away the fog and let the light shine. I gave one of the ladies THE TIMES to read and the next time I saw her I asked how she liked the paper, she said "It talked just like you, all Bible."

Scriptural Baptism.

DR. CHARLES ANTHON, a distinguished Episcopalian minister and scholar—a household name in America—has written a short letter to Dr. Parmley in regard to the meaning of baptize, as follows:

"My dear Sir: There is no authority whatever for the singular remark made by the Rev. Dr. Spring relative to the force of baptizo. The primary meaning of the word is to dip or immerse; and its secondary meanings, if it ever had any, all refer in some way or other to the same leading idea. Sprinkling, etc., are entirely out of the question."

Whitfield, Methodist: "It is certain that in the words of our text (Rom. 6: 3, 4) there is an illusion to the manner of baptism, which was by immersion."

Olshausen, Lutheran: "John baptized at Enon, because there was deep water there convenient for immersing."

Doddridge, Presbyterian: "And after Jesus was baptized, as soon as he ascended out of the water to the bank of the Jordan, etc." "And John also at that time was baptizing at Enon, near to Salim, a town on the west of the Jordan, and he particularly chose that place because there was a great quantity of water there, which made it convenient to his purpose. Nothing surely can be more evident than that polla hudata signifies a large quantity of water, it being sometimes used for the river Euphrates." "It would be very unnatural to suppose that Philip and the eunuch went down to the water merely that Philip might take a little water in his hand to pour on the eunuch. A person of his dignity no doubt had many vessels in his baggage on such a journey through so desert a country; a precaution absolutely necessary for travelers in those parts, and never omitted by them."

The Greek is essentially a living language. The modern Greeks mock to utter scorn the absurdity of supposing that it means to sprinkle or pour. This fact is unquestioned an unquestionable. Still we adduce one or two testimonies:

Prof. M. Stuart: "The mode of baptism by immersion the Oriental church has always continued to preserve down to the present time. The members of this church are accustomed to call the members of the western churches 'sprinkled Christians,' by way of ridicule and contempt. They maintain that baptizo can signify nothing but immerge, and that baptism by sprinkling is as great a solecism as immersion by sprinkling."

Dr. Knapp, Lutheran Professor in the University of Halle; "In the Greek church they still hold to immersion. It would have been better to have adhered generally to the ancient practice, even as Luther and Calvin allowed."

Basil the Great, a Greek, and Archbishop of Cæsarea, about A. D. 370. Preaching on a baptismal occasion, he says: "Buried with him in baptism. What then is the manner of the burial? And what the utility of the imitation? First, indeed, it is necessary that the following of the former life be broken off. But this is impossible for him who is not born again, according to the declaration of the Lord." "How then do we perform the descent into the state of the dead? Imitating the burial of Christ by baptism; for the bodies of the baptized are, as it were, buried in the water." "In three immersions and as many invocations, the great mystery of baptism is completed, that the emblem of death may be imaged forth."

Conybeare, a recent Episcopal writer of eminence; "This passage (Rom. 6; 4) cannot be understood except by remembering that the primitive mode of baptism was by immersion."

Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, Episcopalian, writes: "I do fully and unhesitatingly believe that no instance either of adult or infant baptism occurred during the first three centuries except by immersion, save only in the few cases of clinic baptism; and that to this practice all the incidental notices of Holy Scripture best conform." He believes that "God, in his wise providence, has permitted the rise of the various sects of Baptists for the purpose of ultimately restoring the primitive mode of baptism."

Venema: "It is without controversy, that baptism in the primitive church was administered by immersion into water, and not by sprinkling. The essential act of baptizing in the second century consisted not in sprinkling, but in immersion into water in the name of each person of the Trinity. Concerning immersion, the words and phrases that are used sufficiently testify, and that it was performed in a river, a pool or a fountain. To the essential rite of baptism in the third century pertained immersion and not aspersion, except in cases of necessity, and it was accounted a half-perfect baptism. Immersion in the fourth century was one of those acts that were considered as essential to baptism; nevertheless, aspersion was used in the last moments of life on such as were called clinics; and also where there was not a sufficiency of water."

Tent Meeting at Port Sanilac.

This meeting was continued for five weeks, and from first to last was a blessed success. We can safely say we have the good will and confidence of nearly the entire community, the only exception being Eld. G. M. Lyon and the few that adhere to him; he went so far as to forbid his church showing us any countenance. But we are happy to report that the devoted portion did not obey him. In happy contrast with the spirit manifested by Eld. Lyon, Eld. Burney, pastor of the Congregational church showed us much favor, inviting us to his home, attending and taking part in our meetings; and his amiable wife contributed much by her warm exhortations to the interest of the meeting. This is true also of several members of his church, may the dear Savior reward them for their kindness to us. One incident worthy of note, I will mention. Before we had been two weeks in the place, in our absence from the tent one afternoon, a messenger came for us to go with him to the tent; and what was our surprise to find from fifty to seventy-five persons present, with a table about forty feet long spread with the best in the market. We were politely waited on to the head of the table, and on turning over our plates Br. Mackey and I found about $18.00 under each of them. The sum of $40 was made up in all. No charge was made for the supper, all donating what they could. There was nothing done or said that we saw that any Christian could object to, so we thanked God and the donors for their generous aid and substantial sympathy. We organized a church of twenty-three members, mostly heads of families, and baptised fifteen. When all are gathered in who are in sympathy with us we shall have nearly forty.

The Brethren have hired the Good Templars Hall for regular meetings, and I am to preach for them once in two weeks. Br. Platts has given a site in a central place for a chapel, and the church have decided to build this fall; a lively interest is manifested in it by a majority in the village and vicinity. Port Sanilac is a pretty village, situated on the shore of lake Huron about 100 miles north of Detroit. Among the things we noted with pleasure the people are industrious. There are no Saloons and consequently no loafers. There is one first class Hotel, and it is due to Mr. H. Wright, the gentlemanly proprietor, to state in this public manner, that during our stay of several days we heard no profane language, and saw no man the worse of liquor; and when we asked him for our bill he informed us it was settled, (by himself and others.)

Br. Mackey, Hicks, and I have labored together in the unity of the Spirit and the dear Savior in whom we trust has made us a blessing to this dear people. To him be all the glory.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN PORTLAND ST.—An alarm from box 5 at twenty minutes past six o'clock last evening summoned the Fire Department to Portland Street, near Causeway. The roof of the brick school house occupied by the sisters of Notre Dame, on Lancaster Street, caught from the flying cinders, and the wood work around the windows was soon burning fiercely. The Babcock Extinguisher Brigade, which was early on the ground, took possession of the building and saved it from destruction. The stained glass windows in the rear of the chapel were totally destroyed, and also those of the school-room and upper story. The damage, estimated at about $1,000, was fully covered by insurance in the Franklin office in this city.—Boston Journal, July 7, 1871.

Advent Almanac and Year Book.

We purpose to issue early in December a work with the above title. The astronomical department will contain the usual tables and other information—full and reliable. Besides this, it will contain a record of the Advent Christian Conferences of North America, with the names and addresses of the ministry, and other statistics, so far as they can be obtained: with historical sketches of the Advent movement, in this and other lands, and much desirable information for every family of Adventists: and we trust no such family will do without it. The price will probably be 15 or 20c.

Book Notices, Etc.

THE Herald of Health, one of the finest health journals in the world, finds its way regularly to our table, where it is more than welcome. Wood and Holbrook, publishers, 13 Laight St., New York city. The next three months free to all who subscribe now for 1872. $2 a year.

By the way, we presume we should not have been left to "kick our heels" in the entry during our late call at their institution, while in New York, had either of the gentlemanly proprietors been at home. As it was our reception made even that warm day appear quite cool.

We have received the initial number of the Herald of Salvation—which adds one more to the Heralds of the cross through the agency of the press. It is conducted by Wm Kellaway. Of the quality of his pen our readers have had a taste and know that he is an able writer. The Herald is a magazine form, and contains sixteen pages. We wish it unbounded success. Price, $1 a year, published monthly. Address Wm Kellaway, Fairhaven, Mass.

We learn that Henry A. Sumner of 110 Dearborn St., Chicago, has just issued a new work by the author of The Plan of Salvation, entitled, "Poetry of Reason and Conscience. Immortality and worth of the Soul. Ten Sermons in the Life of a Lady of Fashion." By James S. Walker, 1 Vol. 12mo Tinted paper, Extra binding, $1.50. Sent by mail post paid on receipt of the price.

Mr. Walker is one of the ablest and most interesting writers. We have not yet seen this, his latest effort. If he has established the natural immortality of the soul, we shall be happy to acknowledge the fact.

prevent a collision, and plunging into the rear car, crushed and scattered about a third of it, setting fire to the rest. When the engine struck the rear car, the 'cap' of the former was torn off, and many were scalded to death who would otherwise have survived. The number of deaths are about thirty five; many more are injured—some of them so severely that they will probably die.

All the journals are discussing the Boston railroad accident, and are unanimous in the opinion that the case demands such investigation as will result in fixing the responsibility of the catastrophe, and visiting the guilty with the severest punishment of the law. The World says of the accident: "If this be not murder—murder most foul, most unnatural, most clamorous to God and man for justice—then it were as well to strike out at once from all legislation useless statutes which pretend to hedge with pity and with power the lives of innocent men."

DISASTER ON THE BURLINGTON & MISSOURI RAILROAD

It was rumored that an accident had occurred on the Burlington and Missouri railroad, at a point about halfway between Mt. Pleasant and Fairfield, for surgeons at the former place had been summoned by telegraph to attend the wounded. Toward evening five coffins were ordered at one of our undertakers, and then it became certain that five men had been either killed outright or had survived their injuries but a short time. We afterward learned that four had been killed on the spot, and that Conductor Erhart lived about two hours. It appears there was some effort made to hush the matter up.

HURRICANE AND EARTHQUAKE

On Aug. 21, another hurricane swept over the island of St. Thomas, overturning every house and laying the place in ruins. A gale broke from the east, shortly afterward shifting to the northeast, from which point it blew more fiercely until noon, when the wind veered round slowly to the north and fell upon the island in a terrible hurricane. It then shifted to the northwest and blew with great violence until 5 p. m. when there came a lull which lasted until 6 p. m. At this hour the hurricane again swept over the island from the south, but its duration was not so long as on the previous visit, nor was its violence as great. Its term of greatest fury lasted only two hours. Closely following in the wake of the hurricane came an awful gale from the south and southeast, which raged for several hours. During the hurricane in the afternoon several shocks of earthquake rendered more dreadful the situation of the people, who were hearing overhead the crash of roofs torn by the hurricane, and obliged to feel, at the same time, under foot, the foundations of their shelters shaken by the earthquake. Hundreds of dwellings have been swept away, and not a house has been left standing undamaged on the distressed island. Some 6,000 people have been left homeless and destitute, and nearly 150 [illegible] have been killed and mangled or dis[illegible] by houses blown down or bricks and tiles flying thickly all around during the hurricane. Already some thirty corpses have been dragged from under the ruins, which, in the shape of trees, fences, shattered houses, and heaps of bricks and tiles, strewn throughout the streets, offer a sight of perfect desolation. There are no casualties to report about the shipping here, with the exception of a British bark loaded with sugars and riding at anchor at the mouth of this harbor, which broke loose and went adrift toward the rocks in the channel, and, it is said, has become a total wreck. Two French steamers, recently arrived here, drifted about and got fast aground, but the English steamers Corsica, Tyne, and Della, as well as the American steamer Florida, at anchor here, weathered the storm handsomely, the latter, however, having to cut down her masts to save her. The island of St. Kitts is said to be in ruins, as it was caught first by the hurricane which has just passed over here.

ABROAD.

– – – Later advices confirm the report of a tripple alliance between Prussia, Austria and Italy. The Prussian Cross Gazette of Aug. 28, states that a second meeting of the emperors of Prussia and Austria has been arranged for Sept. 7, to be held at Salzburg. Germany and Austria are to assume a joint attitude, and Italy has unconditionally agreed to the same policy. The same news is confirmed by the New Free Press of Vienna.

– – – Great activity is shown by the Russian Government in perfecting her military organization. Prussia is also filling up her cadres and accumulating immense stores of provisions and other munitions of war. A war cloud is gathering which seems to envelope the whole of Europe in its folds.

Communism

A new danger menaces society, a new social problem must be solved. Capital and labor have become antagonists, and labor will not submit much longer to the domination of capital. The working men are banding together, not only in localities, or nations, but in a world-wide organization, for the purpose of ending the bondage under which they now suffer.

The capitalists, say they, are practically the law-makers, and the law interpreters; the Government, the magistrates, and the priests are practically their creatures. A thousand work-men toil, and one capitalist grows rich, he rolls in wealth, they rot in untimely graves, or the poor-house. They have determined to end this. The commune seems to be the chosen remedy. The social force shall be directed by workmen, in the interests of workmen; the State shall step in to neutralize competition, and restrain the abuse of capitol; the land shall be resumed by the State, and farmed on social, and not on proprietary right. In short the existence of capital, and the whole ordering of the lives of the community shall be subject to social authority.

Such is the faith which has seized the foremost minds of the workmen of Europe, and is quickly spreading both there and here. The Commune of Paris was but an out-break of it, called forth prematurely by circumstances, but showing what may be expected elsewhere when the organization is completed.

Says MR. RUSKIN.—The first reason for all wars and for the necessity of national defences is that the majority of persons, high and low, in all European nations, are thieves, and in their hearts greedy of their neighbor's goods, land, and fame. And the guilty thieves of Europe, the real sources of all deadly war in it, are the capitalists—that is to say, people who live by percentage, or the labor of others instead of by fair wages of their own. The real war in Europe, of which this fighting in Paris, is the inauguration, is between these and the workmen, such as these have made him. They have kept him poor, ignorant, and sinful, that they might without his knowledge, gather for themselves the produce of his toil. At last a dim insight into the fact of this dawns upon him; and such as they have made him, he meets them and will meet.—Letters to the Workmen and Laborers of Great Britain. By John Ruskin, LL. D.
